
The attendance has been increasing each week, the total enrollment being 134. Much interest is being manifested in the coming examinations, which begins Monday next. This is the first examination under the new law. The standard of qualification is somewhat raised and the examination of papers and issuance of certificates rests with the state department instead of the county superintendent as before, thus securing uniformity in standard throughout the state and giving a document valid in all parts of the state. The school this year will have closing exercises and a social time on Friday evening, to which all the friends of the school and the teachers are cordially invited.

A short musical program is being prepared, consisting of choruses, readings and solo quartette. The program will be somewhat informal and impromptu, and a better opportunity for teachers to get acquainted with those entered than in the regular daily sessions.

On Saturday forenoon at 10 o'clock will be held a public round-table discussion on the subject of child study.

It is hoped that parents from the city and any who are or ought to be interested in the correct training and understanding of the child will find it convenient to be present and take part in the conference. Below find a synopsis of the topics:

The Boy and Girl from Twelve to Eighteen—emphasis on the early part of the period.

PHYSICAL DEVELOPMENT.

This is the most important study since there is a much greater development in this direction than there is in intellect and will.

What difference have you noticed between the feelings of boys and girls and the feelings of children and adults? What kind of intellectual work should be attempted during the early part of their period? What difference should be made in the treatment of the adolescent because of conditions shown in part 1?

MONDAY'S HAIL STORM

The Storm Proves Pretty General Throughout the North-west.

FIRST REPORTS OVERDRAWN.

Although Considerable Damage Was Done Throughout This County.

Monday's hail storm gave the stringartists of the city papers from some of the local districts an excuse for adding considerable to their current checks and at the same time giving the district considerable unenviable advertising.

The storm moved a will-o-the-wisp to a great extent. The clouds and other visible indications were such as to lead one to expect the very worst, and indeed these expectations were realized in some small districts, but the damage was nowhere near the reports promulgated immediately after the storm passed.

In some places in the western portions of the county trees a mile square were swept almost clean while all round no damage to amount to anything was done. This shows that the hail was not general and at the same time gives some reason for the alarming reports.

A representative of the JOURNAL went out through the western part of the county Tuesday and found the conditions as before mentioned. Between this place and Fisher along the main roads the damage was hardly noticable immediately south and west of Fisher, and in the northwest portion of the country are the districts where most of the damage occurred. Reports of a high hail of half come in from all parts of the county, but it is safe to say that take the county as a whole and not more than ten or fifteen per cent of the crop is damaged.

THE BOTTOM FELL OUT.

Of a Well at Stephen and a Man Went With it.

Marshall County Leader: Harry Hurl, a farmer living five miles east of here, came to town and reported that Monday, while two of his hired men were digging a well on his farm, and had got down to the depth of 44 feet, the bottom suddenly fell in. One of the men was thrown into a whirl of water and disappeared, and has not been seen or heard of since. The other man, when he felt that the ground was giving away from under him, caught onto the rope that was used in hoisting the dirt up, and was drawn near the top, when he then got a rope and chain about 100 feet long, attached a weight to it and dropped it in this well. It did not touch bottom but was carried rapidly out, showing that a large body of water was underneath. A similar report of the above appeared in yesterday's Minneapolis Tribune. It has since been reported that the unfortunate man was found in Red River, which is 17 miles from the well where the accident is supposed to have occurred. This completes one of the best fish stories of the season. Take it for what its worth.

KICKING CONTAGIOUS.

The Red Lakers Don't Relish Paying For a Lost Game.

Tuesday morning County Attorney Van It. Brown served County Auditor Zeh with the notice of appeal from bills allowed by the county commissioners defraying expenses of the committee appointed by the commissioners to go to St. Paul during the session of the legislature this spring in the interest of the bill providing for a settlement between Polk and Red Lake counties.

The bills are: Theo. Garceau, $73.-95; K. M. Hansen, $127.37; O. A. Bengtson, $15 and $139.48; Dr. N. M. Watson, $126.

Mr. Brown gives as his reason for this action that the expenses incurred under the matter are not legally a county charge, and that he proposes to put a stop to this kind of things. It is a well known fact that certain members of the board and the ex-county attorney are at words points with Mr. Brown, and this is regarded as another turn in a game of tit-for-tat. It seems too that the matter is being pushed by a number of citizens in the northern part of the county, namely Ira C. Richardson, H. E. Mussell, O. P. Johnson, E. M. Evenson, H. Swanson and others, and the county attorney was petitioned by them to proceed.

The affair has occasioned considerable of a stir. Of course the county auditor can not base the orders now, and unless the appeal is withdrawn the court will have to decide.—Red Lake Falls Gazette.

GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS MAINTAIN A STRICT QUARANTINE

Over the Soldiers' Home at Hampton, Va., Seven Deaths From the Fever Have Occurred, All of the Soldier's Family—Summer Hotels in Nearby Towns Deserted and Practically All Business Is Suspended—Hamptonians With Winchesters Assist in Enforcing Regulations.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 1.—The latest official advices received show a total of 37 cases and 7 deaths from yellow fever at the soldiers' home at Hampton, Va. One new case occurred during the day.

Thus far the disease has been confined to the home, but all surrounding towns are excited and a vigorous quarantine is being maintained. Dr. Wasdin of the Marine hospital service is in charge at Hampton and is working in co-operation with the local board of health. He has strengthened the cordon about the town of Phoebus, which he reports in a bad sanitary condition. The fact that only one new case appeared during the day is here, who are taking every measure to prevent a spread of the disease. They feel that the fact that the infected territory is in the hands of the government and under one management will be of great value in dealing with the scourge and enable better measures to be taken than if it were in some commercial place."

Messages were received by Dr. Wyman from quarantine officers throughout the United States asking whether they shall impose a maritime quarantine against Norfolk. He has replied that there appears to be no necessity for such restricting in the case of Norfolk or Newport News.

GUARDING THE HOME.

Little Chance for Any of the Several Thousand Inmates to Escape.

HAMPTON, Va., Aug. 1.—This usually tranquil town has been in a state of excitement since the discovery of yellow fever at the soldiers' home. Scores of people have left the place. Sunday night a special train left Old Point with 900 guests of the hotels.

Business of Phoebus, adjoining the soldiers' home, is suspended. It is difficult to obtain information from the home. The entrance and all points from which escape is possible are guarded. Late in the afternoon a self-appointed guard of 15 Hamptonians with Winchesters went to the home to assist in enforcing the quarantine regulations. Chesapeake and Ohio trains have discontinued their service to the city.

OUTLOOK ENCOURAGING.

Three New Cases and One Death the Record at Hampton.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—Three new cases of yellow fever in the soldiers' home at Hampton and one death, is the official report received by Surgeon General Wyman from Dr. Wasdin, the yellow fever expert on duty at the institution. This makes to date 40 cases in all which have occurred at the home, of which 8 have proved fatal. Surgeon White telegraphed Dr. Wyman that in his opinion there was little doubt that there had been fewer yellow fevers in the neighboring village of Phoebus, but the surgeon general said that this dispatch had not been followed by any evidence of a positive case in the place. Should the fever develop there, however, no surprise will be felt in view of the proximity of the place to the soldiers' home and the mixing of the inmates of the institution with the people of Phoebus.

HAMPTON, Va., Aug. 2.—The most important development of the day in the yellow fever situation was the discovery of three cases in the town of Phoebus, adjoining the soldiers' home. Policeman Joseph Martin is one of the victims and the most remarkable feature of his case is the fact that he believed he had yellow jaundice. While walking about the streets he was seen by Surgeon White of the Marine hospital service, stationed at Hampton, who at once pronounced the disease yellow fever. Dr. White ordered Policeman Martin to return to his home, which was promptly quarantined. The other two victims are old soldiers who were found in a saloon. They were sent to the hospital at the home. There are the only cases that have been reported at Phoebus, although many rumors regarding the outbreak there have been in circulation. The report that two had died there is erroneous.

HITCHCOCK'S WARNING.

All Persons Found on Reservations to Be Severely Dealt With.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—Secretary Hitchcock has issued a formal warning to all persons not to go upon any of the lands within the limits of any of the Chippewa Indian reservations in Minnesota except upon the lands within the Red Lake reservation heretofore opened to settlement or offered for sale for any purpose or with any interest whatsoever. All persons found unlawfully upon them will be dealt with as actual trespassers and intruders. This notice is meant to at rest persistent reports that the whole country is to be opened to settlement.

REJECTED THE PROPOSAL.

JOHANNESBURG, Aug. 2.—It is stated that the volksraad, at the secret session held to consider President Kruger's proposal for the removal of religious disabilities which disqualified Jews and Catholics from the franchise, rejected the proposal.

It is reported that quantities of military supplies are arriving at Pietermaritzburg, capital of Natal, South Africa, daily.

TO ABOLISH THE KINGSHIP

Recommendations of the Samoan Commission.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 31.—The Call publishes the report of the tripartite commission sent to Samoa making various recommendations regarding the new form of government decided upon by them as most suitable for the islanders. The report is a document of 3,000 words and begins with a declaration of the neutrality of the islands of Samoa and an assurance to the respective citizens and subjects of the signatory powers equality of rights. It provides for the immediate restoration of peace and good order and to this end permanently abolishes the office of king and but creates a system of native government. Provision is made for the appointment of an administrator of Samoa to be appointed by the three signatory powers, or failing their agreement, by the king of Norway and Sweden. The administrator's salary will be $6,000 per annum and he is to execute all laws in force in the Samoan islands. He shall possess the pardoning power and make municipal appointments with the consent of the legislative council, the legislature power being vested in the administrator and the legislative council of three members, one being appointed by each of the three powers.

There is also to be a native assembly composed of the governors of different districts of the islands.

SIGNING PEACE COMPACTS.

Conference at The Hague Finally Concludes Its Labors.

THE HAGUE, July 31.—The peace congress adjourned Saturday after 16 states had signed the arbitration convention. 15 the other two conventions, 17 the declaration prohibiting the throwing of projectiles or explosives from balloons, 16 the declaration prohibiting the use of asphyxiating gas, and 15 the declaration prohibiting expansive bullets.

The morning was devoted to the signature of the final act, which was signed by all 26 powers present. Then followed the signing of the three conventions of arbitration, extension of the Geneva convention to maritime warfare, and, thirdly, laws and customs of war. These were signed, the first by 16 and the latter two by 15.

Portugal signed the first only. The United States and Mexico signed all the

The United States delegates signed the first subject to the declaration made as to the acceptance of the American traditional policy.

Ten powers abstained from signing the first, and eleven from the other two, but these signatures will undoubtedly be forthcoming later on.

OVER SEVEN HUNDRED.

List of Fatalities in the American Philippine Army to June 2.

SEATTLE, Wash., July 30.—The Times prints what purports to be a full list of fatalities in the American army in the Philippines up to June 2. The list was furnished to Fred F. Steele, a representative of the Manila Freedom, who claims to have obtained it from the surgeon general's office at Manila.

The total number of fatalities is 736—56 officers, 680 privates and 14 civilians attached to the army. A remarkable feature of the record is found in the statement that the number of officers killed in battle is out of all proportion to the number of privates killed. On the other hand fewer officers died from disease, proportionately, than privates.

REED IN CONGRESS.

Now Said the Man From Maine Will Serve His Term.

ST. PAUL, Aug. 1.—A dispatch Washington special says: Thomas Brackett Reed will occupy his seat in the house during the Fifty-sixth congress. An intimate friend of the late speaker has recently received a letter from him stating that he now proposed to serve out the term to which he was elected last November. He does not expect to be speaker, and if the place were offered him this fall he would not accept it.

By some it is feared that the ponderous Maine congressman has something up his sleeve, and the administration will have a fight on its hands to prevent Reed from defeating the expansion policy.

OPINION AT PRETORIA.

Inquiry Must Cover All Points Which Are at Issue.

PRETORIA, July 31.—State Secretary F. W. Reitz, in the course of an interview, said that if the inquiry proposed by the British government is to embrace all matters of dispute of late years between Great Britain and the Transvaal, including the convention of 1871, it might be accepted, but if the franchise only was to be considered the volksraad had passed on that, and further consideration of the question was tantamount to arbitrating through a convention, thus depriving the country of its independence.

ASSASSIN'S DEED.

President Heureaux of the Dominican Republic Murdered at Moca.

PORT DE FRANCE, Island of Martinique, July 27.—Ulysses Heureaux, president of the Dominican republic, was assassinated at Moca, Santo Domingo, at 4:30 p. m. The name of the murderer is Ramon Cisero. The succession is making his escape, but an energetic search was at once begun and it is probable that he will soon be captured.

Vice President Wenceslao Figuero, immediately upon the president's death, assumed direction of affairs.

Anarchy Might Intervene.

The newspapers say that in view of possible complications in Central America the Italian squadron has started from Buenos Ayres. There has been an interchange of views between the cabinets of the great powers with reference to the probability of an active war in Santo Domingo and the eventual intervention by the United States.

ALGER'S GOODBYE

THE RETIRING SECRETARY REPLIES TO CRITICISMS

Regarding Management of the War, Most of the Statement Confined to Appointments of Volunteer Officers—Few Were Named by Him—Holds the Different Governors Responsible for Any Mistakes in That Line—Charges Regarding Carelessness or Wrongful Use of Money Pronounced False.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 1.—One of the last official acts of Secretary Alger before relinquishing his portfolio was to prepare a statement covering several matters regarding the conduct of the war which have been the subject of criticism in the public press, particularly with reference to the appointment of staff officers in the volunteer army. After referring at some length to the small standing army at the time of the declaration of war and the immediate work accomplished in increasing the fighting force to 275,000 men, the secretary continues:

"From the criticisms referred to the public might be led to believe that the volunteer army was officered by men selected through political influence with the secretary of war, by special favor and for the duties they were to perform. As is well known the volunteer force, with the exception of three regiments of engineers, three regiments of cavalry and ten regiments of immune infantry, was made up of regiments from the various states, the officers of which were all appointed exclusively by the governors of the respective states from which the regiments came. The volunteer officers appointed by the president numbered, all told, 1,036. Of this number 103 were taken from the regular army and 501 from civil life. The scarcity of regimental officers in the regular service (holding appointments in the volunteers for the exercising and mustering details) had so reduced their number that to have taken a larger number for service with the volunteers would have

of the regular regiments. For a little over 2,000 appointments made by the president the number of applications was over 25,000, and each application was accompanied by a certificate of his ability, and, in most instances, the military service, either in the regular army or in some organization, and not infrequently in both. Of the number appointed there were, for instance, 26 major generals, of whom 19 were taken from the regular army and 7 from civil life. Of these seven all but three graduates of West Point military academy and all had distinguished themselves in command during the Civil war. Of brigadier generals there were 102 appointed, 66 from the regular army and 36 from civil life. Those from civil life had all seen service during the Civil war or on our Western frontier, and all had to command. It has been asserted and repeated many times that the secretary of war made these appointments, when the truth is that only few were made even upon his recommendation, although he caused the entire list, with the recommendations to be considered and placed before the president for his information. I would only have been too glad to have had the honor of making these appointments. No better or more loyal set of men ever served their country and their services were such as a credit to the appointing power, but to the country they proved, with few exceptions but that could not have been foreseen. In every walk of life men are found who accomplish every set task faetorily the work they have undertaken.

Regarding Expenditures.

"Criticisms as to the amounts and methods of expenditures, which would imply the wrong or careless use of money, were also made. This charge is false. So far as the conduct of the service was concerned no person with any knowledge of the facts can ever charge irregularity, and no one can ever show that a dollar was misappropriated, stolen or embezzled, out of the hundreds of millions of dollars which were expended.

"The records are no open book and I would be glad to have them rigidly examined and ask my successor to open these accounts to the country whenever a properly called for in order that the entire truth may be known."

AGAIN DRIVEN BACK.

Filipino Attempt to Retake Calumba Resulted Disastrously.

MANILA, Aug. 1.—6:30 p. m.—After concentrating their forces for two days, the Filipinos attacked Calumba, the town on Laguna de Bay captured by General Hall Wednesday. The engagement lasted an hour and the Filipinos were driven off, carrying away their dead and wounded. The American loss was two killed and seven wounded.

Hurrah! Hurrah! A soldier's life for me!
Shout, boys, shout, for it makes you jolly and free!

—The Ramrod Corps.

People who have seen state that one of the quaintest spectacles of human frailty is an outbreak of hysterics in a girls' school. It starts without warning; generally on a hot afternoon, among the elder pupils. A girl giggles till the giggle gets beyond control. Then she throws up her head and cries, "Honk, honk, honk!" like a wild goose, and tears mix with the laughter. If the mistress be wise, she will say something severe at this point to check matters. If she be tender hearted and send for a drink of water, the chances are largely in favor of another girl laughing at the afflicted one and herself collapsing. Thus the trouble spreads and may end in half of what answers to the lower sixth of a boys' school rocking and whooping together. Given a week of warm weather, two stately promenades per diem, a heavy mutton and rice meal in the middle of the day, a certain amount of nagging from the teachers and a few other things, some really amazing effects can be secured. At least this is what folk say who have had experience.

Now, the mother superior of a convent and the colonel of a British infantry regiment would be justly shocked at any comparison being made between their respective charges. But it is a fact that under certain circumstances Thomas in bulk can be worked up into dithering, rippling hysteria. He does not weep, but he shows his trouble unmistakably, and the consequences get into the newspapers, and all the good and virtuous people who hardly know a Martini from a Snider say, "Take away the brute's ammunition!"

Thomas isn't a brute, and his business, which is to look after the virtuous people, demands that he shall have his ammunition to his hand. He doesn't wear silk stockings, and he really ought to be supplied with a new adjective to help him to express his opinions, but, for all that, he is a great man. If you call him "the heroic defender of the national honor" one day and "a brutal and licentious soldiery" the next, you naturally bewilder him, and he looks upon you with suspicion. There is nobody to speak for Thomas except people who have theories to work off on him, and nobody understands Thomas except Thomas, and he does not know what is the matter with himself.

That is the prologue. This is the story.

Corporal Slane was engaged to be married to Miss Jhansi McKenna, whose history is well known in the regiment and elsewhere. He had secured his colonel's leave, and, being popular with the men, every arrangement had been made to give the wedding what Private Ortheris called "eeklar." It fell in the heart of the hot weather, and after the wedding Slane was going up to the hills with the bride. None the less, Slane's grievance was that the affair would be only a hired carriage wedding, and he felt that the "eeklar" of that was meager. Miss McKenna did not care so much. The sergeant's wife was helping her to make her wedding dress, and she was very busy. Slane was, just then, the only moderately contented man in barracks. All the rest were more or less miserable.

And they had so much to make them happy too! All their work was over at 8 in the morning, and for the rest of the day they could lie on their backs and smoke canteen plug and swear at the punkah coolies. They enjoyed a fine, full flesh meal in the middle of the day and then threw themselves down on their cots and sweated and slept till it was cool enough to go out with their "towny," whose vocabulary contained less than 600 words and the adjective and whose views on every conceivable question they had heard many months before.

There was the canteen, of course, and there was the temperance room with the secondhand papers in it, but a man of any profession cannot read for eight hours a day in a temperature of 96 or 98 degrees in the shade, running up sometimes to 103 degrees at midnight. Very few men, even though they get a pannikin of flat, stale, muddy beer and hide it under their cots, can continue drinking for six hours a day. One man tried, but he died, and nearly the whole regiment went to his funeral because it gave them something to do. It was too early for the modified excitement of fever or cholera. The men could only wait and wait and wait and watch the shadow of the barrack creeping across the blinding white dust. That was a gay life!

They lounged about cantonments—it was too hot for any sort of game and almost too hot for vice—and huddled themselves in the evening and filled themselves to distension with the healthy nitrogenous food provided for them, and the more they stoked the less exercise they took and more explosive they grew. Then the tempers began to wear away, and men fell a-brooding over insults real or imaginary. They had nothing else to think of. The tone of the "repartees" changed, and instead of saying light heartedly, "I'll knock your silly face in!" men grew laboriously polite and hinted that the cantonments were not big enough for themselves and their enemy, and that there would be more space for one of the two in a place which it is not polite to mention.

It may have been the devil who arranged the thing, but the fact of the case is that Losson had for a long time been worrying Simmons in an aimless way. It gave him occupation. The two men had their cots side by side and would sometimes spend a long afternoon swearing at each other, but Simmons was afraid of Losson and dared not challenge him to a fight. He thought over the words in the hot, still nights, and half the hate he felt toward Losson he vented on the wretched punkah cooly.

Losson bought a parrot in the bazaar and put it into a little cage and lowered the cage into the cool darkness of a well and sat on the well curb shouting bad language down to the parrot. He taught it to say, "Simmons, ye so-oor," which means swine, and several other things entirely unfit for publication. He was a big, gross man, and he shook like a jelly when the parrot caught the sentence correctly. Simmons, however, shook with rage, for all the room were laughing at him—the parrot was such a disreputable puff of green feathers and looked so human when it chattered. Losson used to sit swinging his fat legs on the side of the cot and ask the parrot what it thought of Simmons. The parrot would answer, "Simmons, ye so-oor." "Good boy," Losson used to say, scratching the parrot's head. "Ye 'ear that, Sim?" And Simmons used to turn over on his stomach and make answer: "I 'ear. Take 'eed you don't 'ear something one of these days."

In the restless nights, after he had been asleep all day, fits of blind rage came upon Simmons and held him till he trembled all over, while he thought in how many different ways he would slay Losson. Sometimes he would picture himself trampling the life out of the man with heavy ammunition boots, and at others smashing in his face with the butt, and at others jumping on his shoulders and dragging the head back till the neck bone cracked. Then his mouth would feel hot and fevered, and he would reach out for another sup of the beer in the pannikin.

But the fancy that came to him most frequently and staid with him longest was one connected with the great roll of fat under Losson's right ear. He noticed it first on a moonlight night, and thereafter it was always before his eyes. It was a fascinating roll of fat. A man could get his hand upon it and tear away one side of the neck, or he could place the muzzle of a rifle on it and blow away all the head in a flash. Losson had no right to be sleek and contented and well to do when he, Simmons, was the butt of the room. Some day, perhaps, he would show those who laughed at "Simmons, ye so-oor," joke that he was as good as the rest, and held a man's life in the crook of his forefinger. When Losson snored, Simmons hated him more bitterly than ever. Why should Losson be able to sleep when Simmons had to stay awake hour after hour, tossing and turning on the tapes, with the dull pain gnawing into his right side and his head throbbing and aching after canteen? He thought over this for many nights, and the world became unprofitable to him. He even blunted his naturally fine appetite with beer and tobacco, and all the while the parrot talked at and made a mock of him.

The heat continued and the tempers wore away more quickly than before. A sergeant's wife died of heat apoplexy in the night, and the rumor ran abroad that it was cholera. Men rejoiced openly, hoping that it would spread and send them into camp. But that was a false alarm.

It was late on a Tuesday evening, and the men were waiting in the deep double verandas for "last posts," when Simmons went to the box at the foot of his bed, took out his pipe and slammed the lid down with a bang that echoed through the deserted barrack like the crack of a rifle. Ordinarily speaking, the men would have taken no notice, but their nerves were fretted to fiddlestrings. They jumped up, and three or four clattered into the barrack room only to find Simmons kneeling by his box.

"Ow! It's you, is it?" they said and laughed foolishly. "We thought 'twas"—

Simmons rose slowly. If the accident had so shaken his fellows, what would not the reality do?

"You thought it was, did you? An what makes you think?" he said, lashing himself into madness as he went on. "To hell with your thinkin, you dirty spies!"

"Simmons, ye so-oor," chuckled the parrot in the veranda, sleepily recognizing a well known voice. And that was absolutely all.

The tension snapped. Simmons fell back on the arm rack deliberately—the men were at the far end of the room—and took out his rifle and packet of ammunition. "Don't go playing the goat, Sim!" said Losson. "Put it down." But there was a quaver in his voice. Another man stooped, slipped his boot and hurled it at Simmons' head. The prompt answer was a shot which, fired at random, found its billet in Losson's throat. Losson fell forward without a word, and the others scattered.

"You thought it was!" yelled Simmons. "You're drivin me to it! I tell you you're drivin me to it! Get up, Losson, an don't lie shammin there—you an your blasted parrit that druv me to it!"

But there was an unaffected reality about Losson's pose that showed Simmons what he had done. The men were still clamoring in the veranda. Simmons appropriated two more packets of ammunition and ran into the moonlight, muttering: "I'll make a night of it. Thirty roun's, an the last for myself. Take you that, you dogs!"

He dropped on one knee and fired into the brown of the men in the veranda, but the bullet flew high and landed in the brickwork with a vicious "phwit" that made some of the younger men turn pale. It is, as musketry theorists observe, one thing to fire and another to be fired at.

Then the instinct of the chase flared up. The news spread from barrack to barrack, and the men doubled out intent on the capture of Simmons, the wild beast, who was heading for the cavalry parade ground, stopping now and again to send back a shot and a curse in the direction of his pursuers.

"I'll learn you to spy on me!" he shouted. "I'll learn you to give me dorg's names! Come on, the 'ole lot of you! Colonel John Anthony Deever, C. B.!"—he turned toward the infantry mess and shook his rifle—"you think yourself the devil of a man, but I tell you that if you put your ugly old carcass outside of that door, I'll make you the poorest lookin man in the army. Come out, Colonel John Anthony Deever, C. B.! Come out an see me practiss on the rainge. I'm the crack shot of the 'ole bloomin battalion." In proof of which statement Simmons fired at the lighted windows of the messhouse.

"Private Simmons, E comp'ny, on the cavalry p'rade ground, sir, with 30 rounds," said a sergeant breathlessly to the colonel. "Shootin right an lef', sir. Shot Private Losson. What's to be done, sir?"

Colonel John Anthony Deever, C. B., sallied out, only to be saluted by a spurt of dust at his feet.

"Pull up!" said the second in command. "I don't want my step in that way, colonel. He's as dangerous as a mad dog."

"Shoot him like one, then," said the colonel bitterly, "if he won't take his chance. My regiment too! If it had been the Towheads, I could have understood."

Private Simmons had occupied a strong position near a well on the edge of the parade ground and was defying the regiment to come on. The regiment was not anxious to comply with the request, for there is small honor in being shot by a fellow private. Only Corporal Slane, rifle in hand, threw himself down on the ground and wormed his way toward the well.

"Don't shoot," said he to the men round him. "Like as not you'll 'it me. I'll catch the beggar livin."

Simmons ceased shouting for awhile, and the noise of trap wheels could be heard across the plain. Major Oldyne, commanding the horse battery, was coming back from a dinner in the civil lines; was driving after his usual custom—that is to say, as fast as the horse could go.

"A orf'cer! A bloomin spangled orf'cer!" shrieked Simmons. "I'll make a scarecrow of that orf'cer!" The trap stopped.

"What's this?" demanded the major of gunners. "You, there—drop your rifle!"

"Why, it's Jerry Blazes! I ain't got no quarrel with you, Jerry Blazes. Pass, frien', an all's well!"

But Jerry Blazes had not the faintest intention of passing a dangerous murderer. He was, as his adoring battery swore long and fervently, without knowledge of fear, and they were surely the best judges, for Jerry Blazes, it was notorious, had done his possible to kill a man each time the battery went out.

He walked toward Simmons with the intention of rushing him and knocking him down.

"Don't make me do it, sir," said Simmons. "I ain't got nothin ag'in you. Ah? You would?" The major broke into a run. "Take that, then!"

The major dropped with a bullet through his shoulder, and Simmons stood over him. He had lost the satisfaction of killing Losson in the desired way, but here was a helpless body to his hand. Should he slip in another cartridge and blow off the head or with the butt smash in the white face? He stopped to consider, and a cry went up from the far side of the parade ground, "He's killed Jerry Blazes!" But in the shelter of the well pillars Simmons was safe, except when he stepped out to fire. "I'll blow your 'andsome 'ead off, Jerry Blazes," said Simmons reflectively. "Six an three is nine an one is ten, an that leaves me another 19 an one for myself." He tugged at the string of the second packet of ammunition. Corporal Slane crawled out of the shadow of a bank into the moonlight.

"I see you!" said Simmons. "Come a bit furder on, an I'll do for you."

"I'm comin," said Corporal Slane briefly. "You done a bad day's work, Sim. Come out 'ere an come back with me."

"Come to"— laughed Simmons, sending a cartridge home with his thumb. "Not before I've settled you an Jerry Blazes."

The corporal was lying at full length in the dust of the parade ground, a rifle under him. Some of the less cautious men in the distance shouted: "Shoot 'im! Shoot 'im, Slane!"

"You move 'and or foot, Slane," said Simmons, "an I'll kick Jerry Blazes' 'ead in an shoot you after."

"I ain't movin," said the corporal, raising his head. "You daren't 'it a man on 'is legs. Let go of Jerry Blazes an come out of that with your fistes. Come an 'it me. You daren't, you bloomin dog shooter!"

"I dare!"

"You lie, you man sticker! You sneakin, sheeny butcher, you lie! See there!" Slane kicked the rifle away and stood up in the peril of his life. "Come on now!"

The temptation was more than Simmons could resist, for the corporal in his white clothes offered a perfect mark.

"Don't misname me!" shouted Simmons, firing as he spoke. The shot missed, and the shooter, blind with rage, threw his rifle down and rushed at Slane from the protection of the well. Within striking distance, he kicked savagely at Slane's stomach, but the weedy corporal knew something of Simmons' weakness, and knew, too, the deadly guard for that kick. Bowing forward and drawing up his right leg till the heel of the right foot was set some three inches above the inside of the left kneecap, he met the blow standing on one leg—exactly as Gonds stand when they meditate—and ready for the fall that would follow. There was an oath, the corporal fell over to his own left as shin bone met shin bone, and the private collapsed, his leg broken an inch above the ankle.

"Pity you don't know that guard, Sim," said Slane, spitting out the dust as he rose. Then, raising his voice: "Come an take him orf! I've bruk 'is leg." This was not strictly true, for the private had accomplished his own downfall, since it is the special merit of that leg guard that the harder the kick the greater the kicker's discomfiture.

Slane walked to Jerry Blazes and hung over him with exaggerated solicitude, while Simmons, weeping with pain, was carried away. "Ope you ain't 'urt badly, sir," said Slane. The major had fainted, and there was an ugly, ragged hole through the top of his arm. Slane knelt down and murmured: "S'elp me, I believe 'e's dead! Well, if that ain't my bloomin luck all over!"

But the major was destined to lead his battery afield for many a long day with unshaken nerve. He was removed and nursed and petted into convalescence, while the battery discussed the wisdom of capturing Simmons and blowing him from a gun. They idolized their major, and his reappearance on parade resulted in a scene nowhere provided for in the army regulations.

Great, too, was the glory that fell to Slane's share. The gunners would have made him drunk thrice a day for at least a fortnight. Even the colonel of his own regiment complimented him upon his coolness and the local paper called him a hero—which things did not puff him up. When the major proffered him money and thanks, the virtuous corporal took the one and put aside the other. But he had a request to make and prefaced it with many a "Beg y' pardon, sir." Could the major see his way to letting the Slane-McKenna wedding be adorned by the presence of four battery horses to pull a hired barouche? The major could, and so could the battery—excessively so. It was a gorgeous wedding.

* * * * * * *

"Wot did I do it for?" said Corporal Slane. "For the 'orses, of course. Jhansi ain't a beauty to look at, but I wasn't goin to 'ave a hired turnout. Jerry Blazes? If I 'adn't 'a' wanted somethin, Sim might ha' blowed Jerry Blazes' bloomin 'ead into Hirish stew for aught I'd 'a' cared."

And they hanged Private Simmons—hanged him as high as Haman, in hollow square of the regiment, and the colonel said it was drink, and the chaplain was sure it was the devil, and Simmons fancied it was both, but he didn't know, and only hoped his fate would be a warning to his companions, and half a dozen "intelligent publicists" wrote six beautiful leading articles on "The Prevalence of Crime In the Army."

But not a soul thought of comparing the "bloody minded Simmons" to the squawking, gaping schoolgirl with which this story opens.

That would have been too absurd!

When Dolly Is Ill.

An odd branch of doll service is tending the pet in sickness. Dolls appear to be subject to all the complaints of their young nurses. They are physicked, too, by the familiar nursery methods.

The realistic impulse to detect something like the "poorly" look in the doll is illustrated by the diagnosis of leprosy in the case of a doll from whom "the paint was flecking off." If all the paint comes off and the doll takes on a pitiful pallor, there is a fine opportunity for the child's healing art. In one instance the appearance of measles was induced by the help of a red lead pencil. In another instance, when a doll was convalescent after fever, the "pretense" was supported by deliberately pulling out the hair. Fractures of limb or skull and slighter injuries leading to loss of the vital sustaining sawdust have, of course, to be treated surgically.

Doll surgery, however, to judge by the number of maimed and deformed figures which are to be found in doll land, would seem to be by no means universal among children.—Professor Sully in Contemporary Review.

Machine and Rapid Fire Guns.

Machine guns are mechanically loaded with fixed ammunition and the cartridges are exploded and extracted by arrangements that enable a number of rounds to be fired in rapid succession by one man. The ordinary machine gun of the Maxim or Nordenfeldt type can fire from 300 to 700 rounds a minute of infantry ammunition, but for naval and fortress purposes a heavier type is made to discharge projectiles not exceeding 14 ounces in weight.

The term "quick firing" is applied to artillery weapons of all sizes which are so constructed and mounted that they can be loaded, sighted and fired more rapidly than in the case of an ordinary gun. Unlike machine guns, they are loaded by hand, but possess in common the characteristic of little or no recoil. All newly constructed guns are of a quick firing type, and the term will before long become obsolete. By the most recent arrangements for rapidity of loading and absorption of recoil the destructive power of artillery has been more than doubled.

Slavery Is Not Yet Extinct.

It is generally supposed that slavery no longer exists in the United States of America, but by those who make a close study of such matters this will be promptly recognized as a very great mistake. In San Francisco alone there are said to be 600 Chinese women who are, so far as they know to the contrary, the property of their masters.

In Brooklyn quite recently a rather attractive young woman was sold to a Chinese laundryman for $600. The remarkable phase of the Chinese slavery which prevails in this country is that the victims do not seem to realize the abjectness of their condition and would very much prefer to remain here as they are than return to their native land and its daily grind for food, with the result of each day's efforts constantly in doubt.—Providence Telegram.

We positively refuse to believe that a Duluth man would decline anything. The idea of a Duluth man and a democrat at that, declining an office, is too ridiculous to think of for a moment.

Marshall County Leader (Stephen): Dr. Smith came up from Crookston Monday with the avowed intention of removing the old drug store building off the corner. Ed. Russell was on hand, however, and with his usual eye for business, made the Dr. a cash offer for the building and it was knocked down to him. Ed. will move the same onto the east side. Well, let 'er go, it has seen good service.

Brainerd Tribune: The new machinery for the prison twine plant will arrive in September and the capacity of the plant will be doubled. This is the result of good business judgment on the part of the last republican legislature and a desire to make the institution more self-supporting—most of the twine trust. The farmers will no doubt appreciate this and when the proper time comes show their appreciation.

Faribault Republican: A new linseed oil company has been organized to construct a mill in Minneapolis, with a capital of $400,000, most of which is said to be held in that city. The new mill is to be erected at once, and will be completed by the 1st of October. There will be but one larger plant in the United States, and it will have a capacity one-fourth that of the active mills of the trust. It will consume annually from 2,600,000 to 3,000,000 bushels of seed.

Hutchinson Times: The publisher of the Alanda Herald recently sued a delinquent subscriber and recovered judgment for seven years' subscription and costs that amounted to $20. The paper has been ordered stopped and returned from the postoffice as "refused," but the arrearages and his name continued on the books and the paper was regularly mailed to his address. The decision of the court was, a subscriber could be held for subscription until arrearages were paid

The North Dakota boys in the Philippines will leave on the Grant Sunday for home. The boys are all anxious to reach home and will be met in the west by many of their friends. They will arrive at San Francisco some time during the latter part of August and it will probably be two or three weeks latter before they arrive within the borders of our neighborstate. They will be held in quarantine for nine days and the remaining portion of the time will be consumed in the mustering out of the troops.

POLK COUNTY WILL EXHIBIT.

Our County Will be Represented at the Great State Fair Next Month.

A meeting of representative citizens met in the Commercial room, at city hall, Crookston, on 27th inst., at request of Mr. N. S. Gordon, the superintendent of the agricultural department of the state fair, and appointed a committee of our citizens who called upon the county commissioners and asked that body to appropriate the sum of $600 toward making an exhibit of our agricultural resources at the coming state fair, in the interest of Polk county. That body having adjourned until late in September without taking any action in the matter, and the time being short for making arrangements, Mr. George Purvis has been prevailed upon, and has agreed to take hold of the matter, and will make an exhibit that will be a credit to our county.

It is important that all interested in the welfare of the county assist Mr. Purvis in this work by bringing in any choice sample of grain, grasses, or vegetables, with the name of the grower attached to each article. These samples may be left with Mr. Purvis, or at the JOURNAL office, with Mr. Gordon, superintendent of the agricultural department at the state fair.

An important feature in preparing the exhibit is that the larger the number of varieties and the more completely our county represents ALL the products of our section the greater chance we will have not only in attracting the attention of homeseekers, but in taking the highest prize, for the judging takes into consideration the number of different kinds of products as well as the individual excellence and tasteful arrangement of the same.

The expense of this exhibit will be borne by Mr. Purvis, and should the exhibit be successful in winning a prize or prizes, the amount will partially reimburse him for his outlay. With the hearty cooperation of our citizens Polk county can easily win the first premium. Let every one help a little and, the burden will not fall heavily on any, and Polk county will be sure to win the blue ribbon, and give prominence to its products and present to visitors at the state fair the unlimited agricultural resources and attractions of this district in a most imposing and impressive, and thus advertize the county throughout the length and breath of the country. Let us all rally to the call.

Literary Notes.

In the August Forum, Hon. Thomas S. Harrison, United States agent and consul-general in Egypt, pays a high tribute to Lord Cromer's administration in Egypt: Prof. Edwin H. Hall of Harvard shows what liquid air cannot do; Prof. Mary Roberts Smith writes of "Domestic Service: the Responsibility of Employers;" Mr. Leopold Gmelin gives a German's views of American architecture; Ralston P. Palmer asks "Have we Sufficient Gold in Circulation?" and Mr. Lawrence J. Burpee discusses "Recent Canadian Fiction."

A popular feature of Elizabeth Stuart Phelps's writings is the happy blending of lively humor and tender pathos which always characterizes and illuminates them. These qualities were perhaps never more in evidence than in her latest and most touching story, "Loveliness," which appears in August Atlantic. But the element which will attract the widest attention to the story will still be forth the living discussion over it, is itsunspoken and trenchant attack upon the practice of vivisection and the methods of the vivisecters.

The North American Review for August is remarkable for the number and diversity of subjects of present interest which are represented in its pages. Some of the most imporant events and movements of the time are discussed in it by those who are closely associated with them: and, at the same time, as befits a magazine intended for summer reading, it contains several brightly-written articles of an entertaining character on literary, dramatic, artistic and athletic themes. The Countess of Aberdeen, who presided over the "Woman's International Parliament," held last month in London, gives an account of the work accomplished by the convention, and explains the objects aimed at by the Confederation of National Councils of Women. In the most comprehensive paper that has yet been written on the consequences likely to flow from the new relations between the United States and the far east, Mr. John Barrett, formerly American Minister to Siam, shows that the United States is destined to be "The Paramount Power of the Pacific."

SET ASIDE AS FRAUDULENT.

A Heartless Son Tries to Rob His Aged Father of His Home.

The Thirteen Towns: Judge Watts today rendered a decision in the case of John Johnson vs. Albert Johnson and John G. Gerstner, which is of importance to the town of Godfrey. The case was tried at the last term of court held there, and was brought at the instance of the above named town by its constable John Johnson, who being 70 years old, was persuaded to convey to deed his farm of 160 acres to his son Albert, upon the understanding that the use of it was to be the price of his keep as long as he lived, the title to pass after his death. The old man couldn't read, and later discovered that the paper he had signed was a warranty deed, and the land was later transferred by the son to his brother-in-law Gerstner, and the town was compelled to care for the old man Johnson. By the decision of Judge Watts the transfers are set aside as fraudulently obtained, and the title once more rests in the old man Johnson.

A MODEL GROCERY.

Fontaine & Anglim's Grocery Department a Model of its Kind.

In the matter of progress and up-to-dateness, the firm of Fontaine & Anglim are among the leaders. They are always on the lookout for that which puts them in the front rank as merchant and their latest move in this direction is their grocery department, which has been fitted up in a manner that makes it one of the most attractive places of the kind we have ever had the pleasure of visiting, and we use the word pleasure advisedly, for one can hardly believe but what they are attending a fancy exhibition while looking at the fine displays that meet the eye at every turn. The magnificent fixtures are so arranged that everything is shown off to the best possible effect, and the electric fans set in the ceiling give the place the temperature of a pleasant promenade

KITTSON COUNTY FAIR.

Their First Fair is Well Attended And Highly Successful.

The first county fair of the Kittson County Agricultural Society was held at Hallock, the county seat of that county, the first three days of this week. The fair was very successful, both in point of exhibits and attendance. In company with Hon. John Cooper, president of the State Agricultural Society, the writer attended the last day. We were told that the splendid location where the fair was held was used by the city as a dumping ground until about four weeks ago. The grounds consist of about thirty acres of land, and in the short space of three weeks have been cleaned, a high board fence built around the entire tract, a commodious agricultural hall has been built which contained, considering the very short time for preparation and he early season, a creditable display, of the agriculturalie sources of the county. Several box stalls and temporary sheds furnish ed protection for the stock exhibits. In the cohort horn exhibits we noticed as fine individuals as can be shown anywhere in the state. A regulation half mile race track was in splendid condition, and the new grand stand has a seating capacity of 750, and contains officers headquarters in the rear. The amusement program for the afternoon we were there consisted of a ball game between Hallock and in addition to the usual racing program—

The officers are, T. M. George, president; A. M. Eckland, secretary, and W. F. Kelso, C. J. Mcbeollum, Thomas Harborn, John Ross and Fred McKenzie, Jr., directors. These are all wide-awake hustlers as they have shown by the preparation of grounds, erection of new buildings and the holding of so creditable a fair in the short space of three weeks time. Next year we shall expect to attend one of the best fairs in Northern Minnesota at Hallock. These annual fairs are object lessons of our great practical value.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

ABSOLUTELY PURE

Makes the food more delicious and wholesome

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

Grandmother's Cold Cream Jar.

A writer in the Germantown Telegraph declares that our grandmothers excelled us in dainty trifles. One of the prettiest ornaments on the dresser was an egg. At first sight it looked exactly like an egg from the pantry, for the shell was unpainted; only as one looked at it, she saw that one end was broken. This eggshell was used as a cold cream jar. When making cold cream, our grandmothers would pour it into an empty shell which had been carefully prepared. After the egg was taken out the shell was washed and sweetened with perfumery, with a few drops left in the bottom. The cold cream was poured in and left to harden. The result was an eggshell full of lovely white cosmetic.

Love of Perfumes.

Perfumes, though still extensively used, are by no means so popular as in ancient times. The orientals, especially, made the freest use of them. Rooms were fumigated with vapors of burning resins, the body was anointed with aromatic qualities mixed with some plant, and scents were worn about the person in gold and silver boxes. Beds, other articles of furniture and garments were perfumed with myrrh, aloes and cinnamon. When entertainments were given, a servant anointed the head of each guest as he seated himself and sprinkled his person with rosewater. The Talmud directs the proportioning of a tenth part of the bride's dowry for purchase of perfumes.

—A two inch plank sidewalk is being laid on the east side Ashstreet, between 4th and 5th streets. Also between 5th and 6th, on the west side of Ash street.

—N. Rolfstad returned Saturday morning from a trip to Brainerd, where he spent a week mingling business with pleasure. He formerly resided at Brainerd.

—Charles Solberg has purchased the old office of the Stewart Lumber Co., and moved it to his lot on Central avenue, just west of the Northern Pacific tracks. He will build an addition 12x20.

—J. A. Wyland is having the brick foundation built for his fine, large, new residence, to be built in the northeast part of the city, across the Northern Pacific tracks. The dimensions are 26x42, two story.

—C. A. Myers, who is in the fruit and confectionery business on 1st Ave. north, in South Crookston, has nearly completed his new store building on Main street over there, and will remove to the same about Aug. 15.

—F. R. Youngren, of St. Paul, arrived in the city Saturday and Monday morning took charge of N. Rolfstad's music store and will also teach mandolin. He has for several years been in the newspaper business, but owing to ill health he has dropped that line of work.

—The Northern Pacific people are filling in the north end of the approach to the long bridge in this city. The filling is taken from the cut at the viaduct just north of the station and it is quite an interesting sight to see the team of horses pull the string of ten small cars back and forth on the dinkumbter track.

—J. P. Marcum is erecting a large residence on North Broadway. The dimensions are, main part, 32x36, with lean-to 14x22. A porch will be built on the east and front sides. The tower is to be eight feet square and twenty-six feet high. It will contain ten rooms. This commodious residence is directly west of the court house.

—The wheel that was routed to H. Thompson the 8th of July was recovered last Friday. The thief, when he routed the wheel, claimed he only wanted to go to the brick works, and instead went to Tilden, sold the wheel for $6 and his dinner, and went to Duluth. This farmer sent the wheel to his brother, who lives in this city, and one day when it was brought in to be pumped up it was recognized and kept.

—Charles Westerberg now has considerable more room in his Scandia Hotel, since the addition has been completed, giving him about double his former capacity.

—Erikson & Vannet, who have been preparing to leave with their hardware stock for Fertile, left today for their new place of business. A new furniture store will be started at the old stand here.

—Mrs. Klewel was among the number to take in the excursion to Red Lake Falls and witnessed the game of ball between Thief River Falls and Red Lake Falls. The score was 4 to 5, in favor of the latter.

—The Thirteen Towns Fair Association will hold its eight annual exhibition at Fosston, Sept. 13, 14 and 15. This, we understand, is the only regular fair association in the county, and it should receive the hearty co-operation and patronage of every citizen of Polk county.

—The Norman county fair, held at Ada, opens today, and will continue tomorrow and Saturday. The association is presenting an attractive program and should have a good attendance. Prof. Hoversland, of the experimental farm will be present the two last days and give them a talk on agricultural matters.

—The body of young Joseph Lefebvre who was drowned in the Red Lake river near Gentlly, last week, was found. The body had lodged on some drift wood in the river and was accidentally discovered by Mr. Van Orin. Deputy Coroner Chesterman went out and after satisfying himself that the body was that of the young man, turned it over to the relatives. The funeral took place at Gentlly on Sunday, July 30.

—Ed. Walsh's new home in the north part of the city, is nearing completion and when finished will be one of the finest residences in the Northwest. It contains ten rooms, including bath room, with additional space for rooms in the commodious attic. There is a large basement beneath the house, containing a furnace and cistern. A veranda is built on the north, south and east. A fine staff adorns the roof. The residence, which has a hard wood finish throughout the interior, and other modern conveniences, will have electric lights, and cost about $4,000.

—Call on S. L. Collins for your binding twine.

—The Kittson county fair held at Hallock closed yesterday.

—S. L. Collins has a car load of binding twine, and the prices right.

—Mrs. Bludow of Grand Forks is the guest of the family of C. D. Billings this week.

—Mr. and Mrs. Sundberg spent Sunday at the home of Mrs. Sandberg's parents at Wiley.

—Miss Minny Westerberg returned last week from Warren, where she has been visiting relatives.

—Attorney F. C. Massey, of East Grand Forks, was a pleasant caller at this office one day last week.

—A. J. Anderson will shortly move his stock of groceries into the building now occupied by John Carlson, on Fletcher street.

—Phillip Gray and family of Cold Springs, Minn., arrived in the city the first of the week for a visit with John Klewel and family.

—Prof. Riggs' mother and sister left Monday evening for their home in Joy, Illinois, after a month's visit in this city with the professor.

—Grand Forks now has a full fledged Golf Club with a membership of twenty-two. The name chosen for the club is "Wahkhkum."

—The ladies of the Congregational church will give an ice cream social at the church parlors this evening. A short musical programme will be carried out.

—At the rectory of Christ's Church on Monday afternoon occured the marriage of Peng L. Goble of Argyle and Miss W. Ione Parriott of Buchanan, Michigan.

—John Carlson is getting things in shape to move his grocery into the corner room of the JOURNAL block. He will add considerably to his present stock and reach out for a larger circle of customers.

—Editor Knuppen of the Peoples' Press is now trying his hand at town booming. He sells his town Turtle River. The place is in the pine country and bids fair to amount to something in the uncertain future. It has a newspaper, of course, called the Pine Tree.

—The order of the Eastern Star initiated a class of five last Tuesday evening. The manner in which the ladies conducted the exercises called forth much praise and a thorough good time was enjoyed. Refreshments were served at the close of the work.

—George Combs, an Indian, has become civilized enough to try his hand at burglary, and swiped eleven dollars from a boarding house in South Crookston Monday. He was arrested and placed in the county jail where he awaits his examination which takes place Saturday.

—"It's an ill wind that blows no one any good." The plate glass window in the north room of the post office that has been threatening to puncture the cranium of some unfortunate pedestrian was blown in by the storm of Monday evening and will now be replaced by a new one.

—Arthur Landet, of Brooks, Red Lake county, who has been attending the summer school, returned home last Saturday. He was obliged to miss the last week of the summer school in order to take charge of his school at Brooks, which commenced Monday.

—Prairie chickens will be plentiful this fall. The season has been very favorable for these game birds, as the frequent rains made the growth of grass and weeds so abundant that the chickens were protected during the hatching period from hawks and other birds which are accustomed to prey upon the young chickens before they leave their nest.

—Rev. Henry C. Simmons, D. D., president of Fargo College, preached at the Congregational church last Sunday. He gave us some excellent thoughts on what is meant by a practical education. His idea being that whatever prepares us for life work and lays a foundation for our best efforts is far more practical than the exercise of the brain which puts a piece of leather into a machine and leaves the result with the machine. Education is power to do acquired by the development of head and heart as well as hand. Fargo College aims to give its students every advantage of a Christian institution and its able corps of instructors are doing their work well. To us of the Red River Valley it should be a matter of personal pride to support and sustain our home college.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

By local application, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces. We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

WHY YELLOW JACK WON

BY ALFRED STODDART.

[Copyright, 1899, by Alfred Stoddart.]

Dick Deerfield and I were both in the graduating class at Harvard that year, and, fond as I am of horses and country life, I gladly accepted Dick's urgent invitation to go down and spend Easter with him at his home in Kentucky. Old Mr. Deerfield was as fine a type of the old fashioned Kentucky gentleman as you would find anywhere, a good sportsman and a capital judge of a horse. In fact, the only weaknesses the old gentleman had were his generosity and utter lack of financial ability. As you know, this was the direct cause of his downfall, and, although Dick did not know it, poor old Deerfield had a hard row to hoe during Dick's last year at college, and Dick and I had not fairly settled down to the enjoyment of our fun with the horses when the blow descended. I was sorry to be a guest at the time, but glad and proud, too, to witness the brave spirit with which that good old man told his only son that the old home, the horses, everything, would have to be sold, that they were poor instead of rich and that Dick would have to earn his own way.

It was late in the afternoon of a beautiful early spring day and we were all sitting on the porch of the old Deerfield house—that is, Dick, his father and myself. When he finished telling Dick about it all, I wanted to go away, but he wouldn't let me. Dick got up and grasped the old gentleman by the hand. Then he sat down again, and nobody said a word. We all sat there gazing over the trim, well kept lawn to the fields beyond, where the dark "blue grass" waved in the soft light of the waning day. Here and there in the fields were little groups of horses, and my heart ached as I saw that father and son were both looking at the things they loved best on earth and which fate had commanded them to part with—their beloved horses and their homes.

The next morning at breakfast we were startled by the sudden and unceremonious entrance of old Uncle Nat, Mr. Deerfield's faithful colored stud groom.

"Marse Richard!" he cried excitedly, addressing Mr. Deerfield as he always had in slave times. "Oh, Marse Richard! Come to de barn. Dorothy mare done drapped the fines' colt yo' eber laid eyes on."

HE CAME THROUGH LIKE A WHIRLWIND.

We left our breakfast untasted and hurried to the barn. Uncle Nat had not exaggerated. The clear eyed chestnut foal which stood on his rather uncertain legs in the box beside his famous dam, eying us with unconcealed wonderment, was certainly a beauty.

"By George, Dick," cried the old gentleman enthusiastically, "he will bring us in something at any rate! By Iroquois, full brother to Dorrit and Dorchester, he ought to bring a cool $20,000 as a yearling, for I fear they will all have to go next spring."

"What's dat yo say, Marse Richard?" cried Uncle Nat, who had pricked up his ears, having been somewhat suspicious of the real state of affairs.

"I fear I shall have to sell out, Nat," replied Mr. Deerfield, sadly. "However, it won't be till next spring anyhow."

"By Jove," cried Dick, who had been gazing at the colt, "but he looks terribly like the Marjory colt!"

And so he did. Both were chestnuts, both had white stars, and the near fore leg of each was white half way up to the knee. We remarked these points as we looked at the Marjory colt, who had been dropped a few days previous. I noticed that the Dorothy colt had a small, peculiar mark of white on his near fore leg about the size of a half dollar, which was partially detached from the rest of the white.

"Does yo' r'ally think yo'll have to sell out, Marse Richard?" asked Uncle Nat anxiously as we emerged from the barn.

"Yes, Nat, I'm afraid there's no hope," returned the old gentleman. "Don't worry, though. I'll take care of you."

"Does yo' think it's dat I'm feared of?" asked the old darky reproachfully.

"No, no, Nat, of course I don't. But don't worry"—

"I am glad," continued Mr. Deerfield as we made our way back to the house, "that all my mares are nominated for the Futurity of 189—."

Well, I returned to Harvard on the following day, and Dick Deerfield went with me to pack up his things, as he was determined to leave college. We had not been back two days before he was telegraphed for and hurried home to his father's deathbed. Poor old chap! It was pretty rough to die as he did, feeling that his home and the horses he loved so well would have to pass away from his son, for Dick was the apple of the old man's eye. I only heard from Dick occasionally after that. He was as busy as he could be straightening out affairs, looking after the horses and doing his very level best to keep the old home out of the sheriff's hands. He wrote me that things were in a very bad way financially. His father had not only mortgaged the place up to the hilt, but he had incurred other obligations which poor Dick could scarcely hope to discharge. It was a forlorn hope, he said, but as long as there was the faintest glimmer he was going to fight for the old place.

It may or may not have much to do with this story, but I might as well mention that Dick had more than one reason for striving to keep the old place. In the first place, by so doing he would undoubtedly carry out his father's earnest wishes, and, in the second—well, Dick wrote me that he felt Deerfield to be the only fit home on earth for Dolly Trevison, one of the prettiest girls in Kentucky, who had promised to marry him. I have not mentioned her before, because this is a horse, not a love, story, and I am not sentimental. But Dick was terribly in love with her for all that, and he swore by all the gods that he would make her Deerfield's mistress

The sale of the Deerfield stud took place in New York in the following spring. Dick came up for it, of course, and I saw a great deal of him at the time. He was just as much in love as ever and had been working like a good fellow. He said a great deal depended on the sale. If the horses brought good prices, he thought he could stave off the loss of Deerfield for several years at any rate.

The horses did bring good prices. The Iroquois-Dorothy colt fetched the fabulous sum of $30,000. I was standing with Dick and the old colored stud groom, Uncle Nat, when the hammer fell. I saw that while Dick was naturally excited the old darky seemed to be wrought up to a state almost bordering on frenzy. He plucked at Dick's sleeve nervously as the next yearling was put up for sale. It chanced to be the colt Yellow Jack, as he had been christened, by Taffy, out of Marjory, the common bred one which had resembled the Iroquois-Dorothy colt as a foal. They had outgrown the resemblance by this time, so that nobody remarked upon it. Uncle Nat was whispering anxiously to Dick·

"Dean' forgit what I tole you, 'Marse Dick — doan' forgit, for de Lawd's sake!"

"All right, Nat," answered Dick laughingly. "I won't forget."

And when the bidding for the colt, which was without spirit, hung fire for a moment Dick spoke up and bid $105 for him, and, by Jove, the fellow was so commonly bred and so unpromising looking that no one bid higher. That's how Dick Deerfield came to bid in Yellow Jack, evidently by Uncle Nat's advice, for the old darky grinned all over his black face when the colt was knocked down to his master.

Dick bought in a few brood mares on the strength of the high prices the young things brought and hurried back again to Kentucky. I didn't see him again from that time until I ran up against him suddenly in the paddock last summer on Futurity day.

With him were two ladies whom I immediately recognized as Dolly Trevison and her mother, and all three were intently gazing at the thing which every Kentuckian loves—a good horse. As a matter of fact, it was Yellow Jack himself and Uncle Nat, who was fussing over the horse, running his hands down his legs and stroking him as if he were something too good for this world.

After I had spoken to the ladies and to Dick I had a little private talk with Uncle Nat.

"Listen to me, honey," he said, "an doan' say a word to no one. Dis yar 'oss gwine to win de race. Dis ole niggah on'y hoped to live dat long. I'ze gwine to jine ole marse afore long. But, thank de good Lawd, I'll live long 'nuff to see Yaller Jack win de Futurity."

"But, Uncle Nat," I remonstrated, "you must not have too high hopes," for I feared the disappointment would be too great.

"Nevah yo' mind, honey. I knows what I'ze sayin. He's gwine to win."

There was that in the old darky's eye which was almost convincing. You will remember that the Futurity was Yellow Jack's first appearance in public, and I was naturally skeptical of his ability to win. The odds were almost anything you chose in the ring, ranging from 20 to 1 to 30 to 1 against. I asked Deerfield what he thought the chances were, and for reply he showed me a memorandum the scribbled figures of which signified that he stood to win about $30,000 in the ring alone.

"I think he can win," he said quietly. I whistled and drew a long breath.

"I should hope you did," I replied, and just for the sake of friendship I hurried down into the ring and put a couple of hundred on the colt for my own account.

There is no use telling you how Yellow Jack won, how he came through like a whirlwind and made monkeys of the rest of them, how he won all the 2-year-old events of the season and was freely acknowledged by every one to be the greatest 2-year-old of his year or, for that matter, of a dozen years back, and how Deerfield was offered $50,000 for him and refused it. But perhaps you don't know what Yellow Jack's Futurity meant to Dick Deerfield, for not only did it save the old home to him, but it put him squarely on his feet, and he and Dolly Trevison were married that autumn.

I was Dick's best man. The wedding took place at Dolly Trevison's home, which was only a few miles from Deerfield, and when the bride and groom had started on their journey I went back to the old place to pack up my things preparatory to going back to New York.

I did not expect to leave until the following morning, and accordingly that afternoon I went out to the stables, as I frequently did, and, accompanied by Uncle Nat, went the rounds of the various stalls.

Nothing pleased the old fellow so much as admiration for his favorite, Yellow Jack, and he had the colt led out for my inspection. He was and is indeed a fine piece of horseflesh, and I was taking in all his fine points when something suddenly caught my eye.

It was merely a rather peculiar mark on the inside of his near fore leg where the white stocking ceased—a little bit of white about the size of half a dollar Where had I seen a leg so marked before?

My memory was playing some kind of a trick on me. Suddenly it came back to me, and I remembered the day Dick Deerfield, his futher and myself looked at the two colts soon after they were born. Then slowly the idea dawned upon me, and, taking Uncle Nat a little distance from the lad who was holding the horse, I asked him if he had ever noticed that peculiar marking. He nodded his head in the affirmative.

"Uncle Nat," I said slowly and solemnly, "the colt that was marked that way in the first place was the Dorothy colt."

"For de Lawd's sake, Marse Peters—for de Lawd's sake, doan' yo' tell no one, but"—and the old fellow trembled with excitement—"dis yar am de Dorothy colt, full brother to Dorchester an Dorrit, an yo' an me is de onliest liben souls what know it. I changed 'em when dey was jes' a few days old. Marse Dick, he was to New York, an ole marse, he was sick, an nobody else eber knowed de difference. For de Lawd's sake, Marse Peters, doan' yo' tell Marse Dick!"

And now the question in my mind is, What am I to do? Uncle Nut is dead, Dick Deerfield is prosperous and happy because of a frand of which he was as innocent as you were, yet somehow, knowing the secret as I do, I could hardly look into Yellow Jack's honest face without a feeling of guilt. Which shall I consider—the man or the horse?

A CURE BY A SLAP.

Quick Relief in Appendicitis by Calling Large Muscle to Aid.

Contraction of Muscle Acts on Appendix in Such a Way as to Expel Foreign Substance Which Has There Lodged.

One of the most unusual operations yet recorded in surgery was performed recently on a young woman in this city, by which was effected the cure of a case of appendicitis. No knife was used, no medicine, no poultices, no ice packs—none of the usual methods of physicians and surgeons to treat this most serious of ailments. So simple was the method employed that only eight minutes elapsed from the time the physician reached the patient until he had completed his work, and, as he believes, successfully. The young woman is 20 years old and belongs to an excellent family in Harlem. She does not care to have her name used in connection with the story, so it is withheld. The operation was performed by Dr. George J. Helmer, of Madison avenue and Thirty-first street.

In explaining the treatment, Dr. Helmer said:

"The method of treatment is the one used by all osteopathists and has been in use by them for some time."

To demonstrate, the doctor placed the thumb of the reporter's left hand flatly in the palm of his right hand. Then he slapped the palm of the hand smartly against the broad of the thumb.

"The hand represents the psoas muscle," he said, "and the thumb the appendix. We produce a spasmodic contraction of the psoas magnus, like the slapping of the palm of the hand against the thumb. This forces the foreign substance from the appendix, and relief follows immediately."

Just back of the appendix is the largest muscle in the human body, known as the psoas magnus. It is attached to the femur or big bone of the leg, and is the muscle by which one can revolve the leg as on a pivot at the heel. It is this muscle which is made to do the trick of emptying the appendix. Using the fingers of one hand to hold the walls of the abdomen in place and to prevent a rupture of the delicate internal structures, with the other hand a spasmodic contraction of the psoas magnus is brought about, which snaps it against the appendix and is said to force out of that organ whatever of foreign substances it may contain.

COLLECTION OF PHOTOGRAPHS

Gen. Corbin Receives Some Fine Pictures of the Spanish War Taken by Officers.

Gen. Corbin has received the first installment of what will be a valuable collection of photographs of the Spanish war. The views were taken by army officers, and when completed will include more than a thousand pictures. They will portray every phase of army life in Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippines.

The installment which was received at the war department the other day was pronounced by those who were privileged to see it one of the best which could be gotten together. Gen. Corbin has hit upon a capital idea that these photographs can be used in the future in settling many controversies that are likely to arise, and will be useful to historians in writing a correct history of the war, as they bear inscriptions and dates of the scenes portrayed.

It would be a difficult matter to tell which of the photographs are the most interesting, but those which attracted the most attention were of the raising of the American flag at the palace at Havana, the first entry of Cuban and American troops in Havana, Gen. Gomez' triumphant march into the capital of the island, Lieut. Hobson confined in a cell, photographs of the fortifications at Santiago, scenes of the battles before Santiago and the capitulation of that city, American and Cuban troops on the march, in camp and in action, and the cells of the Cuban dungeons where the crew of the Competitor was confined, and where Dr. Ruiz was brutally murdered.

Gen. Corbin highly prizes this valuable collection and has given instructions to permit it to remain in his office for a few days so his friends will have an opportunity to see it.

CHAPTER I.

TOM SCOTT TO THE RESCUE.

"Here's Dyea, and this is Skaguay. The White pass starts off here and goes right plumb over the mountains like this—"

And the speaker made a bold stroke with a huge piece of chalk with which he was ornamenting the floor of the village store in Merrivale, where everything was dispensed from postage stamps to lace curtains.

Clustered about his kneeling figure were a dozen men of all ages whose eyes were eagerly following the rude map of Alaska which Hank Merritt was drawing for their benefit

For stories of the wonderful wealth of this far-off Eldorado had penetrated even this remote place among the hills of New Hampshire, and the Globe reports of the lucky strikes made by numerous argonauts had stirred the blood of every man in the village until the pictures of the Yukon valley had become the all-engrossing topic among those who met every evening at this public rendezvous to pass an hour or two after their day's toil was finished.

"Then up here you strike the lake," he continued, "an' then it's 'bout all water the rest o' the way, near as I can make out. Gold is so plenty they dig it out jest as easy as we spade up worms to go fishing with. Gee whiz! I'd like to try it if it wasn't so darned far off an' didn't cost so much to git there."

The arrival of the mail interrupted his artistic efforts, and when the handful of letters had been put away the postmaster was called upon to read aloud from the papers anything new regarding the favorite topic.

The steamer P. W. Weare had eight miners on board who brought out a total of $600,000. Others had $10,000 to $20,000 apiece, and some refused to give their figures. The steamer Portland brought down $1,000,000. One man got $316 from a pan of dirt, and two miners cleaned up $6,000 in a single day's work."

As the reader paused one migh. have heard a pin drop, so intense was the silence for fully a minute. Then a dozen voices broke out in exclamations of amazement and disbelief and in the turmoil nothing intelligible could be distinguished

There was one listener, however, who said nothing, but after the rest had calmed down a bit he secured a copy of the paper and hastened to the farm where he was employed with a wild impulse surging through his brain. In his little room under the eaves he eagerly devoured the article he had heard at the store, and in another column he found an interview with one of the pioneers of Dawson City, giving full details as to the proper outfit and its cost.

It was midnight when the stalwart young farmer sought his eoseh, and for the first time in his healthy life sleep refused to come to him, for he had made up his mind to leave the village where the greater part of his youth had been spent and seek his fortune in this distant land, where a stout heart and strong hands seemed able to force Nature to relax her icy grip on her golden stores.

Tom Scott's life had been an unevenful one. He was the only son of a sea captain and until the death of his mother they lived on Cape Cod. Then an uncle took him on his farm at Merrivale and his father continued his rovning life. A few years ago, however, Obed Slicer, a native of Merrivale, who had sailed with Tom's father as mate, returned to the village with a story which made a great sensation at the time. It was to the effect that Capt. Scott had deserted his ship at San Francisco and absconded with a large sum of money belonging to the owners.

Tom was a lad of 18 at the time, but few eye-witnesses would ever forget the scene when he buried the lie at the brawny sailor and fought like a young tiger until overpowered by the brute strength of his father's defamer, whose nose was disfigured for life in the encounter and who vowed vengeance for his injury.

This was four years ago, but Tom Scott still felt the disgrace cast upon his name. His uncle had now been dead over three years, and Tom had saved the wages paid him by the farmer for whom he had worked all that time, until he possessed about $400, which was deposited in the village savings bank. This would buy his father's outfit, but how to reach the far northwest was the problem.

His sleep was troubled that night, but with the morning came the determination to start at once for Boston and trust to fortune to join one of the numerous expeditions organizing there.

His announcement was received with amazement, but Tom Scott was a man of proved mettle, and that afternoon saw him in Boston. He had been in the city several times before, and had no difficulty in finding a respectable hotel where the rate was within his means, but by the time he had eaten his supper it was growing dark and a thick snowstorm set in. He determined, however, to lose no time in his search, and made his way to the water front, where he had no doubt he could obtain all the needed information.

Atlantic avenue was practically deserted when he reached it, and the big flakes had covered the ground with a white mantle which made his footsteps inaudible as he walked along, not without a slight feeling of uneasiness as he thought of his little capital strapped about his waist under his clothes in a waterproof belt which had been his first purchase.

As he approached a saloon from which came a confused murmur of voices and a sharp clinking of glasses, two men came out directly in front of him and turned in the direction in which he was walking, being only a few feet in advance. Coming from the well-lighted saloon as they did into the thick storm, they failed to notice Tom, and upon their hasty departure he suspended, although he was far from suspecting such an improbable thing at the time.

"I tell you he's going on that hark to San Francisco," said the taller of the two men, eagerly. "He's bound for the Klondike, and he must have a fat roll with him. I heard him say he would buy his outfit out there. We can buy for him on the dock when he is going on board."

"It's a risky job," replied the other, nervously.

"Oh, what's the matter with you!" was the angry rejoinder.

"Nothing, but we take great risks. I don't like it."

"There's no risk at all," urged the other. "All we have to do is just tap him on the head and go through him. The whole thing won't take a minute, and we can be at the West end before he knows what struck him. I'm going to have his stuff, and if you want to go back on me, I'll—"

The rest of the sentence was indistinguishable. The word Klondike had naturally attracted Tom's attention, and he had involuntarily strained to catch the men's conversation, but he felt a sudden thrill of horror as he realized the full import of what he had just heard.

What could he do? That the men were planning a robbery, if not a murder, was evident. He could not warn the intended victim, for he had no means of finding or knowing him, and to lose sight of the men to find an officer was out of the question. Then the athletic young fellow set his teeth and shrugged his broad shoulders, while under his gripers a pair of hard fists balled up involuntarily.

To some it might have occurred to pay no attention to the matter, but Tom Scott was of different caliber. It was true that he had seen little of the great world, but he was above to a fault, and nature had added a tall, well-knit frame to his gift. He determined to prevent the villains from accomplishing their purpose if it lay within his power, and had no doubt of his ability to do so.

Fearful that the men might turn and see him, he hastened his pace and allowed them to gain several yards on him, keeping close to the buildings himself and hoping each moment to see an officer.

But none appeared, and soon the two thugs turned into a dark, narrower alleyway, which led to one of the wharves, and were lost to view.

Tom was in a quandary. To venture into the place was to invite attack from the villains, and he decided to wait in a convenient doorway until the intended victim came along or an officer should appear to whom he could tell his story.

A few yards to the right he found a sheltered recess in front of a block, and hastening to his station, keeping a sharp lookout in the direction of the saloon, where he naturally supposed future developments enjoying himself. A short distance away a street lamp shone dimly through the falling snow and threw a broad band of light on the sidewalk, across which no one could pass without being seen by him.

It was a situation to try the stoutest nerves, for Tom was unarmed, and the thug he was trying to save might be intoxicated, while the two robbers would surely be provided with all the tools of their trade. A dozen schemes flashed through his mind as he crouched in the shadow, only to be discarded as useless. The time dragged slowly enough, but his resolution did not falter.

Suddenly a dark figure came staggering across the lighted space and Tom's heart gave a bound. Was this his man? Would he have some chance to understand his danger?

No, the drunken sailor lurched heavily along and turned up a side street a short distance beyond the alleyway, where the men were hidden.

Another and still another followed at intervals, but none passed an their way and Tom began to wonder if his ears had not played him false. He was beginning to waver when a slight crunching noise at his left caused him to turn quickly in time to see the form of a man disappear in the alleyway, having approached from the opposite direction while Tom was looking up the avenue.

What was to be done?

He stood for a moment with his heart beating tumultuously and every nerve tingling. Then from the dark opening came a muffled cry, followed by an oath and the sound of a struggle.

Tom cast one quick look about him. No one was in sight and the next instant he had pulled off his gloves and darted up the passageway at full speed.

The darkness was intense for a short distance, but after a few yards he emerged into a small open space in the midst of which the three men were writhing and twisting in desperate struggles. Tom was unable to distinguish one from another, but as he reached the spot one man tore himself free and shouted:

"Help! Police! Stand back or I'll shoot—"

The rest of his threat was drowned by a heavy blow from a blackjack, which knocked the weapon from his hand.

"Stop!" cried Tom, springing toward the assailant.

He was too late, for a second blow stretched the stranger senseless and bleeding on the snow, and with an oath a snarl the robber turned just as Tom's right fist shot out with tremendous force.

Down went the man like a stricken ox and Tom grappled with the other with a shout of triumph. His blood was up, and, lifting his smaller opponent bodily from the ground, he shook him as a mastiff would a terrier.

"Hands off!" panted the helpless man, fiercely. "Curse you, what are you trying to do?"

He was not long in doubt, for Tom buried him against the side of a stone building with such force that he fell in an inert heap and lay motionless.

Tom turned to see what had become of the taller man, but at that instant he felt a sharp pain in his side and a strong hand seized him by the throat and bent him backwards, while a hoarse voice hissed in his ear:

"Drop that for your pains, you meddling fool!"

With a desperate effort he twisted himself free from his assailant, springing aside barely in time to escape another lunge of the murderous knife he had just felt.

Again the fellow lunged viciously at him, but Tom caught his wrist and a desperate struggle ensued. Although much the stronger man, Tom found it no easy task to avoid the blade, and the two swayed back and forth over the snow, the man trying to free his hand for a decisive stroke, and Tom bending all his efforts to prevent it. Soon, however, his iron grip began to tell, and he felt his enemy's muscles relax. Putting all his strength into a supreme effort, he wrenched the knife free, exclaiming:

"I've got you now, you murderer, and I don't leave you till you are behind the bars!"

But even in the moment of his victory he felt a cold ring of steel pressed against his ear, and these ominous words sounded behind him:

"Hold on, young fellow, or you're a dead man! Quick, I say, or I'll shoot!"

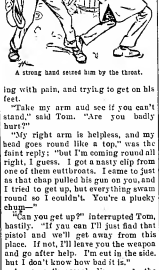
It was a moment of fearful peril! There was murder in the man's tones, and Tom felt it. He released his grasp slowly, and the larger man pushed him suddenly backward, crying:

"Shoot him, you idiot!"

Holding his weapon on Tom's life, for the other man pressed the trigger at the same instant, the bullet passing a foot in front of the latter's face and flattening against the wall at his side.

Tom still retained the knife, and with a quick slash he struck at the man who held the revolver, causing the owner to drop it, with a yell of pain, and dart off toward the street at full speed, followed by his companion, who had evidently no desire to face Tom alone.

As the men disappeared he turned, to find the stranger he had rescued groaning with pain, and trying to get on his feet.



A strong hand seized him by the throat.

"Take my arm and see if you can't stand," said Tom. "Are you badly hurt?"

"My right arm is helpless, and my head feels round like a top," was the faint reply; "but I'm coming round all right, I guess. I got a nasty clip from one of those scoundrels, I reckon by just as that chap pulled his gun on you, and I tried to get up, but everything swam round so I couldn't. You're a plucky chap—"

"Can you get up?" interrupted Tom, hastily. "Let you can! I just had that pistol and we'll get away from this place. If not, I'll leave you the weapon and go after help. I'm out in the cold, but I don't know how bad it is."

A moment's search discovered the weapon, and after assisting the injured man to his feet they were moving slowly up the wharf when a bright ray of light suddenly penetrated the darkness and a tall policeman appeared before them, throwing the searching beams of a dark lantern upon them.

"What's going on down there?" he demanded. "Didn't I hear a shot just a moment ago?"

Tom was about to reply when his companion exclaimed:

"Two men knocked me down and would have robbed me but for this man here, who pitched into them. They both ran up this way."

"I passed two men," said the officer. "One was tall and the other short. Were they the ones?"

Upon receiving an affirmative reply, he turned on his heels and dashed off in pursuit of the evildoers, who by this time had made good their escape.

As the excuse was needed a horrible happened along and Tom hailed it at his companion's suggestion.

"Take us to the police station on Battery street," he said to the driver, and in a few moments they stood before the official in a well-lighted room telling their story. A physician was in attendance upon a prisoner and he soon made a rapid examination of their wounds.

"A few strips of plaster will fix your cut all right," said he to the elder man, "and your arm is only numb from the blow. You'll be all right to-morrow." Then turning to Tom he added:

"You have had a very narrow escape from death, young man. That knife was meant for your heart. As it is, it glanced on a rib and there is no damage done. It is only a slight flesh wound, which will give you no trouble whatever."

A few moments sufficed to dress the cut properly, and after turning over the knife and revolver to the authorities, and in identifying the two robbers, Tom was about to start for his hotel when his new acquaintance said, bluntly:

"Hold on a minute. I'd like to know the name of the man who stood by an old chap in such tough sawed up fix. How did you happen along so handy like?"

"My name is Tom Scott, and I happened to hear those men planning to rob somebody, so I kept an eye on them. That's all."

"No, it ain't all, by a long chalk," was the hearty response. "You did more'n that, and I might be ehoked into the dock before this only for your pluck. My name is John Avery, and I'm pretty well known along the water front as a man of my word. If I can ever do you a good turn you can count on me. Live here in the city?"

"No, I'm just from New Hampshire," said Tom.

"Looking for work?"

"No, I've come to find a chance to get to the Klondike."

"Then, by thunder, you needn't look any further. I'm the very man to help you. Because I'm bound there myself, and you shall go with me if you want to. I wouldn't ask a better mate than you. Where are you stopping?"

Tom mentioned the name of his hotel and the other said at once:

"All right. Let's go there and talk this thing over."

Half an hour later they were seated in the smoking room and Tom's modest story was told. When he had finished Avery said:

"That's a good, straight yarn, and some day I may have one to tell you that will open your eyes. All I need to say now is that my name is John Avery. I'm an old sea-dog myself, and a few old days in California, you'll need it all and more, too. If you'll be a pard I'll be square by you like, and you can put me when you strike a rich claim."

Tom thanked him warmly, but he was overwhelmed at the prospect, and soon yielded.

"I'll see about getting your passage the first thing in the morning," said Avery, "and now, as my old head is getting drowsy from the grog, I'll take a bed here and turn in. I was exhausting to sleep on board to-night, but I'll wait for daylight before I try that trip again."

Then, pressing Tom's hand warmly, the old miner said:

"Good night, mate. You oughter sleep well after saving a man's life, and money, too. Do you know I have $5,000 in my clothes, and but for you it wouldn't be there now."

There was a suspicious moisture in his eyes, as he turned hastily and left the room, leaving Tom to his pleasant thoughts.

He could hardly realize all that had been crowded into the few hours since his arrival, and his sleep was broken by fitful dreams, in which revolvers and robbers played prominent roles.

Career of a Capitalist

By Edgar Temple Field

I HAD long had a desire to become a capitalist. Lucille seemed to think it smart to laugh at me for this ex-tremely laudable and perfectly natural ambition. As for her, she wasted her substance in riotous living, spending every cent of her salary on opera tickets, imported toilet articles and lor-gnettes, lunch with a reckless disregard for the future that could only mean one thing, namely, matrimonial hopes.

And, to tell the truth, Lucille was attractive enough to warrant her having some hopes in this direction, and could have had her pick any time from half a dozen young fellows, each one of whom got almost as much salary as she did.

But that has nothing to do with my own ambitions, which were of a very different sort. I say were, for I'm not so sure about them now, my first experience as a capitalist having rather unsettled my views of life for the time being.

I was very young indeed when I first formed my ideas as to the desirability of wealth, it was way back in my childhood when old Mr. Higginson used to come to church in his great fat carriage, neat and dirty linen, and I observed how the minister and the elders crowded around him to shake his hand, when he was such a hateful old eurmudgeon that I had privately thought the Lord ought to have made some sort of a public apology for perpetrating him on the community.

"Oh, Higginson has got a lot of money out at interest," my father would say when I wanted to know why people made such a fuss over a dirty and disagreeable old man.

What a marvelous thing "money out at interest" must be, I thought, when it can transform even Mr. Higginson into an acceptable companion.

And so at that early age I was made acquainted with the potency of wealth, and I resolved that some day I, too, should have "money out at interest."

When I was made head stenographer in a big law office I considered my ambition as good as realized. It had seemed so far away before that I'd never dared to save very much, but now that it was fairly within my reach I began to lay up money at a frantic rate.

"If you get another raise in your salary you'll be so stingy you'll take to fishing out of the meal ticket tickets and wearing your bicycle suit to church," declared Lucille in disgust.

But I just let her jeer and kept on economizing, and at last there came a day when I had $1,500 in the bank. Mr. Adams, a friend of my father's, invested it for me in a first mortgage on a suburban cottage, and when the papers were signed I went home flushed and triumphant.

"Congratulate me, Lucille," I cried, throwing myself into a chair and my hat on the couch. "I feel overwhelmed with money."

Lucille was trimming a hat to wear to the theater that night, one of those big white taffy affairs that a single shower will transform into an imitation custard pie before your very eyes. "Why, you look well enough, I think you've done something really fine. Sam Dunning, if you don't look out you'll soon will grow hooked just like Mr. Dunkelspiel's down at the pawnbroker's shop."

"What do I care?" I retorted gayly. "I've got money out at interest, Lucille. Do you realize what that means?" "It means that you've worked like a slave and denied yourself all pleasure for a year and a half to get it, and you're glad it's all and no more to show for it," that's a dear."

But the fever was in my blood, and I wouldn't listen to her.

So I went on putting money in the bank and looked forward eagerly to the time when the interest from my investment would begin to come in.

I was paid promptly enough the first quarter and the second. Then it lapsed. Six months went by and no interest.

"It seems to me," remarked Lucille one day, "that you'd better investigate that money in dead earnest."

"Oh, don't worry yourself," I retorted snappishly. I was nervous of late, I confess, Mr. Higginson was allowed to be as cross as he liked, I remembered.

Finally, it's a great thing to have money out at interest," he responded airily, tilting her sailor hat over her nose and shaking out her rustling skirts preparatory to going out. She was really outrageously pretty.

At the door she met some one coming in. A pale, forlorn-looking old woman, with a pinched face and an appearance of having grieved for months.

"Is this Miss Dunning?" she asked.

I assured her it was, and she produced a letter. "I called to see you about that mortgage."

"Ah, yes," I said, hastening to shut the door on Lucille, who was lingering in the hall in an unprincipled fashion which I could not approve.

"We've been unable to meet our payments lately," went on my visitor in a depressed tone, "and yesterday your agent sent me word you intended to foreclose. Oh, Miss Dunning, don't. Please don't be hard on me. My poor husband has been sick in bed for a year, and if we lose our little home it will kill him."

Here the poor creature burst out crying, and I reached for my handkerchief, feeling somehow that being a capitalist wasn't such fun as I'd imagined.

"Oh, Miss Dunning," proceeded my guest, as soon as she was able to speak, "if you knew how hard we worked to some dying animal, rose a woman's shriek.

The picture was, first, a room rich in decorations of green and gold. In the foreground, half-reclining in a cushioned chair, an old man, with long, softly curling white hair, fits head had fallen a little to one side, his eyes were fixed in a glassy yet reproachful stare upon the exquisitely beautiful face of a woman, whose jeweled hands he grasped with a dying clutch. Both his hands and hers were blood-stained. Hers held a stiletto-like dagger, from whose glittering point the blood dripped. There was a gaping wound in the old man's side, and the woman's face was that of Miss Considine!

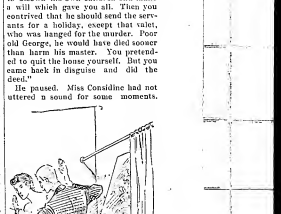
When the appalled woman, for whose sole benefit this picture had been painted, would have flung up her frenzied hands to shut out the sight, Count Ludwig caught them in an iron grasp, and almost shouted in her ear in his excitement :

"No, no, madam; you shall look, and look, and look, till the sight blinds you or kills you. I care not which. Do you see him, false siren—the poor old man, who was kind to you—who took you out of poverty to marry you—who never harmed the most helpless creature? What had he done that you should kill him, you murderess?"

Miss Considine had ceased to struggle. The blanched whiteness of her face and its startling contrast with the scene was awful to see, and the screams that broke through her rigid, sullen lips curdled the blood to hear.

"Shall I tell you who I am?" Count Ludwig continued, without releasing her, still compelling her to look. "Count Ludwig no longer. I am his son—that Rodolphus of whom you have heard, for whom you never saw. When I came home and found that the poor old man who loved me had been ruthlessly slain, I swore never to rest till I had found and given to justice his murderess. For months, I never slept—a single instant who she was. You laid your plans well. You married a doting old man for his wealth, and with your sorceress designings you induced him to disown his own children and make a will which gave you all. Then you contrived that he should send the servants home on a holiday, except that valet, who was hanged for the murder. Poor old George, he would have died sooner than harm his master. You pretended to quit the house yourself. But you came back in disguise and did the deed."

He paused. Miss Considine had not uttered a sound for some moments.



"DO YOU SEE HIM, FALSE SIREN?"

The horrible ghastliness had not left her face, but she had in a measure recovered her self-possession. Now she sat erect, an unseen magnet had compoked tone.

"You cannot prove a syllable of this mad story," she hissed. Then she stopped her, with eyes that seemed absolutely to glitter with rage and contempt, flinging swiftly forth a purple velvet case, he lifted the lid and showed upon the white satin cushion a most exquisitely-wrought sandalwood bracelet. It was stained with something which had dried upon it, and changed color all except about a third, to a dark sickly shade, whose hue it was not difficult to recognize.

Said Count Ludwig, in an awed tone:

"I found this among the contents of the chair in which my father was slain. It is the blood upon it. It slipped from your wrist in the struggle with him. You wear its mate this moment upon your arm."

He had his enamored token an instant beside the one on this woman's bare, exquisitely-modeled arm. Then he let the case quietly down upon the carpet and drew back. She never stirred.

"I think she is dead," he said quietly. He was right. Some vessel had burst inwardly in that wild struggle against the shock of knowing that the man she had learned to love was the son of her unhappy victim. She had been dying while he spoke to her.—N. Y. Weekly.

Charming Whistling of Butler.

Jefferson said of Washington that "He was incapable of fear, meeting personal dangers with the calmest firmness." This statement is indeed very clearly proved by his first engagement, at which Gen. Washington gave his startling order: "I fortunately escaped without any wound, for the right wing, where I stood, was exposed to and received all the enemy's fire, and it was the part where many were killed and left not wounded. I reared the bullets whistle, and believe me, there is something charming in the sound."—Ladies' Home Journal.

Ole Strom is visiting with his brother, Torlief Strom. Ole is buying wheat for the Imperial Elevator Co. at Elmer, Minn.

L. S. Anderson has been busy of late moving into his new house. No doubt Mr. Anderson will have one of the finest residents in theeity when he gets all fixed up.

L. H. Larson & Co. have now moved their stock of drugs in the A. C. Lawson building. It has been fitted out in very neat shape and Mr. Hawkins, the popular druggist, has been busy cleansing and fixing it up. Shelly can now boast of having a first-class drug store.

P. J. Ege & Co. are now busy moving their stock of dry goods into the adjoining building, formerly occupied by the Shelly pharmacy. They have made two arches in the building and contemplate increasing their stock of dry goods, clothing, boots and shoes considerable and use this building for their dry goods department and the other building for their grocery and crockery department. No doubt but they will have as large a stock of goods as any store in the neighborhood, as they are very enterprising business men and will try to make a good showing for our town. We bespeak for them a grand success.

CLIMAX.

P. J. Ege was up from Shelly on Tuesday.

Dr. S. H. Johnson drove to Reynolds Tuesday on professional business.

The new brick engine house for the Farmer's Elevator, which has been under construction at the hands of Bournman and sons is just completed.

The heavy storm which passed over McIntosh did considerable damage to the garden truck. We would have it, there was no hail, and most of the farmers are thankful that it was no worse.

Our cornet band will this week be augmented by two new members—a solo cornet and a clarinet. Our leading band leader, N. Zetterberg, imparted them from Winger, found them positions, and they will from now on reside in McIntosh.

Rev. pet Santbunyd and the Misses Dicker Drew and Nettie Hood took a drive to Lambert last Sunday with a livery team, which took a notion to run away. It resulted in no injuries to any of the party, but the buggy got a little smashed up.

An ice cream social was given on J. S. Rosholt's lawn last Saturday by the Lutheran Ladies Aid Society. The band was enjoyed and furnished music all evening. Cold weather, however, somewhat dampened the financial success of the entertainment. Proceeds $11.50. A picnic will be held at A. Amengs' place next Sunday by the same society.

ERSKINE.

Richard Ness visited at Fertile Sunday.

Olaf Messelt went to Maple Lade again Saturday.

Sheriff Lawrence was here on business Saturday.

Mrs. A. Holmboe returned to Crookston Monday.

Rev. Yarrow, the Congregational minister, is busy adding an addition to the church.

The town sochal given by Mrs. Bennet's class was a success financially and socially.

Dr. Mckinnon returned on Saturday from his eastern trip, where he took another course in Surgery.

Geo. T. Houghteling went to Bemidji on a fishing trip on Tuesday. Geo. generally has good luck.

N. J. Anderson's "kid" band is doing well. Mr. Anderson deserves considerable praise for the noble work he has performed in teaching the boys to play. This is one of the youngest bands in the state consisting chiefly of boys from 8 to 12 years old.

Hans Ekelund, of the firm of Vander & Ekelund, prominent merchants here, returned on Thursday after a sojourn of three weeks in the southern part of the state with a new wife that of husband. His many friends here were agreeably surprised to learn of his marriage. The happy bride is Miss Matilda Erickson, who is well known in this vicinity. Both are highly respected young people and we wish them a long and prosperous life.

The St. Anthony and Dakota elevator Co. appointed W. B. Shefield as one of their traveling representatives in this state. The citizens of Fosston are sorry to lose such a good citizen but are pleased to learn he has been promoted as he is worthy of it. He has held several responsible positions during the nine years he lived here having been city recorder, chief of the fire department and a member of the school board for several years. He and his estimable wife have always been leaders in social circles here, always ready to assist in any public enterprise and prominent in church affairs.

CHILD WITH A GIANT'S LIMB.

Remarkable Operation by a Philadelphia Surgeon—Deformed Leg Pared Down.

The Philadelphia County Medical society had a remarkable case of orthopedic surgery presented to it the other day when Dr. James P. Mann exhibited the successful results of an operation he had recently performed. The patient was a 12-year-old boy whose right leg and foot were of normal size, but the left leg was as large as a full-grown man's, while the foot was so big that a man's No. 14 shoe was necessary to incase it. The foot was 12 inches long and the three smaller toes measured six inches in circumference and 3½ inches in length. A remarkable feature was that the bony as well as the soft tissues were enlarged. Dr. Mann, after subjecting the foot to the X rays, made deep incisions and pared down the bones, besides cutting away the soft tissues. The lad's foot was then incased in plaster of paris.

The plaster was removed in the presence of a number of medical men, when it was found that the operation had been entirely successful, and that not only was the foot of normal size, but within a few days the boy will be able to walk with it.

TO GET MORE PRACTICE.

Efficiency of the Artillerists Manning the Shore Batteries to Be Greatly Increased.

With a view to increasing the efficiency of the artillerists manning the batteries protecting the coasts of the United States instructions have been given by the war department for additional practice with the great guns.

Each battery of heavy artillery is authorized, beginning July 1, to fire yearly, in addition to its present allowance, ten rounds of eight-inch ammunition and five rounds of ten-inch ammunition. The ammunition expended under previous orders limited the rounds to 15 for the three-inch breech-loading rifle, ten for the eight-inch muzzle-loading converted rifle, three each for the eight-inch breech-loading rifle, ten-inch breech-loading rifle and the 15-inch breech-loading rifle; ten for the 12-inch smooth bore and eight for the 15-inch smooth bore.

AFRICAN RIVERS.

Eight Months Out of Twelve They Are Dry and Drifts of Sand Mark Their Course.

It is a distinguishing feature of most African rivers that they contain no water for at least eight months of the year. It is true that water can almost always be found in a river bed by digging for it, but in outward appearances a river is usually a broad belt of sand lying between high precipitous banks. Many and many a coach has been upset in one of these drifts, as they are called. The sand is always steep, frequently so steep that the brakes cannot hold the coach, says Gentleman's Magazine.

They start going down at a crawl, and then the passengers way and goes on with a rush, the mules are driven into a heap anyhow, and one wonders that they do not get their legs broken; but they usually land all right, while the coach, practically unmanageable, goes down like a sort of toboggan, jumping from stone to stone, and swaying like a ship in a sudden squall, and may or may not arrive right side uppermost at the bottom. In fact, the passenger who has gathered his ideas of coaching from a trip to Brighton or a drive to Virginia Water, finds that he has a lot to learn about the subject when he gets to South Africa.

OUR GRAIN INSPECTION

The New State Board of Appeals, Created by Act of the Last Legislature.

MEETS AND ADOPTS NEW RULES

Procedure By Which Aggrieved Consignees and Shippers May Get Redress

The state board of appeals for grain inspection Saturday last adopted rules to apply to the department of grain inspection, under the act of the last legislature, which created the board. They are of interest to all grain growers, handlers and elevator men throughout the state, and are as follows:

After such reinspection, should any owner, consignee, shipper or warehouseman feel aggrieved at the decision made therein and desire to take an appeal from the same, he shall make his said appeal in writing on a blank provided for that purpose in the office of the chief deputy inspector, clearly setting forth the kind of grain, where located, its grade on reinspection and appellant's reason for appeal.

In case such appeal is not taken before said grain shall have been loaded and lost its identity or shall have left the jurisdiction of the department, then the rights of appeal shall be deemed waived and shall no longer exist.

It shall be the duty of the chief deputy inspector immediately upon receiving a proper notice of appeal as aforesaid to ascertain from the inspection records in his office the complete history of the original inspection and the reinspection and enter the same in the proper columns in the notice of appeal. He shall then in each case transmit the said notice to the board of appeals.

It shall be the duty of the board of appeals, upon the receipt of notice, as aforesaid, to proceed at once to carefully examine the grain in question and render their decision as to the quality, grade and dockage (if any) thereof, in accordance with the rules for inspection of grain established under the laws of the state, and when such decision has been made, notice of the same in writing shall be filed by said board with the chief deputy inspector to be entered by him in his inspection record. The decision shall also be recorded in the book of appeals and the original notice shall be returned by the chief deputy inspector to said board to be filed in their office. Said decision shall be final and conclusive upon all parties in interest and the chief deputy inspector shall, when so requested, issue a certificate of the grade of the grain in question in accordance with the decision of the board of appeals.

It shall be the duty of the chief deputy inspectors to promptly render all necessary assistance to the board of appeals in procuring official samples of any car load or lot of grain which may be in dispute and on which an appeal may be taken, and for this purpose they shall designate such scalers or helpers as may not be otherwise engaged, whose duty will be to procure fair average samples of about two quarts in quantity in each case appealed, and return the same as expeditiously as possible to the said board for their examination. Such persons so assigned shall be solely under the authority and instruction of the board of appeals while engaged in this particular work.

In all cases of appeal, the appellants or any authorized representative shall have the right to accompany the official sampler to see that the lot of grain on which appeal is taken is properly and fairly sampled and they shall be entitled to receive a portion of such sample if they so desire the same for subsequent verification.

It shall be the duty of said board of appeals to furnish to the chief deputy inspector a fair sample of each lot of grain, the grade or grades of which has been changed by them.

The board of appeals for Minneapolis shall have exclusive jurisdiction of all cases of appeal arising at St. Paul and St. Cloud. In such cases the chief deputy inspectors at these points shall procure or cause to be procured duly verified official samples of the grain in dispute and forward the same to said board of appeals, who will report their decisions promptly to said chief deputies.

The chief deputy inspector is authorized to charge and collect from the appellant in cases of appeal on track, in car load lots, the sum of $1 per car load in all cases where the grade or dockage established by the reinspection is in no wise changed, but if any change is made therein, no charge will be made.

When an appeal is taken on grain within the elevator in running stream, the charge for the same will be $1 per lot of 1,000 bushels or less, and at the rate of $1 per 1,000 bushels for any amount in excess of 1,000 bushels: this charge to be made and collected regardless of the results of such appeal. No order for appeal on grain being shipped "out of store" into vessels will be entertained after the grain has been delivered on board the vessel.

All fees collected by the chief deputy inspector in cases of reinspection and appeal are to be deposited by him with the funds of the department, and a report shall at the end of each month be transmitted by him to the chief inspector at St. Paul, showing the total number of cars or lots of grain on which reinspection and appeals have been called together with the results thereof, also showing the amount of fees collected therefrom.

Under the provisions of law, the board of appeal at Minneapolis and Duluth possess co-ordinate authority and the decisions rendered by either board in cases of appeal shall be final and conclusive as against all parties.

ANOTHER BIG CONFLAGRATION.

Red Lake Falls Is Visited by Another Disastrous Fire.

Red Lake Falls was visited by a rather disastrous fire Tuesday morning. When the alarm was sounded and the citizens turned out it was found that the block containing Horvets Brothers' clothing house, W. A. Shrider's drug store, Shagnon's hardware store, Baughton's general store, J. G. Adam's jewelry store and Latondresst's saloon was on fire. The fire company turned out promptly and with the assistance of the Great Northern work engine that was laying over at that place, soon had a good stream of water playing on the flames. A little delay was caused from the fact that the town's water works are not as yet in working order, and the railroad engine had to run up to the company's water tank and run water into the tender, from whence it was pumped by the fire engine. Those who witnessed the fire give the local company a good send-off for the manner in which they got the fire under control. When the alarm was sent in the two first buildings in the block were a mass of flames and fanned by a pretty brisk wind the fire was attacking the balance of the block, which was composed of frame buildings, and for a time it was thought the entire town would be swept away. The contents of all the burning buildings were a total loss except in the saloon where the fixtures were saved, it being the last building to burn.

SCHOOL BOARD ORGANIZED.

Elected Officers and Appointed Committees.

The newly elected school board held a meeting Saturday for the purpose of organization, and the following officers were elected.

E. M. Walsh, president.

HEATING ORDINANCE.

An Open Letter by E. D Childs, Explaining his Action at Recent Council Meeting.

TWO SIDES TO THE QUESTION.

Voted for the City's Interests in not Voting to Grant an Unlimited Time Franchise.

EDITOR POLK COUNTY JOURNAL:

DEAR SIR:—Some question having been raised as to the wisdom of my attempt to amend the "Heating Ordinance" offered at the last session of the council, I have thought your readers might be interested in knowing more of the history of this proposed piece of legislation, and of my reasons for offering the amendments which were voted down.

Involved in the passage of any ordinance which is in itself a contract, and which grants to private individuals or corporations a perpetual franchise to occupy and dig up at their will any of the "Street, Avenues, Alleys or Public Places" of the city, as this ordinance does, is the broad general question of how far public rights can be surrendered to private control with safety to the general public. In the writer's opinion it is the solemn and imperitive duty of every alderman to examine very such concession with great care, and to be sure that it carries with it no further and broader powers and privileges than they are willing to concede, before he gives it his affirmative vote.

In the matter of this ordinance, it was prepared by the agent of the grantee, and by him presented to Alderman McKinnon with a request that he offer it for passage. This agent is, or was until two or three weeks ago, an entire stranger to every member of the council, and I have so far been unable to learn that he has ever presented any letters of introduction or other credentials to any of its members. The American District Steam company is a foreign corporation, and so far as I can learn, a stranger to every member of the council, and the proposed ordinance, which if passed in its present form, will grant them a perpetual franchise in our streets, does not even mention the state in which they are incorporated, or whether they have corporate existence, nor has any written or printed evidence been offered the council showing that they have such existence. The "Title of the Ordinance" recites that it is for the purpose of "Granting the right to the American District Steam company, their successors and assigns, to lay, operate and maintain a system of pipes in the streets, aveaues, alleys and public places in the city of Crookston, Minn., for conveying and distributing steam." While it is claimed that this is for heating purposes, yet the franchise granted will be much broader, as there is no limit to the uses and purposes for which the steam "conveyed" may be used. It is customary in granting such rights to specify that they shall be exercised under the supervision and direction of the city engineer, but in this ordinance they are not bound by any such restriction.

The tendency of the time is toward municipal ownership of all such public functions as furnishing power, light, heat, etc. Our city is now struggling under the burden of a very unwise contract granted by ordinance, as this one is sought to be, and in view of all these facts, the writer, while feeling friendly to the enterprise as outlined by the gentleman who offered the ordinance, still felt it his duty to attempt to place some limit upon the powers and privileges conferred, and to this end offered a simple amendment restricting the life of the contract to fifteen years. If this amendment had carried, and the contract had been found to be reasonably satisfactory, it could have been extended by a majority vote of the council at any time. If proved a disastrous contract to the city, we could look forward to the time when it would expire by limitation, and endure burden with greater patience. During the discussion which followed the offering of this amendment, it developed that there was only one member of the council who realized that the ordinance as offered would be a perpetual contract, as the city attorney then advised it would be, and yet with no more knowledge of the scope of the ordinance than this last fact implies, every vote except that of the writer was against the amendment.

The council having decided by this vote to place no time limit upon the contract, and knowing the whole city was to be more or less discommoded by the obstruction from time to time of our streets, the writer thought some compensation should be made the city for this inconvenience and offered the second amendment, requiring the parties benefited to hear the city hall free of charge during the life of their contract. There were four votes in favor of this proposition and four against it, when President O'Brien cast the deciding vote in favor of the monopoly and against the city. The question was then upon the passing of the ordinance without amendment, and in view of the utter lack of information possessed by the council on the merits of the question involved, as shown by the discussion, the writer then objected to the passage of the ordinance at that time, and as the charter specifies that it can be passed only by unanimous vote at the first meeting when offered, it went over until next meeting, giving the council and citizens an opportunity to become more familiar with its provisions.

Although the agent had repeatedly stated during the progress of the debate that no limitation as to time of the franchise or compensation therefor would be accepted by the Grantee, yet when he found that the writer would not permit its passage without further consideration, he said that they would accept a twenty-five year limit and furnish twenty-five per cent of the heat they might use city hall. This concession leads the writer to believe that if the council had stood with him for the terms which he sought to secure for the city, they would have been accepted by the company.

As a compromise between the first offer and that of the agent, the mover of the amendment then offered to waive his objection if the company would accept a 20 year limit and furnish 20 per cent of the heat for the city hall. But this offer was not accepted, and the ordinance was withdrawn with the understanding that it could be offered at any future meeting with such amendments as the American District Steam Co. saw fit to make when they knew the facts so far as they are known to me. The question is, should this ordinance have been passed at that meeting, without examination of its scope and without limitation, and in the utter absence of any definite and positive knowledge as to who the parties proposed are to be, and without compensation for the value and perpetual privileges granted? If so, I am in error and should be condemned as an obstructionist.

Very Respectfully, E. D. CHILDS.

SOME LIBERAL PRIZES.

Offered by George Purvis For Samples of Polk County Products.

In order to stimulate the farmers of Polk county to come to bring in specimens to add to the display which he is preparing to properly represent Polk county at the state fair, George Purvis, of Crookston, has decided to offer special prizes to be judged by a competent committee. The prizes for grain and grasses will be awarded on Wednesday, August 30, and on vegetables and fruits Saturday, Sept. 2 as follows:

Small grain, threshed, not less than five varieties, containing one peck each, first prize $3, second $2.

Corn in the cob, not less than 12 ears, first $3, second $2.

Grains in the straw, not less than five varieties, first $3, second $2.

Collection of grasses wild and tame, including clovers, not less than five varieties, first $3, second $2.

Crab apples, not less than one peck of each variety, first $5, second $3.

Preserved fruits in glass jars, not less than five varieties, first $6 second $2.

Best collection of vegetables, including melons, first $3, second $2.

Entries to be made at the Great Northern local office, Crookston, and later than 9 a. m. the days fixed above for awarding the prizes.

All entries to form part of the Polk county exhibit at the state fair.

Samples already secured by Mr. Purvis are reported as very fine. J. H. Stephens brought in some remarkable samples of wheat and oats. One sheaf of wheat contained thirteen stools, none of which numbered less than fifty stalks, one having sixty-six separate shoots headed from a single kernel of grain. A count showed that the heads averaged fifty-two grains each, making a total of 3,588 grains of wheat from a single kernel. One stool of oats numbered eighty shoots, averaging 109 grains each, an increase of 8,720 per cent. These facts will be tabulated and will appear as a portion of the exhibit.

STEAM HEATING ORDINANCE.

That Was Before the Council Tuesday Night.

An ordinance granting the right to the American District Steam company, their successors any assigns, to lay, operate and maintain a system of pipes in the streets, avenues, alleys and public places in the city of Crookston, Minn., for conveying and distributing steam.

Be it ordained by the city council of the city of Crookston Minn., as follows:

SECTION 1. The right and permission is hereby granted to the American District Steam company, their successors and assigns, to enter upon and construct, lay, operate and maintain in the streets, avenues, alleys and public places of the city of Crookston a system of pipes with all necessary branches, cut-offs and manholes for conveying and distributing steam, and to re-enter upon such streets, alleys, avenues and public places from time to time as may be necessary for the maintenance, operation, repair, and renewal of such system, or any portion of the same.

SECTION 2. The authority, right and permission herein granted are subject to the following terms, restrictions and conditions:

(a) When the parties to whom the foregoing rights are granted, their successors and assigns, shall enter upon any street, avenue, alley, or public place for the purpose of constructing or repairing any portion of their system, they shall prosecute the work with due diligence, and shall close all trenches or holes as soon as possible as the work progresses, leaving the street, alley, avenue or public place at the same grade, and in as good condition as it was found by them at the time of entry.

(b) The holder, or holders, of the rights hereby granted shall be liable to the city of Crookston, and to private persons for all damage or injury caused by, or arising from the use or occupancy of any street, avenue, alley, or public place by him or them, for the purposes aforesaid, and such holder shall at all times hold the city harmless of and from all claims for damage arising from or by reason of the entry or occupancy of the streets, avenues, alleys or public places, and liability for the same, and defend all the actions for the enforcement of such claims, and shall pay all judgments obtained as the result of said action.

SECTION 3. Any person or persons who shall cut, injure or destroy or displace any of the steam pipes, connections, valves or meters, or other appliances, fixtures, or properties of the parties to whom the forgoing rights and privileges are granted, their successors or assigns, used in or in connection with their steam pipe system, or shall unnecessarily or unreasonably impede or interfere with the regular working of said system, shall be deemed guilty of misdemeanor.

SECTION 4 This ordinance shall not become operative until the provisions of this ordinance are accepted by the said American District Steam company, said acceptance to be in writing, and to be filed with the City Recorder within thirty days from the date when this ordinance takes effect.

SECTION 5. All ordinances, or parts of ordinances in conflict with the provisions of this ordinance are hereby repealed.

GOES TO FERGUS FALLS.

John Rayner After a Few Days Freedom Returns to That Place.

A crazy man by the name of John Rayner, was taken through Tuesday night on his way to Fergus Falls. This is the second trip to that place, he having been discharged from the hospital there only a few days ago. When released he was apparently restored to his reason and returned to his farm near Holt in Marshall county and resumed his duties in a very rational manner. Last Saturday he went to a neighbor's house to close a deal for hay on his hay land. During the deal both parties became angry and the neighbor noticed that Rayner was becoming unnaturally excited and induced him to come into his buggy and drove him home. After reaching his shanty where he lives alone, being a bachelor, he became violently insane and spent the day and night in divers demoniacal exercises, among which was the tearing down of his house and burning his stable. Sunday morning the officers were notified and he was taken in charge. One of the officers informed a reporter that the unfortunate man had slept only two hours since Friday night and during the entire time he has kept up a continual flow of words.

Hutchinson Times: Why are the harvest hands so scarce? Why are the farm wages so high? Because men have employment—because there is no army of unemployed men scouring the country seeking work—because Advance Agent McKinley's show is "on."

Stillwater Gazette: Any newspaper that fails to give the trust-an uppercut or a solar plexus once in a while is untrue to the cause of humanity. And all of us are looking for a chance to get in on a combine that will do us good. Now is the time to subscribe.

Roseau County Times: Congressman Eddy has returned from his sojourn on the Pacific coast and is now mustering at his home in Glenwood. His pole is up for the governorship but he keeps it to himself. Eddy is a lucky fellow and lightening may strike him as it has many a man a heap better looking than he is but not more shrewd. After all the man to be nominated will be fixed upon by "them fellows in Washington."

Midway News: We have no lack of good gubernatorial material in the republican party. Of those who have quite handsome booklets already launched are Gen. Moses E. Clapp, Joel P. Heatwole, G. S. Pease, Tams Bixby and T. F. McCleary; and if an entirely new man is preferable we might call out Hiram F. Stevens. There is probably not a man in the state who would so solidly unite the party as Mr. Stevens.

Cass Lake Times: Prof. John Moore and wife, of Crookston, were among our noted visitors on Tuesday. Professor and Mrs. Moore have been on a visit to friends in Canada, and were returning to Crookston, but stopped off here a day to see our much-talked-of town. Prof. Moore has been superintendent of the Crookston schools for about four years. Last year he resigned, on account of poor health.

Warren Register: There was quite a family reunion at the home of Mayor Powell on Thursday last, at which were present his mother, Mrs. L. E. Powell, of River Falls, Wis., his sisters, Mrs. A. P. Weld and Mrs. F. Eastin, of River Falls, Mrs. C. M. Gould, of West Superior, and Mrs. N. P. Stone, of Crookston, and his brother, Walter Stone, of Crookston. Mrs. Stone and son and Mrs. Weld returned to Crookston the same day. On Friday Mr. and Mrs. Powell entertained a number of their guests to Crookston and all spent Sunday at Maple Lake.

The Thirteen Towns: Mr. Haus Ekland, one of Fosston's old time merchants and now associated with O. R. Vaaler in the mercantile business, returned one fine day last week from Minneapolis and Iowa with a bride. Several weeks ago Mr. Ekland and Miss Matilda Erickson were quietly united in marriage at Minneapolis and have spent their honeymoon there and at different places in Iowa. Mrs. Ekland already has a number of friends here, having lived here several years ago. Recently she has made her home at Crookston. Although rather late, congratulations and best wishes are sincerely extended to the happy young couple by The Thirteen Towns.

Exchange: We sometimes put on a long face and look as though we hadn't a friend in the world, just because some one has fooled and fleeced something they saw in our paper. But why feel so badly over "spilled milk?" The merchant doesn't please all his customers, the postmaster, too is kicked and cussed because he made mistakes; the station agent is free quently hauled up in the corner by some old woman and given to understand this and that and numerous other things; the barber is censured for his dull razor; the bakeries accused of fraud, some people declare he puts too much wind in his bread; the butcher is forever reminded of his tough meat; the grocer charges poor accounts to good customers so as to "even up," and even the preacher finds it hard work to please all his congregation with his best sermon. The only good person is the one who is doing the kicking.

DEFECTIVE PAGE

THE VIGIL.

Through the long dark I watch and wake
Beside my armor bright,
For morrow's dawning sun shall make
Me, too, a belted knight.

The silent hours drag slow and long;
The chapel floor is cold;
My weary eyes are faint, but strong
My heart to win and hold.

No kin may help, no friend draw nigh,
And all the world's asleep,
For this one night my soul and I
Alone must vigil keep.

Yet through yon oriel's tinted wheel
Of stars a silent throng
Watch over me and wish my weal—
Knights who were brave and strong.

In silver armor clad, like mine,
They throng the blessed field,
Bright on my helm and corselet shine
And bless my sword and shield.

They nobly strove in war's alarms,
They died to keep their vow,
But first they watched to win their arms
As I am watching now.

May their noblesse me, too, inspire,
Who long like them to fight,
When I, who now am but a squire,
Shall rise a belted knight.

—Abbie Farwell Brown in Youth's Companion.

My Vocation.

My name is Arthur Clarence Fitzgerald Mackenzie. I am 25, tall, good looking and a clerk. I am not absolutely miserable, but am nevertheless far from happy.

The cause of my own unhappiness is that I cannot alight upon the particular walk in life in which my abilities are destined to make me famous.

It was my father's great principle that every man is a genius in a particular department, but the chances are a million to one that he never finds that department.

For 50 years he worked at the trade of bootmaking without becoming a penny piece the richer, and it was only on his deathbed that he found he ought to have been a cabinet minister.

My own delusion was that I came into this world for the sole purpose of showing its inhabitants something startling in the detective line.

My opportunity came at last. I was walking down the Strand in that calm, thoughtful manner peculiar to people of great brain power when a passerby looked searchingly into my face. It was only a glance, and he passed on almost immediately, apparently satisfied with his inspection.

I literally jumped with eagerness and delight. The man, although outwardly refined and gentlemanly, had a very striking face.

"That man," said I to myself, "has every indication of being a villain." Then a thrill of excitement ran through me. As he waited ahead I noticed that his ear tapered to a point at the top; it was, in fact, a splendid example of what is known in physiognomy as the criminal ear.

"That man is a villain," said I.

Having come to this rather important conclusion, I immediately formed the idea of following him. First of all, I turned up my coat collar. A detective must not on any account be conspicuous. Now my linen is always white as snow, and therefore necessarily conspicuous.

I then followed my man in a slouching, shuffling way, in order to show people that I had no object in following him. I rounded my shoulders, bowed my head, looked up under my eyebrows with the most approved ferret expressions and followed my quarry with the pertinacity of a bloodhound.

"His general appearance and demeanor," I soliloquized, "are indicative of refinement. He is therefore a gentleman. Being a gentleman, it cannot be his object to perpetrate a common burglary. He has the aspect of a foreigner. Being a foreigner, he may be a Russian, and, being a Russian, he must be a nihilist. Good heavens! The welfare of the populace, the very fate of the dynasty, may be at stake. Perhaps this man carries an infernal machine concealed upon his person. But what is the life of one man to the safety of thousands? I will risk my life for the"—

Here I collided violently with a lamppost. This delayed me for some time, but when I again caught up to my man I was rewarded by perceiving unmistakable signs of criminal communication.

Two or three times I had noticed an individual on the opposite side of the road almost keeping pace with the one I was following. I was rather suspicious of him at first, but when I saw him go into a public house I naturally came to the conclusion that he had dropped out of the chase.

I was wrong, however. A little farther on my man turned back and went into the same house. Now, thought I, as I followed him, the plot thickens.

I found my particular villain sitting at a table reading a newspaper.

For nearly a quarter of an hour I furtively watched them. Then my patience was rewarded. The man who was reading took out a pencil and began scribbling something on the margin of the newspaper.

Presently the man threw the newspaper down by the side of his accomplice and walked out. I did not follow him this time. I felt convinced that he had left behind all I wanted.

I thought of walking over and taking up the paper, but, as I anticipated, before I could do so the other man pounced on it like a hawk. For a few minutes he pretended to read the news, then I saw his eyes sneak to the side of the page and devour the pencil note.

Now this is where I displayed my genius. When the man had read the note, he deliberately tore off the piece, folded it up, stuck it into the gas and lighted his cigarette with it. Like a flash I took out a cigarette, and, walking over to him, said the usual, "After you, please," in the most natural manner.

Apparently he was satisfied with his scrutiny, for he handed me the slip. I lighted my cigarette, put out the paper and threw it on the floor so that it went well under my chair. I then resumed my seat and awaited developments.

A few minutes later the man left, and with my heart in my mouth I picked up the paper and spread it out. Part of the writing was burned, but what remained almost made me yell with triumph. It ran thus:

Attempt will be made tonight
Colonel Lewis' house in approach from back garden in Cardon st.
Black Jake and Ned Sawyer.

That was sufficient for me. It was plain that Colonel Lewis' house was to be the scene of a desperate outrage. Probably the colonel would be murdered and his residence blown up by dynamite. I shook with excitement. It was plain as daylight.

* * * * * * *

When the curtain of night dropped like a stormcloud over the palpitating city (a rather fine phrase), it found me concealed in the shrubbery of Colonel Lewis' garden in Cardon street.

Determined not to be anticipated, I had reached the rendezvous much earlier than was necessary, so I had plenty of time to work out my schemes.

"They will climb that wall," I soliloquized. "They will walk along this flower bed, so as not to make a noise on the gravel, and no doubt the first start will be made on that French window. I will let them go on. The great thing is to catch them in the act. Their object is not plunder. They will burst open the window and go straight up stairs, with Nemesis on their track.

"Then," I continued, "comes the reward of valor—the wreath of laurels, the columns in the newspapers, the universal admiration of my countrymen. I shall be the idol of England, the lion of the age. I shall"—

Something or somebody gripped me suddenly by the back of the neck. Somebody else put his hand over my mouth, and the two together threw me on my back with unnecessary violence.

For a moment I was stunned. When my senses returned and I opened my eyes, I could just discern the sinister features of my friend the villain, who was kneeling spitefully on my chest. The other man was there too. He was holding me by the hair.

"Do you know him, Simpson?" said one.

"No; I've never seen him before that I can recollect."

"Seems a sleepy sort for one of Jake's gang."

A light broke upon me. "Gentlemen," I said, "are you"—

I am sorry to say those few words caused me still more humiliation. They literally jumped on me and finished up by ramming two handkerchiefs into my mouth.

What surprised me most and partly confirmed my suspicions was that one of them procured a pair of handcuffs, with which he decorated my wrists. Having completed this little programme, they both sat on me and with the coolest cheek you can imagine.

After listening to their conversation for a quarter of an hour without being able to join in, I came to the conclusion that I had committed an egregious error. From their remarks I gathered that the two persons whom I had the honor of supporting were not Black Jake and Ned Sawyer, but two detectives from Scotland Yard.

I tried to make them understand that I wished to explain things, but they smiled in a most provoking manner and were not at all kind to me. I tried to think, but my brain was in a whirl. Before I had succeeded in quieting it the excitement of the evening commenced.

A stealthy tread was heard, a slight rustling of the grass, which I should hardly have noticed myself. Two dark forms crept along in the shadow of the wall. They made for the French windows and silently set to work. Two minutes later a pane of glass had been cut out and deposited on the ground.

One minute after that Black Jake and Ned Sawyer were surprised to find themselves looking stupidly down the muzzles of two revolvers of murderous appearance.

"No nonsense, Jake," said my friend of the morning. "You are fairly bowled out this time, my lad. The house is surrounded and I have a dozen men within call."

I managed to get out of it, although circumstances looked so black against me. Detective McFadden and his assistant had noticed me following them. They informed the magistrate that I was more of a fool than a rogue, which opinion my employer, who was called to give evidence as to my character, heartily confirmed.

After this incident I tried many different trades and professions in order to find the one for which I was most suited, but without success.—Tit-Bits.

Isolated Peoples.

Perhaps the most isolated tribe of people in the world is the Tshuktshi, a people occupying the northern portion of the peninsula of Kamchatka and the country northward toward Bering strait. These people are practically independent of Russia, who appears to have reasons of her own for letting them alone. They have practically no communication with the outside world, and have only been visited two or three times—the last time by Major de Windt on his journey through Siberia.

The inhabitants of the New Siberian islands are also practically alone on earth, for they can only communicate with the mainland and therefore with the rest of the world once a year, and a succession of bad seasons might isolate them for years.

The pygmies of the great central African forests, if they can be called a tribe, have also been a people apart. For ages their existence was little more than legendary, and only two expeditions commanded by white men have ever penetrated into their abode.

HER BATTER CAKES.

"ROSE ELLA," said her mother, "Aunt Susan has done sont for me to come an' do her washin' fer dem siminaries, kase she's done got the grippe, an' dem studifyin' preachah's'll go plum wil' ef dey don' git deir buzzum shuts an' collahs fo' Sunday. Some on 'em has to go to Aneyandra (Alexandria) an' some wants to go to Washin'ton. Does yooal reckin you kin git erlong widout me while I'se gone?"

"In co'se, maw," Rose Ella answered, delighted at the prospect of keeping house all by herself. "I ain't done watch you an' hope (help) you all dis time for nuthin."

"Well, I's done put de bakin on to bile, an' you mus' ax yo' pap 'bout a hour by sun befo' 12 o'clock an' drap the cabbige in, an' yo' kin mek some crack lin' scratch-backs fo' to go along wid it."

"All right, maw;" and Rose Ella flew around to "red up" the house before dinner time.

"So yo' maw had a call," remarked her father, while dining. "We don't keer, tho', do we, boys, s'lon's she lef' us seeh a good cook?" And he smacked his lips over the cabbage.

"By the way, Rose Ella," he asked, as he rose from the table, "what you gwine give us fo' suppah?"

"I dunno, pap."

"Mizzes James done give me a pint of 'losses es I come 'way fum dah—sayed they'd done tiahed of it—an' I think 'twould go mighty good on batteh cakes. We's done got de bunghole, now fo' de bar'l. Yere, tek dis five cent an' git dat wuth o' flour fum de sto'. You got som sou' milk an' knows how to ingregiate 'em, I reckin?"

"Suttinly, pap."

So when the "low descending sun" admonished Rose Ella it was nearly supper time she begun to sum up her knowledge of the materials used in batter cakes.

"Le's see—one quart of flouah, one big teasponn of salt, and also sallyratus, one aig, an' milk 'nough for sufficient. I ain't done fo'got a thing, kase maw tol' me always 'membeh five, cep'en I didn't have no aig to go in."

When her father and the boys—a hungry trio—came in the table was set, the coffee boiling furiously and the griddle smoking.

"Whoopee! Hurray!" shouted the boys, conveying the cakes to their plates, from whence they rapidly disappeared. "Mek hase, sis, er you kain't keep up," they warned her. Suddenly their father paused with half a cake suspended on his fork, and said:

"It seems to me they's a quare smell in this yer house to-night, Rose Ella. Am they not?"

"Why, that's a fact, pap," she, sniffing, answered. "I kind o' smelt it a few minutes ago, but was too busy to tek much notice of it. What you reckin it is?"

"Dunno fo' suttin', but pears to me it's someh'n lak gunpowdah."

"Oh, yes; I'll bet them little nigger boys has put a firecracker in my stove," said Rose Ella, accusingly.

"Did you?" sternly inquired their father.

"No, sah, pap," replied the elder. "Nary one," turning to the younger.

"'Deed, no, sah, pap; I'd be feared."

"Maybe it's someh'n outdo's," remarked her father. "I'll go out an' prospect awhile," adding, as he swallowed the last morsel of his twentieth cake: "Yore batteh cakes was rale good, Rose Ella; yore maw hes made lighteh ones dan dese, but dey am putty fair. I reckin yore milk was a little too sou'."

As he stepped outside the kitchen door, which, in a normal colored man's house is generally open summer and winter, he heard his name called, and, turning in the direction of the speaker, saw six or eight men and women (from near-by cabins), all with either handkerchiefs or aprons, shielding their noses.

"Will you please shet yo' do'?" inquired the spokesman.

"What fo'?" in turn questioned Rose Ella's father.

"So's we all kaint cotch dot retajus (contagious) zease."

"Which?"

"I dunno; I's axin' you now. Am it smallpox aw vallyloid (varioloid)?"

"Vally nuthin'! We all ain't sick; ef you'ils seed us shublin' down de batteh cakes to suppeh you'd think so."

"Go 'way now! Whut you runnigatin' fo', den?"

"Well, dat am a mysterous. It do seem lak it, I'll remit, but taint we done it, any way."

"Maybe it were a ha'nt," suggested one of the women. The children, who had followed their father outside, positively grew two shades lighter at this, and crept close to their father.

At this moment the terrifying situation was relieved by the return of his wife.

"What you all havin' in my presence while I's gone?" she demanded; "a s'prise pawty?" and without waiting for a reply she stepped into the house, calling back: "Come in, all on you; room fo'—my soul an' body! what in de name of peace am you got in yere, ol' man?" and she quickly sought the outer air.

"Ooman, wish't I could tell yer," gravely answered her husband, "but I kain't; we's hol'in a commocation on the subjec' now. Some says maybe," in a lower tone, "it am a cunjah spell."

"But his wife, less superstitious than many of her race, scorned this idea.

"I gwine sif de bottom uv dis mattah, fo' I b'lieve dat, anyhow," she declared, reentering the kitchen, and opening the windows.

"Rose Ella," she called, "why fo' am you bunnin' up my batteh cake griddle?" snatching it from the stove.

"'Deed, maw, it got so strong in yere I had to run."

"An' did you hev hoe cakes fo' suppah?"

"No, maw, batteh cakes."

"Batteh cakes! whah'd you git de flou' an' sallyratus fum to go in um?"

"He buyed the flour, an' I got the sallyratus outen the box whah you always keeps it."

"'Deed you didn't den, fo' I done use up de las' yistday, an' fo'got to git mo'. Git de box you use fum, an' lemme see whut kin' o' tomfoolness you done."

Rose Ella timidly obeyed. By this time, the air being somewhat cleaner, the people in the yard, to satisfy their curiosity, ventured nearer, and crowded the doorway and windows.

"Well, I does think in de sole of my foot!" exclaimed her mother, grabbing the box from the child's hand, "if de gal ain't done riz de cakes wid sulphur!"

During the shout of laughter that followed this revelation Rose Ella sobbed in her mother's apron.

"Dah, now, honey, nemmine; 'tain't gwine to hu't. Sulphah am mouty clarifyin' to the blood; it'll do yooall good, on'y if it rains tomorry you bes' stay in de house. No wondah you mistooken it, fo' tware in de same kin' o' box, an' de same colah by night.

"Hush, now, an' I'll give you someh'n nice when I gits my wash' money."

At this gracious promise Rose Ella consented to dry her tears, but the little boys have learned to be very careful about mentioning "Rose Ella's Batter Cakes."

ARCTIC EXPEDITION.

Party to Start on Journey for Scientific Investigation.

Dr. Robert Stein, of the United States Geodetic Survey, Will Lead the Expedition—Will Sail on the Hope.

A thoroughly equipped expedition is about to start to explore a corner of the frozen north. Its object will be that of scientific investigation.

Dr. Robert Stein, of the United States geodetic survey, with two well-known scientists will embark from Sydney, N. S., on July 20 for an extended exploration of the west coast of Ellesmere Land. They will go in the Hope, which has done much service in the arctic regions and is one of the ships of the Peary expeditions.

The Hope will take supplies to Peary at Bowdoin bay. She will return in September, but Dr. Stein and his companions will be left at Cape Sabine. The scientists who are going with Dr. Stein are a taxidermist from Boston and a physicist and naturalist from Cornell university. The party will establish a station at Alexandria Haven, 30 miles west of Cape Sabine. They have supplies for two years and do not expect to return until September, 1900.

The main object of the expedition will be to trace the west coast of Ellesmere Land. Collections will be made in natural history, the geological features will be studied, meteorological observations will be taken, dredgings will be made if possible in the surrounding seas and Esquimau remains investigated and collected. Collections will also be made in botany, which has never been attempted before.

The party will take from ten to fifteen dogs from Greenland and use them to draw sleds. They hope to make short trips in the vicinity of Cape Sabine in the spring of 1900 in pneumatic boats, made of rubber and inflated on the same principle as bicycle tires. There are four air and water-tight compartments in each, and if three of these should be punctured the one remaining would be sufficient to keep the boat and its occupants afloat.

A house will be taken along to be erected at some point in the vicinity of Cape Sabine.

Dr. Stein has been a student of arctic scientific phenomena for more than ten years. On a former occasion he organized an expedition for the rescue and relief of Bjorling and Kallstenius, young Swedish naturalists, who were lost in the arctic regions, in the very portion of Ellesmere Land which it is intended to explore.

Russian Town Refuses to Give Contract for Water Pipe—Unbusinesslike Methods.

A queer mixture of international politics and business is reported to the state department by United States Consul Heenan at Odessa, Russia. He says that through the ambassador at St. Petersburg the French government asked to have a contract for the supply of a large quantity of iron water pipe taken from an American firm and given to a French firm on the ground that the close relationship existing between Russia and France entitled them to favors of this kind. The Russian foreign office took the matter up and the governor of Odessa was directed to see what could be done. He was obliged to report that the town refused to change their arrangements, being satisfied with their contract with the Americans, whose pipe was better and cheaper. It was also pointed out that the specifications called for pipe of a certain quality and shape which the French could not make. The ambassador requested that the specifications be altered to suit the French pipe, but the town declined for the reason that the best engineering skill favored the American shape.

The consul transmits specifications of the proposed waterworks for the town of Nicolaiev, which he desires brought to the attention of American firms with a view to their bidding.

SYNOPSIS.

Chapter I.—Tom Scott, a New England farmhand, decides to go to Klondike in search for gold. In Boston he rescues a Mr. Avery from footpads, and, as his new acquaintance is also going to Klondike, he asks Tom to accompany him, and the invitation is accepted. They take passage on the Seabird, a sailing vessel bound for Frisco.

CHAPTER II.

TOM MEETS AN OLD ENEMY.

When Tom Scott awoke the following morning his side was stiff and sore, but by the time he had dressed and made his way downstairs he had almost forgotten the wound in the realization of the fact that the way had been miraculously opened for him to reach the gold region.

He found the old miner waiting for him in the smoking-room, and as he entered the latter arose and greeted him heartily, saying:

"Good morning, Scott. How is the side to-day? Pretty sore, isn't it? My headpiece is rather tender, too, from the clip I got, but they'll both have time to heal before the voyage is over. Come on, let's get a good square meal and then we'll go down to the vessel. I hope she'll be ready to sail to-day. All my stuff's been on board for a week now. You'll want a few duds, too, I dare say, for the trip."

After a hearty meal the two men proceeded to the wharf, and as they reached the scene of the previous night's struggle the elder was asked, quietly:

"Will never forget this place as long as I live. If those rascals had only dreamed what I carried with me they'd have finished their bloody work and I'd have been down there."

As he spoke he pointed significantly toward the leg warmer in the dock and then added:

The money was nothing, however. He looked off suddenly and led the way in silence until they reached the vessel, where the captain, garbed in old salt, was pacing the deck and urging the stevedores to greater efforts.

The Seabird was a trim built craft of about 600 tons. The cook was flying about the deck in his white apron, the second mate was hard at work below, and as the two men stepped on board the captain said, cheerily:

"Good morning, Mr. Avery. We're about ready, you see. The wind is fair, and if nothing happens we'll be under way by dinner time. The mate has gone back on me and I've sent after another man."

In a few words the miner informed the old seadog of his adventure the preceding evening, adding:

"This is Mr. Thomas Scott, who saved my life. If it hasn't been for him you'd have called to-day on my widow and now you've got to take him too. He'll pay the same as I do, and share my stateroom. Is it a bargain?"

"He's welcome," was the curt reply, "as long as he's to bunk in with you. I've no other spare berth."

"Good," exclaimed Avery. "Come on, Scott, we'll have to hurry up and get your stuff."

Tom's companion was an old traveler, and knew exactly what was required for the voyage, as well as where to obtain it, and when the tug came alongside at noon our hero had a well-filled chest of clothing below, and stood on deck watching the operation of getting under way.

"Make that hawser fast lively!" shouted a harsh voice near him, and Tom turned to see a short, thickset man, hustling about and cursing the sailors roundly. His face was tanned even, but there was something familiar in his bearing, and Tom was wondering at this when Capt. Collin shouted:

"Let the men get their dinner while we are towing down, Mr. Rider."

"Aye, aye, sir."

Tom started as if he had been shot. He saw the mate turn towards the poop deck as he replied and knew he was no mistaking his features. The red face, bushy beard and brutal mouth could belong to none other than Rider's old enemy, Obed Rider, who had brought the story of Capt. Scott's flight to Merrivale. If any further proof was needed, his broken nose, which added to the repulsiveness of his appearance, was noticeable at the first glance.

As he caught sight of Tom he stopped as if rooted to the deck and uttered an exclamation of amazement, for the recognition was mutual. Then an evil light blazed in his eyes and he bounded towards Tom, hissing through his set teeth:

"How came you aboard this craft?"

His fists were clenched, but he paused before reaching striking distance, for four years had developed Tom Scott from a lanky boy into a tall, muscular man, and the same outnumbered spirit now looked boldly into the other's eyes.

The captain and the old miner were both below at the moment, the former having gone to his dinner, after giving his last order, and the chief officer stood glaring at Tom like an enraged animal. He had been shipped at the last moment and had no knowledge of why passengers on board, supposing Tom must have been engaged as a common sailor.

"What are you doin' of on that quarter deck?" he demanded, as Tom made no reply to his first question. "What's the matter with you? Open your mouth or I'll open it for you! What are you doing here?"

"None of your business," replied Tom, finding his tongue at last.

"I'll make it my business blimed quick!" cried the infuriated officer, his eyes snapping as he thought of the long voyage ahead and his power to take his revenge tenfold on one under his authority.

"Get forward where you belong," he shouted.

Tom understood now what was passing in the other's mind, but determined not to undeserve the mate in order that he might deal with him all the more crushing when made known.

"I won't stir a peg for you. Obed Rider," he replied, "and if you are not careful I will make your face look worse than I think I was a boy. What bad luck brought you here I don't know, but I warn you to keep clear from me!"

The mate's face on the mate's face was fairly fiendish as he snatched up iron belaying pin from the rife rail and rushed at Tom, crying:

"You won't stir, eh! Curse you, I'll show you the difference between afloat and ashore!"

But his blow was arrested in mid air by an iron grip about his wrist and the words was torn from his hand instantly. He found himself pressed against the mizenmast with a force that nearly took his breath away, while Tom said sternly:

"Don't try that with me again or I'll pitch you overboard!"

As he spoke he released the mate, who sprang for the cabin steps, his face crimson with passion, shouting:

"Mutiny! Mutiny! I'll have your life for this!"

He had reached the head of the steps when Capt. Collin appeared on the scene, attracted by the mate's loud tones.

"What's the trouble here?" he demanded, as the officer tried to push by him on the steps.

"It's mutiny, sir!" was the angry reply. "Will till I get my pistol, and I'll soon settle it!"

The captain looked about him in surprise. Tom stood alone on the quarter deck, and the whole matter was inexplicable unless the new mate was crazy, a thought which found ample justification in his disordered appearance.

"Mutiny?" he repeated contemptuously. "See here, if you've been drinking, Mr. Rider, don't let it happen again. I see make allowance for sailing day, but see it doesn't happen again!"

"I am as sober as you are," was the curt reply. "That man shared Tim Scott's weight! He refused to obey me, and I'll see whether I am mate of this ship or not!"

With one stride the captain reached his side and thrust his visage within an face close to the mate's, giving him a look before which the other quailed.

"Look you!" he said, sharply. "When you speak to me remember I have a handle to my name, and see you put it on every time! You must be drunk!"

The mate looked from one to the other as if he could not believe his own hearing. What did it mean? Why did the skipper refuse to side with him and allow Tom to stand there unabused after assaulting his superior officer?

Seeing he could do nothing but glare at Tom the skipper turned to the latter and said, coolly:

"It's next to impossible to get a sober man nowadays. The best seamen all seem to make it a business to keep drunk all the time they are ashore. After they get out to sea they are all right."

"Capt. Collin," said the mate, stepping forward, "I have not touched a drop of liquor to-day. I ordered this man to go forward and he resisted me."

"Ordered him forward! Well, that's a good one!" And the captain broke into a hearty chuckle. "Why, bless me, he of course you didn't know! Mr. Scott is a passenger on the Seabird and is goin' to Frisco with us. He's another down below, a Mr. Avery. Make you acquainted with Mr. Scott, Mr. Scott, this is my mate, Mr. Rider. It's all my fault, not telling him you was aboard. Kinder funny, wasn't it?"

"We don't need any introduction," said Tom, quietly. "I have known Obed Rider a long time. I don't know any good of him, either."

Capt. Collin was surprised, but he asked no questions, preferring to wait until he could see Tom alone. The mate bit his lip in baffled rage as he saw his prey not only rescued from his power, but placed in a position where he must be treated with outward respect at least. He turned on his heel and went forward, vowing vengeance between his breath, but not daring to show his feeling further before the captain.

"So you know my mate?" then asked the captain.

"I knew him years ago," replied Tom, "and we had some trouble. It doesn't matter what it was about, but his nose got broken, and he hates me as hard as I do him. He may be a good sailor, however, and no doubt he is. He used to sail with my father."

A lull from the tug saved Tom any further explanation, and as the captain hustled off to reply Avery came out of the cabin and joined his roommate, who told him briefly about the recent trouble, making no mention of the original cause of the enmity between himself and Rider, for the charge against his father was too sore a subject to pass his lips.

By the time dinner was over the vessel was well down the harbor. When Boston light was reached the westerly wind began to freshen, and the sails stood full. Lines were hastily cast off, the tug's whistle gave a short blast as a parting salute, and, with a graceful nod of her shaky bow to return, the bark shot toward the open water, with every square inch of canvas pulling at the sheets, and the captain rubbing his horny palms with delight at the prospect of a fine departure.

John Avery was no old sailor, and the motion of the vessel caused him no inconvenience, but Tom was soon stretched in his bunk, where he remained the better part of two days, while the Seabird flew along before the favorable gale in a manner which did not belie her name.

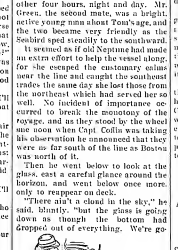
When he managed to get on deck Cape Cod was more than 300 miles astern, and already the weather was beginning to grow milder. A few days more made him completely well, and long before the equator was reached he had acquired quite a professional roll and felt perfectly at home.

Of the mate he saw very little, as the latter stood watch and watch with the second officer, being on deck every other four hours, night and day. Of the Green, the second mate, was a bright, active young man about Tom's age, and the two became very friendly as the Seabird sped steadily to the southward.

It seemed as if old Neptune had made no extra effort to help the vessel along, for she escaped the customary calms near the line and caught the southeast trades the same day she lost them from the northeast which had served her so well. No incident of importance occurred to break the monotony of the voyage, and as they stood by the wheel one noon when Capt. Collin was taking his observation he announced that they were 20 south of the line as Boston was north of it.

Then he went below to look at the chart, cast a careful glance around the horizon, and went below once more, only to reappear on deck.

"There ain't a cloud in the sky," he said, bluntly, "but the glass is going down as though the bottom had dropped out of everything. We're going to catch it, as sure as my name is Seth Collin. My glass never lied to me yet."



"I'll show you the difference between afloat and ashore."

Gradually the wind died out, until the Seabird lay becalmed, rising and falling on the swell, but the sky remained clear. The barometer continued to fall in an alarming manner, and after an hour the heat became oppressive.

Then from all quarters of the horizon a mass of white clouds arose, until they presented the appearance of huge mountains of snow, darkening as they ascended, and massing together until they formed a solid canopy overhead.

The mate looked from one to the other as if he could not believe his own ears. What did it mean? Why did the skipper refuse to side with him and allow Tom to stand there unabused after assaulting his superior officer?

Seeing he could do nothing but glare at Tom the skipper turned to the latter and said, coolly:

Then from all quarters of the horizon a mass of white clouds arose, until they presented the appearance of huge mountains of snow, darkening as they ascended, and massing together until they formed a solid canopy overhead.

Suddenly, far above the mast heads, sounded an unearthly scream, as if the storm demons had united in sounding the knell of the sails hung idly, and not a breath of air could be felt.

Then in the far distance a long, bright streak suddenly illuminated the horizon, increasing with marvelous rapidity until all could see what seemed to be an endless line of rolling clouds. It was impossible to bring the vessel's head up to meet the danger without wind, and she lay helpless in the path of rolling unenshy about on the disturbed sea.

And now the roar of the storm could be heard as the line of foam swept on over the darkened sea with frightful velocity. Louder and louder came the noise, and the surface of the water behind the advancing line was like a vast sheet of snow flattened down by the force of the wind.

Nearer and nearer came the ghastly line, while every man stood at his post in silence. Suddenly the captain roared:

"Hard up your wheel! Hard up!"

The two men who grasped the spokes had barely time to obey the order when, with shriek of wind and a rush of rolling water, the white line struck the bark and pressed her over until one heeds touched the surface to leeward. The storm staysail and mainsail were rent to ribbons, but the head sail held, and, as the smash had already righted, this caused her to pay slowly off, and she gathered headway at the same time. Slowly at first and then with increasing speed she bounded along before the hurricane.

Then the sun began to rise in all its majesty. The masses of water swept in wild waves before the hurricane, their crests blowing off into spray as they met the full force of the wind. After several efforts the crew succeeded in lowering a few inches of the foretopsail, and for awhile this held safely. Then came a stronger puff than usual, and the sail was torn bodily from the bolt-ropes, disappearing in the gloom like some huge white bird.

There was nothing to be done but run before the gale, and after securing the mate and half the crew below, the captain advised Tom and Avery to retire, which they did, somewhat reassured by the collected bearing of the skipper, who seemed to take it all as a matter of course, especially as the wind was sending his vessel just where he wished to go.

In this manner three days and nights passed, until it seemed to Tom that the gale was made up of wind, waves and darkness.

On the fourth morning the wind began to abate and the sun appeared, enabling the captain to ascertain his position. He found that the Seabird had made 11 knots an hour during the entire period since the storm struck her which caused his satisfaction to show itself in his round face unmistakably.

Sail was now made, and ten days later the Seabird was sailing proudly on the bosom of the Pacific, having rounded Cape Horn with the "greatest slant of wind" the old skipper had ever experienced. The vessel's head was pointed to the north, and Tom began to count the days before they could hope to reach San Francisco.

SALARIES IN THE NAVY.

Admiral Dewey by the New Schedule Will Receive $13,500 Whether on Sea or on Shore Duty.

The navy department has issued a circular fixing the salaries of navy officers under the recent personnel bill.

Admiral Dewey will receive $13,500 whether on duty at sea or on shore. The senior rear admiral will get $9,000 at $7,500 at sea and $6,375 on shore. Rear Admiral Schley is in this list, but only receives the minimum amount, as he is assigned to shore duty. The junior rear admiral receives $5,500 while on sea duty and $4,675 on shore. Rear Admiral Sampson is in the junior list, but having a request for sea, receives the maximum pay.

Should Schley be given an assignment at sea he would receive $2,000 more a year than Sampson, but as it is his pay amounts to but $875 more.

Captains receive $3,500 at sea and $2,975 on shore.

Melodious Landgrave.

The landgrave of Hesse is an accomplished violinist and a perfect boor as well, albeit that he is blind. He gave an exhibition of his musical ability in the big hotel of the Grand Hermitage, Paris, the other day, his audience being various distinguished guests, a lot of royal highnesses, imperial highnesses and ducal highnesses, great ladies from the Faubourg and the cream of foreign society.

FLOWERS FOR OLD STAMPS.

How the Women of St. Mark's Episcopal Church in Chicago Get Altar Decorations.

One church congregation in Chicago collects 40,000 stamps—letters—stamps every week, and 1,200,000 in a year. This is St. Mark's Episcopal church, corner Cottage Grove avenue and Thirty-sixth street. These stamps are sold to a dorist for eight cents a thousand, and in return she furnishes flowers for the altar every Sunday. For a long time the committee of ladies in charge of the church were always discouraged at the small appropriation for the purchase of flowers, and one of them hit upon the plan of selling old postage stamps. Enthusiasm was communicated to the Sunday school pupils. They visited offices of vestrymen and prominent church members downtown and got them to save the postage stamps on their correspondence. Ladies of the church began to carry on correspondence and friends corresponded for the sake of accumulating canceled postage stamps, and the habit is now general, says the Inter Ocean.

"Why, I'd as soon think of throwing away our furs as to waste old postage stamps," said one.

The stamps at first were coated, but now an arrangement has been made with the florist to take them by weight. It is said that they are purchased by Cortege Grove avenue florist at the big quality of the material used by Uncle Sam for stamps they make over into an excellent kind of paper.

The establishment of a large and beautiful park at Mount Pleasant, the old historic home spot of Gen. U. S. Grant, is now engaged in consultation for the prominent and influential citizens of Clermont county, O. An effort will be made as soon as congress convenes to have it appropriate enough money to purchase 400 acres of the land, the purchase to include Gen. Grant's birthplace and the surrounding neighborhood. If the purchase is made the site will be beautified by the creation of numerous fine buildings, the planting of various kinds of trees, grading, etc. Chicago capitalists have made several unsuccessful attempts to purchase the proposed site for a private park.

THE GLADNESS THAT IS BEST.

I would not always have it fair,
I would not have but summer days;
He that is never bowed with care
Must walk in unnerved ways.

The disappointments men must learn
To bear before their fortunes turn
Make doubly sweet the critic's praise.

Did she but smile day after day
And ever wait your beck and call,
Your love for her would melt away,
The idol you have raised would fall!

The tender look that follows when
She weeps and sees her tears again
Is always sweetest, after all.

The patient toys that lie around
In restless hours upon the floor
Were put away awhile—you found
No sweet one waiting at the door!

But Death was cheated of his prey,
And he whose shouts you hear to-day
Is dearer than he was before.

I would not have it always fair,
Nor always walk in easy ways;
A fearful cloud alone would scare
To listen always unto praise!

For I hear in heaven are lilies that
And know the gladness that is best
Toiling, too, must be sung among days

Mr. Phineas Marvell

MRS. HYDE kept boarders. Mrs. Hyde was a little, dried-up widow, with a constitutional toothache and a mild, meek way of taking the world as it came to her. For 30 years she had battled against misfortune until the warfare had become second nature to her.

"But there's one blessing that I have to be thankful for," she would say. "Mr. Marvell has kept true to me through it all as the needle to the pole."

From this it need not be inferred that Mr. Marvell was a lover of the little widow. Far from it. He was only her best boarder—the boarder who for half a score of years had occupied her "first floor front," and paid his bills as regularly as the Saturday night sun came around.

He was a bachelor, as may be supposed—a man who was as full of whims and eupirees as an egg is of meat, yet who carried a kindly heart in his bosom beneath it all.

But on this special Friday morning he was blazed wrathfully—the fire in his nose hung forth a crimson flag of indignation, as Mrs. Hyde came meekly into his presence.

"A month's warning, ma'am," was all that he said.

Mrs. Hyde caught at the nearest chair for support.

"Mr. Marvell!" she gasped.

"Now, ma'am, it isn't at all worth while to go through any scenes," said the boarder, callously, "I am a practical man, as you ought to know by this time. And I'm not in the habit of wasting words. Put up a bill. Advertise. Let your room as soon as you can, for I move out to-morrow, although, as a token of respect for your many good qualities, I shall pay my bills up to the first of June."

"La, Mr. Marvell!" faintly ejaculated the widow. "How can I possibly have offended you?"

"Ask your own conscience, ma'am!" sternly retorted Mr. Marvell.

"Because if it's on account of Patty and her babies—"

"It's precisely on that account, ma'am. I was roused last night by the screaming of a child."

"It's cutting eye-teeth, poor dear," interposed Mrs. Hyde.

"And this morning, on making inquiries, 'relentlessly went on the bachelor, 'I learned that you had actually taken in your widowed niece and her twin babies. Twins, ma'am! One would have been enough—too much, in fact—but when it comes to twins—"

"Patty had none here else to go, sir," said Mrs. Hyde, despitefully, "and she'll be useful about the house. Patty's a good girl, sir!"

"I dare say," said Mr. Marvell. "But I can't stay in the same house with babies. As I before remarked, put up a bill as soon as you please."

"Please, sir, I'll put Patty and the children on the top floor, where they can't possibly disturb you, if—"

"I tell you once for all, ma'am, that I don't tolerate children, and I won't! Will you be kind enough to leave me now?"

So Mrs. Hyde went downstairs to burst into tears, back of the pantry door, where Patty Smith, with one twin in her arms, and the other and the cat swarming over the floor, like a magnificent trio, was beating eggs for the dinner custard.

"Aunty, what's the matter?" demanded Patty, still whisking vigorously away at the custard.

"He's going, my dear."

"Who? Mr. Marvell?"

"Yes."

"Well, let him go, aunty," said Patty, cheerfully. She was a dimpled, pretty little lady, with pleasant black eyes, and black hair, parted low on her forehead—not quite 20, in spite of her widowhood and her twins! "It's a cheerful room—you'll soon fill up the vacancy."

"But not with such a man as Phineas Marvell," groaned Mrs. Hyde. "O, Patty, you don't know him!"

"I know he must be a crusty old piece, aunty, or he never would object to the dear, darling little babies," said Patty, with a loving glance at the twins. "Don't fret now, there's a dear! It'll all come right, see if it don't. I'll write an advertisement myself and take it down to the newspaper office this afternoon."

So Mr. Marvell packed up his goods and left, and Mrs. Hyde cried.

"It seems such a pity," said she, "after ten years!"

"Don't mind it, auntie," said the courageous Patty. "I'm sure he must be a selfish creature, or he never would serve you so."

Hardly a month had elapsed when a sour-visaged woman came to the Hyde house and requested an audience with the mistress thereof.

"You know of old Marvell, I suppose?" said she.

"I know Mr. Phineas Marvell," answered Mrs. Hyde, with dignity.

"Well, it's all the same," returned the lady of the acidulated countenance. "He's boarded at our house three weeks and four days. He's down with the small-pox."

"O, my!" ejaculated Mrs. Hyde. "Poor, dear soul. And who takes care of him?"

"That's just the question," said the visitor. "I can't. I've got my family, as never has had the smallpox, to think of—and the other boarders has all cleared out, and the doctor don't know of no one as would be willing to undertake the risk. Perhaps you could some?"

Mrs. Hyde visibly recoiled.

"N—no!" she answered. "I would rather not. As you say yourself, it's a great risk to run, and—"

But Patty Smith, who had listened in silence heretofore, stepped forward.

"I'll go, aunty," said she, "if you'll take care of the twins. I have had the smallpox. I am not afraid of it."

"But Patty, I thought you disliked Mr. Marvell so much!"

"I did," said Patty, with a smile and a shrug of her shoulders, "but it isn't worth while to think of that now. He is sick and solitary, and he is a fellow-creature. That is enough for me."

And Patty packed her little bundle, kissed the peachy mountainous cheeks of the twins, and went on her mission like a new variety of Soeur de Charite.

What a disconsolate scene was that in the sick-room to which by Mr. Marvell, tossing on a bed of sickness. A fireless grate, undraped windows, through which the sun beat with merciless brilliancy; dust in every spot on which dust could possibly alight, and pillow and bed linen a week old.

"I'll soon set all these matters straight," said Patty, moving around with the quick decision that was natural to her. And within half an hour the scene had assumed a more homelike look, even to the staring, unconscious eyes of the delirious man.

"Who are you? A angel?" he asked, lowering his voice to a whisper.

"No," she answered, smiling to herself. "It's Patty."

"Don't leave me," he urged. "It's dreadful to be left alone."

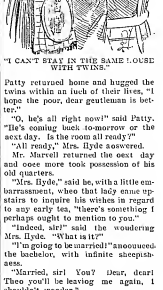
"No," she answered. "I won't."

Phineas Marvell lay ill for a month—and with slow recovery came a sense of all that Patty Smith had done for him.

"I'll tell you what," said the doctor, on the day that he made his last professional visit, "if it hadn't been for Mrs. Smith you would have been snugly under the sod twelve feet of mahogany boards by this time, my friend."

"I know it," Mr. Marvell answered.

"Well," said Mrs. Hyde, when at last



"I CAN'T STAY IN THE SAME HOUSE WITH TWINS."

Patty returned home and hugged the twins within an inch of their lives, "I hope the poor, dear gentleman is better."

"O, he's all right now!" said Patty, "and is coming back to-morrow or the next day. Is the room all ready?"

"All ready," Mrs. Hyde answered.

Mr. Marvell returned the next day and once more took possession of his old quarters.

Mrs. Hyde, "said he, with a little embarrassment, when that lady came upstairs to inquire his wishes in regard to any early tea, "there's something" perhaps ought to mention to you."

"Indeed, sir!" said the wondering Mrs. Hyde. "What is it?"

"I'm going to be married!" announced the bachelor, with infinite sheepishness.

"Married, sir! You?" Dear, dear! There you'll be leaving me again, I shouldn't wonder."

"Not necessarily, Mrs. Hyde," said he, "for I and my future wife will get along comfortably together."

"Indeed, sir!"

"For I'm going to marry—Patty."

"Patty?" echoed Mrs. Hyde.

"Yes, Patty!"

"And how about the twins?" demanded the amazed matron.

"Ah!" he twirled, Hyde, are the dearest little creatures in the world!"

And, improbable as it may seem, Mr. Marvell really believed as if he believed what he said.

It was all true. He did marry Patty—and he was proud of his pretty, eager little wife, and still more proud, stranger to say, of the twins!

"I wouldn't believe it unless I'd seen it with my own eyes," said Mrs. Hyde. "He never could endure children afore! But I'm as pleased as Punch for Patty's sake!"

And Patty and her middle-aged husband were severely happy together.—N. Y. Daily News.

A Threat That Was Not Acted Upon.

Lady—What! Willy Green, you here playing on Sunday? I shall tell your father just as soon as I see him.

Willie Green—Well, you won't have to wait long. There he comes now. He has been back in the woods diggin' bait!—Puck.

WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN might induce Aguinaldo to become his running mate for presidential honors next year.

WE are a little late in publishing the JOURNAL this week owing to the time taken in putting together our new Optimus power press, and our local and editorial news is very light also, for that reason.

THE trouble in the Transvaal in South Africa is daily becoming more serious. England is determined that the Outlanders within "Oom Paul's" dominions shall be given what she considers are their rights and it is possible that war may result.

In another column we print the new rules adopted last Saturday by the board of appeals for the grain inspection department. They are of interest to all grain growers, handlers of grain and elevator men. Read them carefully and keep a copy for reference in case of need.

THE Lake Carriers' Association, controlling 90 per cent of the shipping interests of the Great Lakes, has advanced wages on lake vessels 40 per cent. The advance is to take effect Aug. 15. This is the greatest advance in wages ever made by the lake carriers. It is not made in response to threats of any strike, but simply because men are scarce.

REV. J. N. KILDAHL has been elected and has accepted the presidency of St. Olaf College, Northfield, Minn., a place to which he was elected by the united Norwegian Lutheran church of America. President Kildahl is 42 years of age. He is a graduate of Luther College and studied theology at Madison, Wis. His pastoral duties were in Southern Minnesota charges, but for the past ten years he has been in one of the most prominent congregations in Chicago. He is a good thinker, a close student of human nature and a very forcible and eloquent speaker.

THE State Fair is one of the annual events that every farmer ought to take in. It represents largely the very interests which he cares most for, in fact there is nothing outside of the amusement features that he is not familiar with and as for the amusement features, he can take the boys and girls to enjoy them with him. He can be assured that they will be entertaining and exciting and at the same time worthy of the state and the occasion. There will not be a single feature at the fair which will not well repay a day's study and the amusements will fill up the evenings agreeably.

AT the request of the Stock Breeders' Association the managers of the State Fair have decided to offer the same premiums for either beef or dairy breeds of grade cattle as are offered for the full blood breeds. This class for grades and common cattle was made especially to encourage the farmer who is not a breeder of full blood cattle, but who is trying to grade his herd up to a high standard of excellence. The professional breeders will be shut out of this class. The premiums are liberal and it is hoped that the action of the managers will bring out a large show of farmers' cattle. The premium list, giving full particulars can be had by calling at this office, or it will be sent to any address by Secretary Randall, Hamline, Minn.

In another column of the JOURNAL will be found the ordinance regarding the steam beating plant, and also a letter from Alderman E. D. Childs, explaining his action in the matter at the meeting of the council last Tuesday night. We have always deemed it good policy to investigate and consider well any action that may in future time prove detrimental to a city's interests. It is probable that at the meeting of the city fathers next Tuesday evening further discussion will be entered upon by the council and citizens upon this subject. The steam heating plant might prove beneficial to the city but it is certainly wise to move slowly in the matter of granting a perpetual franchise to any company particularly to one about which little is known.

—Dr. Robert Forbes, presiding elder of the Duluth district, will lecture on Abraham Lincoln at Argyle next Saturday evening. One week from tomorrow night he will hold the fourth Quarterly Conference of the Methodist church of this city. This will be the last official meeting of the church before the Annual Conference which convenes in Minneapolis during the first week in October.

Benefit Band Concert.

A benefit concert will be given Friday evening next for the band of the city. The proceeds will be used to purchase uniforms for the boys. Some of them have been obliged to borrow suits from the lieutenant every time they go away to play. The program will consist of band and orchestral music. Prof. Hilgen will favor the audience with a cornet and a violin solo. Miss Gertrude Gleason sings two numbers. The overture of the opera house have given free use of their building and it is earnestly hoped that the citizens will show an interest by attending this concert. Tickets 25 and 35c each.

STANDARD VARIETIES.

Why Farmers Should Select Their Poultry from Breeds Known to Be Satisfactory.

T. F. McGraw, in the Reliable Poultry Journal, sounds the note of alarm by asking this pertinent question: "Will we ever perfect a few good varieties, or will we continue to drift into new?" This is, indeed, a serious question and one of vital importance to practical poultry breeders everywhere, comments the Southwestern Farmer. The question plainly stated is, will we retain the practical features of poultry culture or drift into exclusive fancy?

In the past decade there have been many new varieties introduced, and among them all there are none which, more good qualities, or that have proven more profitable to the practical breeders than those we had before. If all the effort and money spent booming new breeds had been directed toward the improvement of the old varieties it might not be necessary now for breeders to went to remove color and other disqualifications from the standard. They practically admit they cannot breed them true and want authority to conform the standard to their flock.

It is true that many who are merely "fanciers" have made money from new varieties, but there are none who have succeeded in bringing more desirable points than existed in the old breeds.

Brown Leghorns are superior in every practical interest to any fancy selection of breeds from the old standard varieties and thus avoid the trouble that will surely follow in attempting to breed any of the new additions to anywhere near the standard requirements.

Let us perfect a few varieties first, increase their laying qualities and size, and greater profits will be realized than from any other course.

We are now neglecting breeds which have merit and looking for something of no real or essential value, from a practical standpoint.

PACKING-BOX COOPS.

They Are Strong and If Properly Built Are Sure to Last for Many Years to Come.

Tp a large packing box on one side, making the open space or original top the front. Nail boards, a, across this space half very down, letting the top boards, b, extend nearly to the bottom of the top edge of the box, and several inches beyond the ends. Nail a similar one, c, on the back, leaving this a couple of inches above the top. Two side boards, d, are now added, sawed slanting to make a smooth slope between the front and back for the roof. As they are six inches beyond the ends of the box, it forms a protection from the weather, besides leaving space for ventilation, while no strength of value to the interior a square must be sawed from the top of the box before the roof is put on, as this top floor has been left whole. This makes the ventilation good without danger of leaks, and the roof is now added.

Returning to the unboarded space in front, we nail a strip four inches wide down the center and tack fine wire netting, f, over one side. A second strip is put over the first to cover the edge of the netting, and to leave room for a groove for the sliding door, g, on the other side. This may be either of wood or a skeleton frame made and covered with netting. A groove must be made in the box for the other side of the slide. Nearly all the boxes come with well-stayed corners, so this is not difficult.

Paint the outside, roof and all, to prevent the cracks from spreading. Or the roof may be covered with roofing paper or oilcloth still with tarred paper, which will last a season or two. These boxes vary somewhat in size, but they will hold from 15 to 25 chickens till they are pretty well grown, and as they are strong and well built they will last many years. — Orange Judd Farmer.

JUST A WOMAN'S WAY.

"SHE SAID," observed Tomlin, as he handed the card, "that it you were out, she had nothing much to do today, and should want only you came in."

The editor winced about as he does with an impatient gesture of annoyance. Why should the rabble annoy him at a time when he was interested in a book, one of the few really interesting ones on his table? It was more than any one second expert of him to see him at work at once, and he was on the point of bidding her wait, if she chose, but with the assurance that the delay would be a long one, when he noticed the card.

The lady-in-waiting had written on her card: "About a story. Urgent."

"She hasn't got the copy with her?"

"Not unless it's in her pocket."

"Well," said the editor, with an air of saintly resignation, "tell her that I'm very busy, but if she can say what she wants in five minutes, I'll see her."

Wearily he removed his feet from the table, put on his coat, threw the remainder of his cigarette into the fireplace, opened the window, secreted the copy of Notre Campagne that he had been reading, and set to work on a pile of proofs. By that time Tomlin had returned, announcing Miss Sands.

She was 35, and she was plain. Moreover, she was as nervous as a rat in a new home.

From the handwriting on the card he had really expected something better, and he was mad at himself for permitting her to bother him. She was nothing more than the ordinary woman who came to him day after day with her stories and her poetry, none of which he wanted. Wouldn't this class of females ever learn that they were only wasting their time and his by their calls? He was afraid they wouldn't.

She said "Good-morning" in a choked whisper.

"Pray be seated," said the editor. He pushed over a basket piled with manuscripts to Tomlin. "Send all those back." Then he turned to Miss Sands again, and asked what he could do for her.

"I wanted to ask what you would think of a story of Japanese life."

"I'm afraid that sort of thing is a good deal overdone nowadays. They've got a big series running in Baxter's Magazine, and of course we've had Sir Edwin and a whole lot more. No, I'm public's afraid it won't do. I think we should care to see it. Sorry you've had the trouble—"

"Oh, not at all! I'm glad."

"I don't quite understand."

"You see, I want the story to be refused. It's my sister Caroline. Thanks so much for promising to send it back."

"But wait a minute—I gave no such promise. It is part of an editor's duty to consider carefully everything that is submitted—everything. Besides, why should you be so anxious that your sister should be disappointed?"

"You see, you don't know her. Her be setting sin is conceit. She's younger than I am, and—well, she's rather good looking. She's been spoilt by having too much made about her. If you could hear her bragging sometimes I'm sure you'd agree with me. Really, it's often difficult enough for me to live with her as it is, and if she had a story accepted by the Latest Light she would become quite intolerable."

"But really," said the editor, with superiority, "these family disputes have nothing to do with me. I'm simply here—"

"Oh, yes, of course! I only mention it to explain why I want you to refuse her silly rubbish."

"How do you know it's silly rubbish?"

"I've read it, and I wouldn't do that at all."

"Really, Miss Sands," said the editor, with growing severity, "you must leave me to be the judge of that. I cannot permit anybody to dictate to me what I am to accept or what I am to refuse. Have you any special reason for wishing your sister's story rejected—your sister's work at all? It's remarkable—that belief which almost every woman seems to have, that she is qualified to judge literary work! Are you quite sure that you know the difference between silly rubbish and the work of genius?"

"Anyhow, it shows that she has no imagination—her having made it a Japanese story."

"I don't follow that argument."

"No, I hadn't told you. My sister Caroline lived in Japan with a Japanese family for some years. She's only using up what she saw and heard there, and that's not imagination."

"At any rate it make it the more probable that the story will be interesting."

"I can't see that. She got to know things about the Japanese women—well, really I—"

"As bad as that?"

Miss Sands wriggled uneasily. "I'd rather not talk about it. All I want is just your promise that you won't accept the story. You know the public don't care about Japanese things."

"Once for all," said the editor, "will you give up trying to teach me my business? What is the use of telling me that the public don't care for Japanese topics when Baxter's Magazine is going in for them too? Do you think they don't know the public better through and through at Baxter's place? What about the success of the Geisha? What about—but, really, I lose all patience. The attempt to make an editor a mere agent to satisfy some personal grudge of your own is, of course, utterly useless; it is also dishonest, and as the author happens to be your own sister, it is even worse than dishonest. It's no good pleading; I've nothing more to say to you."

"Good morning, then," said Miss Sands, looking doleful. "I didn't know you'd take it like that."

When she got into the street the dolefulness passed off. She turned into the next A. B. C. shop for a bun and a glass of milk, and looked as pleased as if she had accomplished something.

"Tomlin," said the editor, "when a manuscript comes from a Miss Caroline Sands—it will be a story on a Japanese subject—don't send it up with the rest for Mr. Garner to read, but let me have it at once. I will read that one myself."

And in due course the story was brought, and the editor noted with pleasure that it was just about the right length.

The story was neither too good to leave out nor too bad to put in. It was mediocre, and as a rule that editor did not love mediocrity. However, he accepted it at once, and wrote to Miss Caroline Sands to say that he had done so. If he had been told that he had practically made up his mind to accept the story even before he read it he would have been angry.

And all this was a great joy to that Miss Sands who had called at the office. For she had no sister, and her own name was Caroline, and she was the author of a Japanese story which was founded on somebody's book of travels and an article in the encyclopedia—as recently sold to the public by a great newspaper on terms that saved the smoker 33 per cent. And she wanted that story to be read at once, and to be accepted.

Also she had once seen a man drive a pig. —Black and White.

OPPOSES A MICROBE THEORY.

Dr. Hill, of Boston, Makes Experiments with Telephones and Claims There is Little Danger from Them.

The popular notion that telephone transmitters are breeding places for microbes and consequently disseminators of disease is opposed in a report made by Dr. Hibbert W. Hill, bacteriologist, makes to the Boston board of health.

Dr. Hill made an examination at the suggestion of the health commissioners. He reports that he found some bacilli, but not one that was harmful. He admits the possibility of infection from some telephone transmitters, and makes recommendations intended to reduce this possibility to a minimum, but his report as a whole is encouragingly negative, so far as the popular theory is concerned.

Desirous of operating on the telephones quest in use, he selected two instruments from the Sears building, two from Young's hotel, three from the Exchange building, four from the Parker house, one from the Mason building, and one from the Equitable building. The transmitters were cleaned by sterilized swabs of absorbent cotton carefully prepared and guarded from outside bacilli and then rubbed on solidified blood serum. The serum was incubated at 37 degrees centigrade. The swabs were also shaken in distilled water and then added to the injected into guinea pigs, both intra-abdominally and subcutaneously. At the end of three months the guinea pigs were autopsied, killed, and subjected to a postmortem examination for lesions of tuberculosis and other symptoms of disease, but none appeared.

WANTS CHAMPION WHIPPED

Jeffries' Father Said to Be Anxious to Have His Son Defeated in the Ring.

"I'm opposed to prize fighting. I don't believe in it, but Jim will keep it up until he gets thrashed, then he'll quit it. He'll keep it up long enough, but he'll get licked. But Jim's a good boy. He's no worse than the rest of you. He'll keep up his devilment till he gets licked, and then he'll quit."

These were the words of Mr. Jeffries, father of the world's new pugilistic champion as he sat in a dilapidated looking wagon at Fourth street and Broadway the other afternoon and addressed a small crowd.

"Jim's no worse than the rest of you," reiterated the champion's father. "He'll keep up his devilment till he gets licked, and then he'll come to salvation. I'd wish him to get licked if he was going to fight three minutes from now."

Painting the Smoke Nuisance.

Boston is conducting a vigorous campaign against the smoke nuisance. The superintendent of streets has just sent a circular letter to all the coal dealers warning them against the sale of low grades of soft coal. In the missive he says: "Your attention is called to the matter now so that there may be no cause for complaint on your part later on in the event of trouble, and that your customers may be fully advised as to the action which this department will certainly take unless proper coal is used."

—James Conley intends going to Mount Clements, Mich., in the near future.

—T. A. Harris has recently finished the moving of the Catholic church at Argyle.

—Jack Driscoll of East Grand Forks, was a visitor in this city the latter part of last week.

—The Argyle postoffice is to become a presidential office Oct. 1, with a salary of $1000 per year.

—Mrs. Gray, accompanied by Mrs. Sherman, returned to Thief River Falls last Saturday morning.

—C. A. Shurkey returned Friday morning from Bostonand other eastern points. He had a grand time.

—Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Dufresne arrived in the city Friday from Michigan, where they had been visiting.

—P. H. O'Neil, who lost his house by fire last fall, is erecting a neat residence on Dr. Sease site, east of town.

—Mrs. Nick Funk, after a pleasant visit with friends and relatives here, returned to East Grand Forks on Monday.

—Plenty of rain these days, rain of steady half of the day Sunday, all of Monday forenoon and nearly all day Tuesday.

—Superintendent Haverstad attended the county fair at Ada last Friday and delivered a lecture while there.

—M. Sargent returned last Friday evening from the Lake of the Woods, where he has been for some time. He has a claim there.

—George Sebastian went to Cass Lake last week, where he has been employed to assist in the running of M. R. Brown's steamer.

—The postoffice address of A. McKinnon, our Crookston member of the board of appeals for the department of grain inspection, when at his post of duty, will be 303 Corn Exchange, Minneapolis.

—Andrew Rose, assistant agricultulist at the State Experimental farm, attended the Norman county fair at Ada last Friday, and with Prof. Haverstad addressed an institute of farmers' school. The Norman county management is following the right lines in introducing such educational features into their fairs.

—There were fifteen applicants who took the mail carriers' examination, which was held in the city hall Saturday. The following divisions were embraced in the examination: Orthography, arithmetic, letter writing, penmanship, copying from plain copy, geography of the United States and reading addresses. Four hours and a half was the limit of time for the examination, which commenced at 9:30 o'clock.

—The racing under electric lights, every night, will be one of the taking novelties of the State Fair Sept. 4 to 9 There will already be bigger frame races, guid dess wonders and a general assortment of specialties, but there will be regular running races on the new half-mile track, for which regular purses are made the same as in the afternoon programs. These night races are likely to prove a sensation.

—Dr. Dunlap met with a serious accident last Sunday night while returning from a professional call in the northeast part of the city. It was about midnight and he was walking along Seventh street, between Elm and Ash streets, and did notice that the sidewalk had settled on the side he was walking on, where there is a descent of six feet to the ground. He fell headlong breaking his shoulder and ceiling bones and is now laid up for some time. He cannot use his left arm and is considerably bruised. We hope he will rapidly recover.

—Preparations for the Minnesota State Fair, at Hamline, Sept. 4 to 9 inclusive, are already so nearly complete that it is safe to promise a really great exposition of northwestern live stock, agricultural and manufacturing interests. As the cities have agreed to leave the task of entertaining visitors to the Fair, the managers have determined to carry out a program that will be worthy of the week set apart for the great annual agricultural festival and have arranged for a brilliant evening program as well as for day events. For feature will be given later.

—M. E. Brown spent Sunday at Cass Lake.

—Miss Marie Fetzer is quite ill with typhoid fever.

—Charles Giroux visited at Grand Forks last week.

—A. Thibert returned Saturday from his Chicago trip.

—Big sale of ladies' and children's headery at the New York Store.

—Dr. A. V. Lambert, at the Commercial Hotel, removes warts, bunions, ingrown nails, corns, moles, etc

—Mrs. M. G. Legree, who has spent several weeks at Pipestone, Minn., arrived home Friday morning.

—The Misses Bertha and Stella McIntyre went to Fosston Friday, where they will visit for a short time.

—W. E. Rowe and Will Vanet left Tuesday night for Duluth. They are attending the shooting tournament.

—I. N. Ludeen of Warren was in the city Monday. He had been spending a short time at Maple Lake.

—Andrew Carlson put up a neat new sign, reading "West Hotel" at his place, corner Main and Loraine streets Tuesday.

—Chris Hoek and L. A. Larson left for Duluth Tuesday morning to take in the shooting tournament, to last three days.

—There were eight teachers who had been attending the examinations here who returned to Fertile Tuesday evening.

—H. R. Brown, secretary of the Crookston Electric Light and Water Works Co., of St. Paul, was in the city Tuesday on business.

—Work on the water mains is going on on Fletcher street, between Ash and Broadway. The work will be pushed to completion.

—Peter Stone of Duluth was in the city the first of the week visiting friends and relatives. He went to Ada Tuesday morning to visit friends.

—L. H. Judson received a car of binding twine from the state prison at Stillwater Monday morning and it was sold to numerous farmers of this vicinity.

—John Carlson put up a new sign at his place of business, corner Main and N. Fletcher streets, last Tuesday. Gus Gustafson did the artistic work.

—Just arrived at the New York Store direct from the factory a large line of sample hosiery. These goods will be sold on the bargain table at manufacturers' prices.

—L. S. Collins is laying the brick foundation for his livery barn. The dimensions will be 30x120, two story. It will afford room for ninety horses besides carriage room and the office.

—C. H. Jefferson is superintendent of the brick laying.

—Schmidt & Bowen had a large clothier business Tuesday. They placed a new pane of glass 72x140 inches, in the building occupied by Austin & Loken in the upper house block. Also two lights in the McKinnon block and two in the White Front.

—The social given in the assembly room of the high school in honor of the teachers was a very pleasant affair, there being about 100 in attendance. The recitations by Profs. Crow and J. C. Sather and the latter's brother, E. M. Sather, were especially fine.

—The State Fair will be bigger and broader than ever as an educational institution this year. The amusement features are more prominent because the cities will have none. The fair will be the only great thing on deck early in September. The fireworks at the evening exhibitions from Monday night to Saturday night will vast double the sum expended by either city or any private organization. One big bomb, 60 inches in diameter, the largest ever fired in America, will be sent up every night during the fair. It will explode at a height of 1,000 feet and send down a shower of stars that will cover a space as large as four city blocks. Mr. Porter also has a new piece of fireworks that will make a sensation when fired at the fair. It is a bomb that explodes and drops a shower of white stars and at the same time releases another bomb which in turn explodes with a shower of green stars and releases another with red stars, and repeats until the air is full of brilliant stars. This bomb can be seen from Stillwater, Northfield, Anoka and Hastings.

—Mr. and Mrs. N. P. Stone have been enjoying a happy family reunion for the past two or three weeks. The visitors were Mrs. Stone's mother, Mrs. L. E. Powell, of River Falls, Wis.; her sisters, Mrs. A. P. Weld, Mrs. F. D. Eaulge and little boy, also of River Falls, and Mrs. Dr. Gould of West Superior Mrs. Gould is a twin sister of Mrs. Stone. Several days were pleasantly spent at Maple Lake and last Thursday Mrs. Powell, with her daughters, visited her son, Mayor Powell, of Warren. The party left Thursday night on the Northern Pacific train for their homes. It is hoped they may all live to enjoy many more as happy family reunions as this one has been. Such gatherings help to brighten one path through life's journey.

—The four weeks' session of the summer training school for teachers closed last Saturday. The attendance was not as large as was expected, but great interest in the work was manifest. The teachers have all returned to their homes with renewed zest, and will soon begin their school work for the year. Prof. P. M. Magnusson went to Duluth Sunday morning. Prof. W. F. F. Selbek went to Lakota Saturday morning for a few days' visit and returned to Austin, Minn., Tuesday night where he will resume his work as superintendent of schools. Prof. L. P. Cravens returned to his home Saturday night. Miss Gertrude Earhart and Miss Addie G. Mather went to Minneapolis Saturday night, where they will visit for a few days. From there Miss Earhart will go to her home in Pennsylvania, and later will attend the University of Michigan. Miss Mather will go to Kewyon, Minn., where she has been engaged as principal of the high school.

THE ALUM BAKING POWDERS.

Names of Some of the Principal Brands Sold in This Vinicity.

The discussion in the newspapers of the effect upon the human system of food made with alum baking powders and the publication of the emphatic opinions from noted scientists that such powders render the food unwholesome, have caused numerous inquiries for the names of the various alum powders.

The sale of alum baking powders in both Minnesota and Wisconsin is illegal unless the lable upon the can has printed upon it the statement that such powders contain alum. When the same brands sold in Duluth and South Dakota, where the law does not require them to be so marked, the alum warning is omitted, and they are represented as pure cream of tartar powders.

The following list of baking powders containing alum is made up from the official reports of the Food Commissioners of Minnesota and Wisconsin, or from the report of the U. S. Agricultural department at Washington, or other equally reliable authority:

BAKING POWDERS CONTAINING ALUM.

L. C.	Contain Alum
K. C.	Contain Alum
CALUMET	Jaques Mfg Co., Chicago. Contains Alum.
PALACE	Calumet Baking Powder Co., Chicago. Contains Alum.
CAMPBELL	Pabsco Baking Powder Co., St. Paul. Contains Alum.
IRON HORSE	Contain Alum.
ROYAL	Royal Chemical Co., Chicago. Contains Alum.
BENGAL	Contains Alum.
ATLAS	Geiss, Cooper & Co., St. Paul. Contains Alum.
CHAMPION	Reid, Murdock & Co., Chicago. Contain Alum.
CHICAGO YEAST	Chapman & Smith Co., Chicago. Contain Alum.
EDDY'S	Eddy & Hake, St. Louis. Contains Alum.
SUPERIOR	Superior Baking Powder Co., St. Paul. Contains Alum.
UNRIVALED	Spencer, Warner & Co., Chicago. Contains Alum.
PURE'S SWEET BISCUIT	Contains Alum.
SNOW BALL	Contains Alum.
DELPHINE	Contains Alum.

In addition to these, many grocers are selling what they call their own private or special brands. These powders are put up for the grocer, and his name put upon the labels by manufacturers of alum powders in St. Paul, Minneapolis, Chicago, St. Louis and elsewhere. The manufacturer, it is said, find their efforts to market their goods in this way greatly aided by the ambition of the grocer to sell a powder with his own name upon the label, especially as he can make an abnormal profit upon it. Many of these special brands are not labeled as the law requires and are sold as cream of tartar powders.

It is quite impossible to give the names of all the alum baking powders in the market. They are constantly appearing under all kinds of cognomens, and are sold at all kinds of prices many as low as five and ten cents a pound. They can be avoided, however, by the housekeeper who will bear in mind that all baking powders sold at twenty-five cents or less per pound, whether marked as alum powders or not, are liable to contain alum, as pure cream of tartar powders cannot be produced at anything like this price.

PARIS IS EXCITED

FRENCH CAPITAL EAGER FOR NEWS OF DREYFUS COURTMARTIAL

Some of the Streets Actually Dangerous Owing to Crush of People—Dramatic Scene at Rennes—Dreyfus Solemnly Protests His Innocence as Examination Proceeds—Prisoner's Treatment by the Presiding Judge Considered Unfriendly.

PARIS, Aug. 8.—All the newspapers published frequent special editions which were eagerly bought by the waiting crowds outside for every detail of the Dreyfus courtmartial. Some of the streets were actually dangerous, notably the Rue Mont Matre, where the newsboys were rushing in all directions, hustling and almost overturning any one and everything in their way.

While the press generally had time to comment on the courtmartial they all endeavored to draw conclusions from the different descriptions of the personal appearance of the prisoner at the trial. The Nationalist papers declared Dreyfus appeared embarrassed, while The Journal des Debats said:

"Neither his face nor his words evoke sympathy. His voice sounds false and his protestations of innocence are not convincing."

The Temps, on the other hand, said: "He replied in a tone of assurance and with a frankness and conciseness which carried conviction."

DREYFUS ON THE STAND.

The Prisoner Vehemently Protests His Innocence.

RENNES, Aug. 8.—The proceedings of the courtmartial before which Captain Dreyfus is on trial opened at 7:40 a. m. Captain Dreyfus entered the courtroom with a firm step, though his features were pallid. He is partly bald and what hair he has is gray and close-cropped.

Dreyfus, in a uniform of captain of artillery, dark blue, with red facings, fixedly regarded the judges, with immovable features and without altering hand or foot, serenely even moving his head, during the whole course of the proceedings, except when he entered and left the courtroom. After the formal proceedings which occupied a couple of hours, Colonel Jouaust began the examination of Dreyfus, respecting the famous bordereau, and what Dreyfus did or could have known of its contents.

When Dreyfus, wearing eyeglasses, rose from his seat for examination, he stood erect, holding his kepi in his hand, before him. He looked Colonel Jouaust in the face during the whole interrogatory.

An Accusation and a Denial.

Colonel Jouaust began by saying:

"It results from the documents just read, that you are accused of having brought about machinations or held relations with a foreign power, or one or more of its agents, in order to procure it means by delivering it documents, indicated in the incriminating bordereau, to commit hostilities or undertake war against France. I notify you that you will be allowed to state during the course of these proceedings anything that appears to you useful for your defense."

Dreyfus replied with a vehement declaration of his innocence, repeating several times:

"I am innocent," in a voice that quivered with emotion. The agonized manner in which he uttered the protestations of his innocence had a most painful effect and must have evoked the sympathy even of his most inveterate enemies.

The prisoner grew more composed as the examination proceeded, answering every question without a moment's hesitation. The acoustics of the courtroom were abominable, only those within a few feet of the judges being able to follow the examination closely. Even M. Labori, who was seated behind Dreyfus, within three yards of him, held his head to his ear in order to catch the questions and answers.

More an Accuser Than a Judge.

Colonel Jouaust submitted Dreyfus to a rigorous examination, more in the style of a prosecuting counsel than a judge, and made gestures of impatience at some direct denials which Dreyfus gave repeatedly to the gravest questions. The prisoner's voice resounded frequently through the courtroom as he energetically replied:

"No, my colonel," or "never, never," to questions put to him.

The widow of Lieutenant Colonel Henry, dressed in deep mourning, was present in court and replied to her name in the roll call of witnesses.

After the court had decided not to adjourn on account of the absence of certain witnesses, the clerk of the court was ordered to read M. d'Ormescheville's bill of indictment of 1894, which he did in a loud voice, Dreyfus, in the meanwhile, listening unmoved as the old charges against him were read.

Colonel Jouaust then handed the prisoner a long slip of cardboard, upon which the bordereau was pasted.

"Do you recognize this document?"

Dreyfus replied with a passionate outburst: "No, my colonel, I am innocent. I declare it here, as I declared it in 1894; I am a victim — —". His voice here was choked with sobs, which must have stirred every spectator in court. The voice of the prisoner did not seem human. It resembled the cry of a wounded animal.

Excitedly Protests His Innocence.

As he ended his reply with the words: "Five years in the galleys, my wife, my children, my God, I am innocent, innocent," Colonel Jouaust said:

"Then you deny it?"

Dreyfus replied: "Yes, my colonel."

The court adjourned, after deciding to sit behind closed doors as many days as are necessary for the examination of the secret dossier.

VIGOROUS CAMPAIGN

SECRETARY ROOT SAYS THE WAR IN THE PHILIPPINES

Will Be Pushed With the Utmost Energy and He Expects the Result Will Be a Speedy Cessation of Hostilities There. If Fifty Thousand Troops Are Not Enough Others Will Be Dispatched. Refuses to Discuss the Question of Possible Change of Commanders.

PLATTSBURG, N. Y., Aug. 9.—The war in the Philippines is to be prosecuted with a vigor that ought to result in speedy cessation of hostilities there. The correspondent of the Associated Press saw Secretary of War Root in the office of the Hotel Champlain just after he had said goodby to the president and was prepared to take the train for Washington. The secretary referred to his visit to Plattsburg barracks where he witnessed a regimental drill of the Twenty-sixth volunteers. This regiment has been recruited and organized within six weeks and they drill like veterans.

"Will the war in the Philippines be prosecuted vigorously from now on?" asked the correspondent.

Mr. Root turned on his heel and replied quick as a flash:

"Yes, sir; the war in the Philippines from now on will be prosecuted with all possible energy. All the men, all the arms and all the supplies necessary to end the trouble in the islands will be furnished at the earliest possible moment."

Will Have Fifty Thousand Men.

"How large a force will be at the disposal of the commanding general there?" was asked.

"There will be 50,000 men there ready for active service at the close of the rainy season by the last of October and more will be sent there if necessary."

With reference to the rumors published in newspapers that President McKinley and he could not agree upon a policy to be pursued in the Philippines, Mr. Root said:

"Of course that is all nonsense."

Asked as to a prospective change of commanders in the Philippines Mr. Root said he could not say anything on that at the present.

It is gathered that there will be an energetic campaign in the Philippines. Mr. Root seldom talks for publication and the fact that he had just come from the president gives his utterances added significance.

APPEALS TO THE POWERS.

Aguinaldo Asks Recognition of the Filipino Government.

MANILA, Aug. 9.—6:50 p.m.—Aguinaldo has appealed to the powers for recognition of "Filipino independence." In a document dated from Tarlac, July 27, and signed by Buencamino, it has been received by all the foreign consuls in Manila with the request that they forward it to their respective governments.

The Filipinos used their old argument that they had conquered the sovereignty of these islands from Spain before the signing of the treaty of Paris and, therefore, Spain was in no position to cede them to the United States. They argue that the possession of 7,000 Spanish prisoners, captured, with their arms, fighting against the Filipinos is eloquent proof of the nullity of Spanish sovereignty, so when they surrendered Spain's hold was completely lost."

Reply to the Spanish Commission.

The document then says: "Replying to the Spanish commission's requests to release the prisoners because Spain no longer has political interests in the islands, we asked for a treaty of peace and friendship between Spain and the Filipinos, whereby the prisoners would be released. But, the commissioners refused, because it would mean a recognition of our independence. This is equivalent to saying that the prisoners must stay in our hands indefinitely, because they have become our most efficacious method to adjust our account with Spain and obtain from her recognition of our independence."

Finally, the Filipinos appeal to the powers to influence Washington to bring to a conclusion the unjust war which is devastating the country."

TYPHOON ABATES.

Coaling and Loading of Transports at Manila Resumed.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9.—The following cable has been received from General Otis:

"Three days typhoon rendering work on bay impossible passed 0th inst. Transport Pennsylvania leaves Iloilo, Cebu, Jolo this evening. Sherman with Minnesotas, South Dakota and Reclamped soldiers for San Francisco 11th inst.; Valencia, Manchuria, when coaled, requiring 10 days good weather, leave with Montanas and discharged men. Suggest portion transports coal at Nagasaki, both coming and returning, supplies business here where fuel lies for loading and unloading vessels primitive."

FILIPINO DEFEAT.

MacArthur and Four Thousand Men Meet a Large Force of Rebels.

MANILA, Aug. 9.—General MacArthur's force, consisting of 4,000 men, advanced five miles last night from San Fernando and encountered and defeated a Filipino force of 6,000 men. The enemy retreated, leaving many dead and wounded. The American loss is killed and wounded was 30.

Two Regiments Complete.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9.—The number of enlistments for volunteer regiments has reached 10,769. The Twenty-sixth regiment, commanded by Colonel Rice, has 1,812, which is more than the full quota, and the Thirtieth, commanded by Colonel Gardner, Jacksonville, 1,805, only 4 short of the required number.

The Golden wedding of Mr. and Mrs. O. O. Jacobson has just been celebrated at Ada. Two purses of gold were presented. It is said that the couple, on the occasion of their marriage, had but a pot for the plank between the fingers at the outer end. When the excursion boat Minnesota Belle arrived at the dock there was a rush for the steamer Sylpho. The first few passengers had almost the gang plank safely ashore when a heavy surge struck the boat, causing it to careen, and the plank slipped away beneath them. The long timber supporting the plank broke in the middle. The hinges held up one end and the chain the other, while the broken ends of the plank dropped, emitting a struggling, screaming mass of humanity was plunged into the water, 15 feet below the wharf. A few clung to the inclined sides of the plank, but at least 150 were struggling in the water. The pitching of the wharf partially saved them in on three sides and the boat lying at the wharf closed the other end of the opening.

The freight house at the ferry was turned into a morgue, the bodies being taken there for identification as fast as recovered. By noon 17 had been recovered. Three other persons were taken on board the Sappho and died on the way to Bar Harbor.

SCORE ARE KILLED

EXCURSION PARTY BOUND FOR BAR HARBOR, ME.,

Meets With a Serious Disaster—Gang Plank Gives Way, Precipitating Several Hundred Into the Water—Seventeen Taken Out Dead and Three Succumbed to Injuries Received—Loaded Trolley Car Jumps the Track on a Trestle Near Bridgeport, Conn.—Or Over Forty People on Board, Twenty-Nine Are Known to Have Perished.

BAR HARBOR, Me., Aug. 7.—A score of persons were killed by the collapse of the gang plank of the Mount Desert ferry. Seventeen were drowned and three died from the terrible experience of immersion in the water and injuries received while struggling for life. The dead are:

Mrs. William Murray, Brewer; Irving Bridges, West Hancock; Albert Colson, Levant; Mrs. Alonzo P. Oakes, Miss Grace Hamor, Bangor; Joseph Murphy, Old Town; Mrs. Olbis Estey, Ellsworth; Clifford Cashman, Corinth; Miss Lizzie Ward, Bangor; Charles W. Downs, Ellsworth; F. E. Sweetser, Portland; Geo. Billings, Mrs. George Derwent, Bangor; Miss Lewis, Hampden, Me., Mrs. Marjorie Spencer of California.

The Maine Central railway ran excursions to Bar Harbor from all sections of the line in Maine, the attraction being the warships, which were expected there. All the morning long trains packed with excursionists were rushing to Bar Harbor. The train which left Bangor at 8:20 consisted of 12 cars jammed with people.

Where the Gang Plank Gave Way.

At Mount Desert ferry, the terminus of the line, the train is left for the boat for an hour and a half. From the end of the wharf a slip or gang plank 40 feet long and 10 feet wide led up to the boat. The slip was hinged at the inner end and was raised or lowered to suit the tide. It is said that there was no support for the plank between the hinges at the outer end. When the excursion train from Bangor arrived at the ferry there was a rush for the steamer Sylphe. The first few passengers had almost the gang plank safely ashore when a heavy surge struck the boat, causing it to careen, and the plank slipped away beneath them. The long timber supporting the plank broke in the middle. The hinges held up one end and the chain the other, while the broken ends of the plank dropped, emitting a struggling, screaming mass of humanity was plunged into the water, 15 feet below the wharf. A few clung to the inclined sides of the plank, but at least 150 were struggling in the water. The pitching of the wharf partially saved them in on three sides and the boat lying at the wharf closed the other end of the opening.

The freight house at the ferry was turned into a morgue, the bodies being taken there for identification as fast as recovered. By noon 17 had been recovered. Three other persons were taken on board the Sappho and died on the way to Bar Harbor.

Canadian Gold Commissioner Estimates the Klondike Output.

VANCOUVER, B. C., Aug. 8.—The steamer Rosalie, from St. Michaels, arrived this passenger, brings in the neighborhood of $3,000,000 in gold. According to the estimate of Canadian Gold Commissioner Ogilvie the output of the Klondike mines this year will be $40,000,000.

Senator Jones Still in Poor Health.

St. Louis, Aug. 9.—The Republic says: Governor Stone is in receipt of a letter from Senator Jones, chairman of the Democratic national committee, in which the senator says he is threatened with a return of ill health and will not leave for the United States before Oct. 1, and possibly not then. The letter was written in London, and the senator said he would leave shortly for Scotland in search of health.

Target Practice the Chief Instruction.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 8.—General Miles is anxious that the new regiments being raised for service in the Philippines shall be especially efficient with small arms and an order has been sent to the commander of each regiment directing that target practice be the chief feature of the instruction given the soldiers.

WHITE MAN WILL RULE.

Bartlett Tripp Talks of the Proposed Government for Samoa.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 8.—Bartlett Tripp, American member of the Samoan commission, while declining to divulge the agreement reached by the three interested powers for the future government of Samoa, made the following statement:

"The proposed government provides for a white man as administrator of the island—the governor general, in other words. He will take the place of a Samoan king. Much of the trouble in the islands has been due to the fact that the natives have always had an elective king instead of a hereditary king. The natives realize that fact themselves. Malietoa having resigned as king, that troublesome proposition is now at an end. By having a white administrator in supreme control, it is the hope of the commission that peace will be permanent in the islands. There will also be a native representative, and their authority will be more curtailed than at present. The natives will be allowed local self-government. The idea of the commissioners is to let the natives govern themselves as far as possible.

Mr. Tripp admitted that Chief Justice Chambers had returned to this country with the intention of resigning. He denied that there had been any friction between Justice Chambers and the commission and stated that at all along there has been the utmost good feeling.

WAR IS EXPECTED.

Feeling in the Transvaal That Great Britain Is Determined to Quarrel.

LONDON, Aug. 8.—The Times correspondent at Pretoria says: A gloomy view is taken here of the whole situation. The general impression in Boer circles is that Mr. Chamberlain is forcing on a war and that consequently it will be fair tactics to make advances.

All the dispatches from the South African correspondents of the London morning papers take it for granted that the secret session of the volksraad will confirm the rejection of Mr. Chamberlain's proposal, but leave the way open to continue negotiations.

Everything depends upon the serious situation thus arising and upon the consternation of the Uitlanders over the resolution compelling them to fight for the Transvaal, which seems to indicate that the Transvaal government is expecting hostilities.

Only One New Case of Fever.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 8.—Dr. Vickery, in charge of the Hampton Soldiers' home, reports to the marine hospital officials that one patient was admitted to the yellow fever hospital during the day. The man has been ill seven days. There were no deaths. Taken altogether the officials say the situation continues encouraging.

THE GOD FROM THE MACHINE.

By RUDYARD KIPLING.

Bit a man an help a woman, an you can't be far wrong anyways.
—Maxims of Private Malvaney.

The Inexpressibles gave a ball. They borrowed a 7 pounder from the artillery and wreathed it with laurels and made the dancing floor plate glass and provided a supper the like of which had never been eaten before, and set two sentries at the door of the room to hold the trays and programme cards. My friend Private Malvaney was one of the sentries, because he was the tallest man in the regiment. When the dance was fairly started, the sentries were released, and Private Malvaney fled to carry favor with the mess sergeant in charge of the supper. Whether the mess sergeant gave or Malvaney took I cannot say. All that I am certain of is that at supper time I found Malvaney with Private Ortheris, two-thirds of a man, a loaf of bread, half a pate de foie gras and two magnums of champagne sitting on the roof of my carriage. As I came up I heard him saying:

"Praise be a dam' doesn't come as often as ord'ly room, or, by this an' that, Ort'ris, my son, I would be the disgrace av the rig'mint instid av the brightest jool in its crown."

"Haul the colonel's pet snoozince," said Ortheris, who was a Londoner. "But wot makes you curse your relations? This 'ere fizzy stuff's good enough."

"Stuff, you cock-illized pagin! 'Tis champagne we're dhrinkin now. 'Tain't that I am sat ag'in. 'Tis the quare stiff wid the little bits av black leather in it, I misdoubt I will be distressin'ly sick wid it in the mornin. Fwhat is it?"

"Goose liver," I said, climbing on the top of the carriage, for I knew that it was better to sit out with Malvaney than to dance many dances.

"Goose liver is nt!" said Malvaney. "Faith, I'm thinkin that that makes it wud do better to cut my throat. He carries a power av liver nadder his right arrum when the dogs are warm an the nights chill. He wud give thim tons av it to eat. 'Tis he are so. 'Tis all liver today.' see he, an wid that he clothes me ten days C. B. for as mould a dhrink as iver a good solgher tuk betune his teeth."

"That was when 'e wanted for to wash 'isself in the fore'ditch," Ortheris explained. "Said there was too much beer in the barrack water butts for a well-feelin man. You was lucky in gittin the ort with wot you did, Mulvaney."

"You say so? Now I'm pershuaded I was cruel hard trated, seein I've done for the likes av him in the days whin my eyes were wider opin than they are now. Man alive, for the colonel to whip me on the peg in that way! Me that have saved the reg'mint av a ten times better man than him! 'Twas me-fortions, an that manes a power av evil!"

"Never mind the nefariousness," I said. "Whose reputation did you save?"

"Now's the pity. 'Twasn't my own, but I talk more trouble wid ut than if it was. 'Twas just my way, messin wid Tyrlot wan day's business or mine. Hear now!" He settled himself at ease on the top of the carriage. "I'll tell you all about ut. Av course I will name no names, for there's wan that's an ord'ner's lady now that was in ut, an no more will I name places, for the case is thracked by a place."

"Eyah!" said Ortheris lazily. "But this is a mixed story wot's comin."

"Wurst upon a time, as the childer books say, I was a recruity."

"Was you, though?" said Ortheris. "Now that's extraordinary!"

"Ort'ris," said Mulvaney, "av you opin thim lips av yours again I will, savin your presince, sure, fale you by the slack av your trousers an heave you."

"I'm mum." said Ortheris. "Wot appened when you was a recruity?"

"I was a better recruity than you fear was or will be, but that's neither here nor there. Think I became a man, as the divil of a man I was 18 years ago! They called me Buck Malvaney in tidin days, an begad, I tuk a woman's eye. I did that! Ortheris, you scrub, fwhat are you sniggerin at? Do you misdoubt me?"

"Devil a doubt!" said Ortheris. "But I've 'card summat like that before."

"An the ord'ners av the rig'mint — was in in tidin days was ord'ners—ground men, wid a manner on 'em an a way wid 'em such as is not made these days—all but was—was av the capt'ns. A bad dhrill, a wake voice, an a limp leg—that's how things are the signs av a bad man. You bear that in your hid, Ort'ris, my son.

"An the colonel av the rig'mint had a daughter—was av thim lunkhize, blestin, pick me up an carry me or I'll die gurin such as was made for the natural prey av men like the capt'n who was iverlasht gayin coort to her, though the colonel he said time an ever, 'Kape out av the brute's way, my dear!' But he niver had the heart for to send her away from the thronble. bein as he was a widower an she their wan child."

"Stop a minute, Malvaney," said I. "How in the world did you come to know these things?"

"How did I come?" said Malvaney with a sconful grunt. "Bekase I'm turned dirin the quane's plesure to a lump av wood, lookin out straight forninst me, wid a—a candelabhrum in my hand, for yon to pick your cards out av, must I not see nor feel? Av course I do! Up my back, an in my boots, an in the short hair av the neck —that's where I kape my eyes when I'm on duty an the reg'lar wans are fixed. Knowl Take my word for it, sorr, terrifying as a great dale more is known in a rig'mint, or fwhat wud be the use av a mess sargint, or a sargint's wife doin wet nurse to the major's baby? To resume, he was a bad dhrill, was this capt'n—a rotten bad dhrill—an whin first I run my eye over him I see to myself, 'My willitin bantam,' I sez, 'my cock av a Gospert dunghill'—'twas from Portsmouth he came to us—'there's combs to be cut,' sez I, 'an by the grace av God, 'tis Mulvaney knows how to cut combs.'

"So he wint menowderin, an sainadderin, an blundanderin roun an about the colonel's daughter, an she, poor limocint, lookin at him like a cow at a new-married bullock looks at the cunny'ay cook. He'd a chirry little corah av a black mustache, an he twisted an twirled ivery worrid he used as av he found nt too sweet for to spit out. Eyah! He was a tricky man an a liar by wan'm'. Some are born so. He was wan. I knew he was over his belt in money borrowed from natives. Besides that, the other matthers was in regard to yon. presince, sorr, I will oblither ate. A little av fwhat I knew the colonel knew, for he wud have none av him, an that, I'm thinkin, by fwhat happened afterward, the capt'n knew.

"Wan day, bein mortial idle, or they wud never have thried ut, the rig'mint gave anashure thatrikals—ayerial ord'ners' ladies. You've seen the likes time an ag'in, sorr, an poor fin 'tis for them. Girls sit in the back rows an sang wid their boots for the honor av the rig'mint. I was told off for to shift the scenes, but in the gran struggle down that Light work ut was, wid lashin av beer an the garl that dirained the ord'ners' ladies—but she died in Agra 12 years gone, an my tongue's gettin the better av me. They was actin a play thing called 'Sweethearts,' which you may have heard av, an the colonel's daughter she was a lady's maid. The capt'n was a boy called Broom—Spread Broom was his name in the play. Thin I see nothin nor hear nothin in the actin—fwhat I niver saw before, an that was that he was no gentleman. They was too much together. thim two, a-whisperin behind the scenes I shifted, an some av fwhat they said I heard, for I was dam—like death an ivy—on the scrub cattin. He was 'everlastin'ly oppressin her to fall in wid some monsthin scheme or his, an she was thryin to stund ont against him, but not as though she was set in her will. I wonder now in him days that my cars did not grow a yard on my head wid list'nin. But I looked straight forninst me, an handed up this an thrugged down that such as was my duty, an the ord'ners' ladies see one to anoth-er, thinkin I was out av listen reach. 'Fwhat an obligin young man is this Corp'ril Malvaney?' I was a corp'ril then. I was rejoiced afterward, but, no matther. I was a corp'ril wunst.

"Well, this 'Sweethearts' business wint on like most amshure theatricals, an, barrin fwhat I suspicioned, I wasn't till the last rehearsal that I saw for certain that thim two—be the blackguard on the one hand an her on the other—had been—had put up an ev-asion.

"A what?" said I.

"Ev-asion! Fwhat you lorrads an ladies call an elopement. Ev-asion I calls it, bekase, excep tin this 'right an natural an proper,' 'tis wrong an chirty to steal a man's wan child not knowin her own sinsid. There was a margin in the comin' sociely who set my face upon ev-asions. I'll tell you about the!"

Which to the bloonin cantains, Mulvaney," said Ortheris. "Comm'sarial sargints is low."

Mulvaney accepted the emendation and went on:

"Now, I knew that the colonel was no fool more than one, for I was the wild the smartest man in the rig'mint, an the colonel was the best ord'ner commandin's an Asia. So fwhat he but me said was a mortial truth. We knew that the capt'n was bad, but for reasons which I have already oblitherated I knew more than my colonel. I wud have rolled out his face wid the butt av my gun before permittin ay him to steal the gurl. Saints knee av he wud have married her, an ar he didn't she wud be in great tormint an the divil av what non, sorr, call a 'scandal.' But I niver thought, niver raised me hand on my shuperior ord'cer, an that was a mer-ricle now I come to considher it."

"Mulvaney, the dawn's risin," said Ortheris. "an we're no nearer 'ome than we was at Dumdum. Lend us your pouch. Mine's all dust."

Mulvaney pitched his pouch across, and he filled his pipe afresh.

"So the dirress rehearsal came to an end, an, bekase I was curious, I staid behind the scenes until the audience had ind. an I shud have been in barricks, lyin as flat as a toad under a painted cottage thing. They was talkin in whispers, an she was shiverin an gaspin like a she-divil marrid see. 'Are you sure you've got the hang av the manevers?' sez he, or wurrds to that effec'. as the court martial see. 'Sure as death,' sez she, 'but I misdonht 'tis cruel hard on my father. 'Damn your father!' sez he, or anyways 'twas fwhat he thought. 'The arrangement is as clear as mud. Jungi will drive the ghurri for ayther ut's ovver, an you come to the station, cool an airy, in time for the 2 o'clock train, where I'll be wid your kit.' 'Faith,' thinks I to myself, 'this there's a ayah in the business tu!'

"A powerful bad thing is a ayah. Don't yon niver have any thruck wid wan. Thin he began soothenin her, an all ord'ners an ord'ners' ladies left, an they put ont the lights. To explain the theory av the flight, as they say at omeklhy, you must understand that afther this 'Sweethearts' nonsinse was ended there was another little bit av a play called 'Complier'—some kind av couple or another. The gurl was actin in this, but not tha man. I suspicioned be fore the station wid the gurl's kit at the end av the first piece. 'Twas this kit that finathered me, for I knew for a capt'n to go traipsing about the inpires wid the Lord knew what av a truso on his arrum was ne-farious, an wud be worse than easin the flag, so far as this talk afterward wint."

"Old on, Mulvaney! Wot's trnso?" said Ortheris.

"You're an uncivilized man, my son. Whin a gurl's married, all her bit in 'conternents are trnso, which names weddin portion. An 'tis the same whin she's runnin away, even wid the biggest blackguard on the army list.

"So I made up plan av me campaign. The colonel's house was a good two miles away. Dennis,' sez I to my color sargint, 'if you love me lend me your kyart, for my heart is brak an my feet is sore wid trampin to an from this foolishness at the Gaff.' An Dennis lent nt. wid a rampin, stampin red stallion in the shafts. Whin they was all attired down to their 'Sweethearts' for the first scene, which was a long was, I slips outside an into the kyart. Sez I to my Hivin, but I made that horse walk, an we came into the colonel's compound as the divil wint through Athlone—in standin leps. There was no one there except the sentries an I wint round to the back an found the girl's ayah.

"Ye black, brazen Jezebel,' sez I, 'tell in your masther's honor for I repeen —pack up all the Miss Sahib's kit an look slippy! Capt'n Sahib's order,' sez I; 'gin he finds out we've got him on wid that I laid my finger to my nose an looked the schamin sinner I was.

"'Bote sorky,' sez she, so I knew she was in the business, an I piled up all the sweet talk I'd iver learned in the bazaars on to this she bullock an prayed or her to put all the quicks she knew to the thing. While she packed I stud ont-side an sweated, for I was wanted for to shift' the second scene. I tell you a young gurl's evasion manner is nnch baggage as a rig'mint on the line av march! 'Saints help Dennis' springe,' thinks I, as I bundled the stuff into the thrap, 'for I'll have no mercy!'

"'I'm comin, too,' sez the ayah.

"'No, you don't,' sez I, 'interpechly! Yon baito where you are. I'll pechy come an bring you ant, mebbe with me, yon marandin'—niver mind fwhat I called her.

"This I went for the Gaff. an by the special ordher av Providence, for I was doin a good work yon will ondersthand, Dennis' springs hild ontght. Now, mike the capt'n goes for that kit,' thinks I 'he'll be throubled.' At the end av 'Sweethearts' the capt'n runs in to the kyart to the colonel's house, an I sits me still. I wonder now in him days that me cars did not grow a yard on my head wid list'nin. But I looked straight forninst me, an handed up this an thrugged down that such as was my duty, an the ord'ners' ladies see one to anoth-er, thinkin I was ont av listen reach. "'Ullo, Mulvaney! Wot's 'appened?" said Ortheris.

"Wot's happened is that I bear av the whole thing. All I know was that there was no e-vasion, an that was fwhat I wanted. Now, I put nt to yon, sez I, 'in days' C. B. a bit on a proper tratement for a man who has behaved as you have.'

"Well, any'ow,'" said Ortheris. "I'ewer't this 'ere colonel's daughter, an you was blasin copped when you tried to wash in the fore ditch."

"But," said Mulvaney, finishing the campaign, "it is shanpflhous an impert'nint observation."

No Reporters Allowed.

It may appear incredible that there could ever have lived a politician who objected to having his utterances of oratory displayed before an admiring public through the instrumentality of the press, but as American history is concerned, except in case of solemn secret session, in which, as everybody knows, no business of importance is ever transacted, the portals of the historic capitol have been wide open to the knights of the stub.

Yet 'twas not always so, for the records of parliament show that for many decades—indeed all during the great Revolution and for a century after—no reporters were allowed to hear a word of the assembly's doings. The times were tronblous. Not knowing that the man he roasted today might not be in a position to relieve him of his head tomorrow, the speaker was naturally anxious to keep as much as possible of the flow of spirit to himself.

Of the endless gnests of Bolingbroke, for whom Pitt the elder said that he would rather read one of his speeches than the best manuscript of antiquity, not a word remains; of Pitt himself, with the exception of a few orations so solemnly padded that no reliance can be placed on them, we have nothing, and in earlier, rougher days, King Pym, him whose unbridled genius gained him the name of the most inspiring mover of the time, Hampden and Strode, are all gone. The great mass of these lost orations would throw a valuable light on the history of all time.

The Terrible Hammerhead.

There is only one beast that will truck you down to avenge the death of its mate no matter how far you go, and that is a snake.

Moreover, it is the most terrible of all snakes and the largest of the poisonous kind. Its name is the hammerhead. A bite from this reptile will kill the strongest man in two minutes, and of course there is no remedy. It is not seldom by a hammerhead has ever survived. It chiefly lives on the far east.

There are generally two hammerheads if there is one, and if you kill one of them the other will be on your track before long in all probability. Short of taking ship across the sea there is no way of escaping unless you watch for the snake and shoot it. It will follow you for miles for the chance of a stealthy attack, and you may climb trees or mountains or ford rivers, but there is no chance of evading the homehead. It is a sort of nightmare bnnt to be chased by one, and when the chase begins the hammerhead after wild fare he was within a day or so. The mate of the slain snake never makes a mistake, but always kills the slayer of its companion and him alone. This reptile grows to a length of 13 feet sometimes and is fairly common in Malay and New Guinea. One scratch from its fangs is certain and instant death.

Equal to the Strain.

One of the most suspicious objects on earth is the bass drummer in a brass band. Arrayed in full panoply, and hammering with might and main on both sides of the huge structure sticking out in front of him, he is an awe inspiring and four consid-spected.

It is related of a bass drummer in the Salvation army that that was the band was playing and marching one day at the front of a political procession a day, foregoing probably the same man of the opposite party, rushed ont barking furiously, and singling ont the man with the big drum as being the heavy villain, so to speak, made a dash for him.

The drummer, without removing his eyes from the fiercli depths of space into which he was gazing straight ahead, missed just one beat. With his heavy drumstick he hit the dog a blow that knocked it entirely ont of the action, and went ahead drumming as before.

"Yes, sir," said the Illinitown historian, in speaking of the incident afterward, "she knocked that dog down and came in on time on the next beat! There ain't another native living could have done it!"—Detroit Free Press.

A Wind Railroad.

St. Petersburg, Fla., has a railroad operated entirely by the winds. The road is of standard gange and runs from Tampa bay np a steep grade to the shed of an old fisherman who is the owner, director and operator of the system. One flat car represents the rolling stock, and it is propelled by a great sail made fast to the car near one end, allowing ample room for the assorted loads of fishing materials, oils and provisions which are brought np to the fisherman's shed from time to time from the bay when the wind is inshore and of sufficient strength to move the car. It is then unloaded and returns to the bay again by gravity.

Second Vice President J. A. Wright, Jr., of the International Navigation company, announces that the contract for the construction of two new vessels for the line had been placed with the Cramps in Philadelphia. While neither of these vessels is intended to replace the wrecked Paris, both are to be ships of the first class. The new steamers will not be as fast as either of the "flyers" now in the service of the company, their contract calling for only 17 knots, but they will be in every respect, however, as far as fittings are concerned, equal to the St. Louis

Each of the new ships is to be of 12,000 tons register. They will be furnished with twin screws and triple expansion engines of the latest type and will have a length of 600 feet, with 60 feet beam. Each will carry about 400 cabin and 800 steerage passengers, and will have a very large freight capacity. It is expected that the vessels will be completed by the latter part of next summer.

Order to Examine Accounts, Etc.

State of Minnesota, County of Polk, ss.
In District Court, special term, August 3, 1899.
In the matter of the estate of Frank Le Lacheur, deceased.
On reading and filing the petition of Agnes Mann, administrator of the estate of Frank Lefevre, deceased, representing among other things, that he has fully administered said estate, and praying that a time and place be fixed for examining, settling and allowing the final account of said administrator, and for the assignment of the residue of said estate to the parties entitled thereto by law.
It is ordered, that said petition be examined, and petition heard by this court, on Tuesday the 5th day of September A. D. 1899 at 10 o'clock a. m., at the Probate Office, in said county of Polk.
And it is further ordered, that notice thereof be given to all persons interested, by publishing a copy of this order once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL, a weekly newspaper printed and published at Crookston, Minnesota.
Dated at Crookston, Minn., the 4th day of August, A. D. 1899.
By the Court.
OLE E. HAUGEN,
Judge of Probate.
[1st-20]

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, General Land Office, Washington, June 15, 1899. Notice is hereby given, pursuant to the provisions of section 4 of the Act of Congress approved January 15, 1889 (25 Stat., 639) as amended by the Act of Congress approved February 26, 1895 (28 Stat., 77) that the survey, examination and appraisal of lot 3, sec. 30, T. 151 N., R. 47 W., 5th P. M., in the St. Cloud, Minnesota, land district, will be opened at the office of said district on the 15th day of September, 1899. The lands will be offered for sale at public auction, commencing at 9 a. m. on November 1, 1899. The lands will be offered in tracts covering not more than 160 acres each, and bids will be received for less than 160 acres, which will be sold separately, and in no event will any tract be sold for less than its appraised value. The residue of such lands remaining unsold after such public offering will thereafter be subject to private sale for cash at the appraised value of the same upon application to the proper local land office.
Appraised at $1,000. BENJ. HODMANN, Acting Commissioner.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

By local application as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.
We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of deafness caused by catarrh that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Swift was among the losers. The storm went east from Mentor, visiting Erskine and McIntosh. Fisher was also visited. Lightning struck in several places. It struck the meat market and stunned about a dozen men. It was the greatest electrical display ever witnessed at that place.

—The state convention of the W. C. T. U. will be held in Crookston, beginning Aug. 29 and ending Sept. 1, 1899. Two hundred and fifty delegates are expected and Mrs. Helen Bullock, a lady of national reputation in temperance work, will bent the head. Local committees are hard at work perfecting arrangements and when they ask the old and enemperation of our citizens for the entertainment of this important factor in American good, as much as rally to the call and make this convention a grand success. May it be fruitful in arousing public sentiment against the liquor traffic right here in our city. Whether you vote license or not, come out and hear what this body has to say on this vital question.

Weddings.

NEW OPTIMUS PRESS

The Best Made—Fitted up With all the Modern Improvements, Runs Noiselessly.

THE BEST EQUIPPED OFFICE

In Northern Minnesota—Journal can Turn Out The Highest Grade of Work.

The JOURNAL, as announced last week, has added to its press room equipment a "New Columbian Optimus" press that which there is nothing better on the market. As the name "Optimus" implies it is the best made. It is fourteen feet four inches long by nine feet eight inches wide and is capable of printing a 10 column folio newspaper or a 7 column quarto. Its weight is 18,000 pounds.

But its beauty and utility lie not merely in its large size but also and particularly in the fineness of the mechanism. The machine was remodeled about a year ago and all modern improvements known to printers were incorporated in it, so that the JOURNAL is now prepared to print anything from a common calling card to the largest sized poster, and to do this work with neatness and dispatch. Columns of this paper might be filled in calling attention to the good points about this press but we shall merely refer to a few of them.

Half-tone work, a great deal of which is done nowadays, requires for its proper execution a combination of features which very few machines possess. The "Optimus," however, is one of those which has these three requisites for this class of work: A first-class ink distribution, a firm, even impression, and a perfect delivery.

It is one of the easiest machines to handle and most convenient in all parts of its operation, and these two qualities insure that the best kind of work will be turned out by it.

The front delivery on the "Optimus" is universally acknowledged to be the most perfect, most satisfactory, and best in use on any two-revolution machine. It delivers the printed side up, and does this in such a way that a sheet can easily be taken from the board while the press is in operation, or the entire surface of the sheet can be watched without touching it. Indeed experience has shown that the "Optimus" is the best machine built on which to detect immediately anything wrong with the work. The sheets are dropped on the pile so lightly that there is always enough air left between them to prevent "offset." During the delivery of the sheets nothing touches the printed surface, hence smutting and fly-finger marks are unknown on the "Optimus." The sheets are piled directly over the fountain, and any change necessary to be made in the flow of ink can be done while watching the sheet, and is done directly under the point shown in the delivered sheet as it lies on the pile. This cannot be done if a sheet is lifted to see the face, or taken from the back of the press, as must be done with a back delivery.

The "Optimus" lays an even pile of papers and hence no torn and ruffled edges result. The sheets are stopped on the carriage when carried free from the cylinder, and remain in that position during the entire revolution of the cylinder. This gives more time for the ink to set, and is also the most convenient position from which to take the sheet when making ready. This delivery is the easiest to operate of any in use and no adjustments are required for different sized sheets.

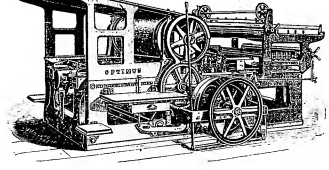
The "New Columbian Optimus" is built very heavy. The girt is very deep and strong and there are six bearings under the cylinder to support the bed while printing. The bed driving mechanism or bed motion, as it is commonly called, has been recently remodeled, and as now built runs very smooth at a high speed. On the point of speed no other two revolution press can compete with it.

The cylinder is lifted by an eccentric box, without joints between the lifting device and the cylinder. Its operation is smooth, noiseless and positive, capable of the finest adjustment and always rigid under the strain of the impression. Connected with this is a patent trip, giving the feeder control of the impression. This is one of the first requisites to doing work at a high speed. This trip can be used up to the point of taking the impression, and no damage can be done to the press if it is operated at any time. As the feeder operates this with his foot, it does not in any way interfere with the work of feeding or require any change from his regular position at the press.

The "Optimus" in fact cannot be beat. It will run faster than any other two revolution press of the same size, it will deliver the sheets cleaner and in a better position than any other, and will give a perfect register. Those who have used it are unanimous in their praise. Nothing could be more complete. When the machine is in operation there is no pounding but every thing runs smoothly and almost noiselessly.

This press is used by numerous publishing houses throughout the land, which is evidence in itself of the high class of work that it is capable of turning out. The War Supplements issued by Harper brothers, which doubtless many of our readers have seen, were printed on an "Optimus" press.

All of these above-mentioned facts go to show that the POLK COUNTY



Our Optimus Printing Press.

JOURNAL has the best equipped newspaper plant in this part of the state. Indeed we have now the best press of any newspaper between the Twin Cities and the Pacific.

After looking the field over carefully we have been led to make these extensive improvements from the fact that we see that the people in Crookston and surrounding country are desirous of getting the highest grade of work, which we are now prepared to give them. We are equipped to do not merely all that other newspaper and job printing offices in this vicinity can do, but much that they can not do and all our work will be the very best.

We invite all our friends to call at the JOURNAL office and look the "Optimus" over and see it work. Thursday morning is the time at which we usually run off the paper.

We came to Crookston eight months ago and we are fully assured that our lines have fallen to us in a pleasant place. We appreciate very much the kindness of friends and the support which they have given us. The generous response which has been made to our solicitations for subscriptions has been very gratifying. Our list of subscribers has more than doubled within the last eight months so that the JOURNAL has now the largest county circulation of any newspaper in Polk county. On our part we propose to merit this treatment. It will be our aim to publish all the news in concise brief form that we may therefore be able to publish the more of it. Agricultural matters shall receive our closest attention. In a word, we intend to look after the interests of the people.

ANNUAL STATE FAIR.

At Hamline Sept. 4 to 9—$35,000 in Premiums and Purses.

The state fair will be the greatest event of the year. There will be complete agricultural, horticultural, dairy, sparty, machinery, mineral, forestry, artistic and miscellaneous displays. The live stock exhibit will be national in character; the best in horses, cattle, sheep, swine and poultry are to be shown.

Two purses, $5,000 each, have been contributed; one by the business men of St. Paul, for a pacing race, the other by the business men of Minneapolis, for a trotting race. These generous contributions added to the big purses given by the society, make it possible to announce the best race and amusement program ever witnessed at a state fair.

A magnificent array of special attractions, both afternoon and evenings. The grounds are to be brilliantly illuminated.

THE SWINE PLAGUE

Near Crookston—Farmers Ought to Quarantine.

It is reported that there are several cases of swine plague in the townships close to Crookston. This is very unfortunate as it was thought that both swine plague and hog cholera were eradicated from this county. However inasmuch as the disease is here the best thing to do is to try to arrest the spread of it so that the damage may be as limited as possible.

Swine plague, like hog cholera, is a germ disease that spreads easily from place to place. It can be carried on a person's shoes, on the feet of horses on the wheels of wagons, stray dogs can carry the germs from one herd to another. Even birds flying from one hog yard to another can be the means of spreading the disease. A farmer is often not to be blamed if his hogs are dying from swine plague as he may be entirely innocent as to how the germs were carried. When the disease has appeared the owner of the animals affected should immediately quarantine his herd.

If the local board of health has any knowledge of the matter it is their duty to establish this quarantine and also to notify the State Board of Health. When the disease is once in the herd the majority of the hogs are likely to die. By separating the well ones from the sick the chances are better that some may be saved. All communication between the two pens should be cut off. No one should be allowed in the pens of the sick hogs except they thoroughly disinfect their clothes or other material that might carry away the germs.

The laws of the state also assist in protecting a farmer from careless neighbors. He can quarantine his own yards and buildings and if any unauthorized person enters them he is subject to fine or imprisonment. The State Board of Health will furnish placard free to all applying, who wish to quarantine their herds. It reads as follows:

NOTICE!

All unauthorized persons are forbidden, under penalty of the law, to approach on these premises, nearer than 50 feet to any pens or yards where hogs are confined.

CHAPTER 233, LAWS OF 1897.

Section 11. Whenever during the prevalence in the state of any contagious or infectious disease among domestic animals, the owner shall post on his premises a notice forbidding all persons not authorized by State or Local Boards of Health to enter any building or enclosure on said premises without permission from said owner. It shall be a misdemeanor to enter upon said premises, punishable by a fine of not less than twenty-five dollars ($25) nor more than one hundred dollars ($100), or by imprisonment for not less than thirty (30) nor more than ninety (90) days.

There is no cure so far discovered. The only practical method is to establish a rigid quarantine and thereby confine the disease to the smallest possible territory.

Cass Lake Will Rebuild.

A late report from Cass Lake says that preparations are being made to rebuild, that the ground is being cleared and with the exception of two or three small buildings all will be replaced with better and more substantial ones. They will not, however, be placed as close together as they were before the fire and streets will be left in the line at proper distances. The homeless ones are being cared for by the other residents of the town for the present.

POLK COUNTY EXHIBIT

Liberal Prizes by George Purvis For Samples of Polk County Products.

MORE SPECIMENS ARE NEEDED.

To Make Sure of First Prize—Let all the People Interest Themselves in the Matter.

In order to stimulate the farmers and market gardeners to bring in specimens to add to the display which he is preparing to properly represent Polk county at the state fair, George Purvis, of Crookston, has decided to offer special prizes to be judged by a competent committee. The prizes for grains and grasses will be awarded on Wednesday, August 30, and on vegetables and fruits Saturday, Sept. 2 as follows:

Small grain, threshed, not less than five varieties containing one peck each, first prize $3, second $2.

Corn in the cob, not less than 12 cobs, first $3, second $2.

Grains in the straw, not less than five varieties, first $3, second $2.

Collection of grasses wild and tame, including clovers, not less than five varieties, first $3, second $2.

Crab apples, not less than one peck of each variety, first $3, second $3.

Preserved fruits in glass jars, not less than five varieties, first $3 second $2.

Best collection of vegetables. Including melons, first $3, second $2.

Entries to be made at the Great Northern land office, Crookston, not later than 9 a. m. the days fixed above for awarding the prizes.

All entries to form part of the Polk county exhibit at the state fair.

The name of the producer will be attached to each exhibit in large type when placed in the county exhibit at the state fair.

During the past week Mr. Purvis has added considerablete the material which he already had on hand. Among those who have sent in specimens are A. J. Hamery of Fertile, who expressed to the land office some winter rye; William Heidrich, of Crookston, some red fife wheat, J. M. Stephens, grain and grasses; G. M. Fiske, millet; C. E. Peterson, of Lowell, tame grasses; S. H. O'Neil, timothy in the straw; Mrs. Sarah L. Mead, clover, and T. A. Hoverstad, five specimens of clover, the giant red, the large red, the alsike, the white and the trefoil, and twelve specimens of tame and wild grasses.

More specimens are, however, needed and the JOURNAL strongly urges the farmers throughout the county to send in specimens. If all take an interest in this matter no one will have much to do, yet the aggregate will be a large collection. Such an exhibit, if it took the prize, as it surely will if enough specimens are collected, would be a great advertisement for Polk county, hence, not merely the farmers but all citizens in the county ought to use their best endeavors to have specimens collected and sent to Mr. Purvis at Crookston.

The JOURNAL suggests that a dairy exhibit be made by the Child's Creamery of South Crookston. In years past exhibits of cheese and butter from this creamery have taken state prizes and we see no reason why the same thing might not occur again.

We would also suggest that the Fenton Woolen Mills prepare an exhibit. This manufacturing establishment is one of the leading industries of Polk county and ought to be represented in any exhibit made by the county.

W. C. T. U. CONVENTION.

Women from State Unions fleet in Crookston Aug. 30-31 and Sept. 1.

During the last three days of August and the first day of September a noted gathering of women will take place in Crookston. At that time the annual state convention of the W. C. T. U. of Minnesota will be held here. There will be present on this occasion two hundred delegates, women prominent in the W. C. T. U. work in all parts of the state.

It will be necessary for these representatives to be billeted at the various houses in this city, or to state it more correctly, it will be the privilege and the pleasure of the citizens of Crookston to entertain these ladies at their homes. The committee on entertainment are Mrs. W. E. Walker, Mrs. Olds, Miss Lizzie Miller, Mrs. William Arnold, Mrs. A. A. Just and Mrs. K. P. Stone, to whom those who can entertain any of the W. C. T. U. delegates are requested to report.

The first meeting of the convention will be held on the evening of Aug. 30. Addresses of welcome will be delivered by several of the prominent citizens of Crookston and representatives of the visiting delegates will respond. Music also will be furnished by some of the Queen City's singers.

The prominence that Crookston has assumed among the cities of the state and enterprise and efficient work on the part of members of the local W. C. T. U., are shown by the fact that these women will congregate here from far and wide. For the Woman's Christian Temperance Union is no ordinary organization, as will be seen if one takes into consideration the fact that the number of its members is legion and that its purpose is the betterment of mankind. The followers of Miss Frances E. Willard—one of the greatest women of America—have done a noble work in the past and their sun is far from setting. With tireless activity they have striven to throttle the monster of the liquor curse and their strivings have not been in vain, even though intoxicants are still sold. Countless are the homes, not merely in our own country, but in foreign lands that have been made brighter and happier through the efforts of these temperance workers.

THAT BAND CONCERT.

Most Delightful Music Furnished—Large Audience Present.

The Concert given last Friday evening at the opera house by the Crookston band and Riggs' Orchestra assisted by Miss Gertrude Gleason, soprano, Mrs. J. C. Geggie, of Duluth, reader and George Dunnell, of Chicago, tenor soloist, was a decided success viewed from all standpoints. The music furnished by the organizations was of a high class and most delightful, the audience was large and appreciative and the proceeds, to be used in buying uniforms for the members of the band, were more than the most sanguine expected. Prof. Riggs and his musicians have on many occasions entertained the people of Crookston but never before have the music lovers of the city been better satisfied.

Miss Gertie Gleason, who has spent the past year in studying vocal and instrumental music at the Conservatory in Boston appeared before a Crookston audience for the first time since her return home and delighted her numerous friends and acquaintances with her singing. Miss Gertie has certainly a wonderful voice and her training this past year has given her great mastery over it. With the added voice culture which she expects to receive great things may be expected of her in the future.

Mrs. Geggie, of Duluth, gave two highly entertaining readings and George Dunnell, who has been studying music in Chicago for some time, sang two tenor solos, the entertainment closing with a selection by the band at which time Master Frank Martin gave an exhibition of fancy baton swinging.

MINNESOTA EDITORS.

Annual Excursion this Year to Denver and Omaha, Sept. 16-23.

For the yearly outing of the editors of Minnesota a trip to Denver and Colorado has been planned, which will take place during the week beginning Sept. 16. The committee in charge of the excursion hope to make arrangements to visit Manitou, the Garden of the Gods, Colorado Springs, Pike's Peak, the Printer's Home, and other points of interest. At Omaha the Exposition will be visited. The trip promises to be one of the most enjoyable which the Association has ever taken.

CITY COUNCIL MEETING

Steam Heating Ordinance Considered but Laid Over Till Next Meeting.

FIRE ALARM TO BE IMPROVED.

City Light Bill For Six Months $1614.42, 1000 Feet of New Hose Ordered.

An adjourned meeting of the city council was held at the city hall last Tuesday evening. The steam heating ordinance again came up for consideration. Alderman Cbilds again offered his two amendments, providing that the franchise be granted for 15 years instead of for an indefinite time and that the company, to whom the franchise was granted, during its life heat the city hall. No one seconding the amendments, nothing was done with them. Alderman Harris offered an amendment providing that the rates charged by the company be uniform. This amendment was voted down the chair casting the decising vote. The ordinance, then, stands just as it was at first and will again be acted upon at the next meeting.

Money amounting to more than $4,000.00 was voted to pay bills incurred by the city, among the items $2360.00 being allowed for semi-annual water rent, $133.35 for lighting the city hall from Jan. 1. to July 1, 1899, $41.40 for light fixtures, the total for city lights between the above dates being $1,614.42.

The city attorney was instructed to appeal the case of Frank Magean vs city. Mr. Mageau had sued the city for expenses incurred in heating the city hall for the city before the city had accepted the building and had received judgment in the justice of the peace court for $17.00.

A committee was instructed to prepare plans and specifications and advertise for bids in the matter of changing the fire alarm and report at the next meeting.

The fire committee was instructed to buy 1,000 feet of new hose.

On motion the council adjourned for one week.

CAN'T BE FOUND.

L. J. Bollman, on G. N. Passenger, Disappears From the Train.

Inquiry is bding made along the line of the Great Northern for L. J. Bollman, formerly of Donaldson, Ind., who mysteriously disappeared Tuesday morning some where this side of Barnesville.

Mr. Bollman, with five friends, left St. Paul Monday night on Great Northern train No. 7, which comes through Crookston by way of Barnesville. The party were en poute to North Dakota in search of land, and had slept during the most of the trip from St. Paul to Barnesville. At Barnesville, it being about daybreak, the men began to move about, and Mr. Bollman was seen by one of the party some distance this sideof Barnesville. Some time after this one of the party noticed that Bollman's seat was vacant, and his friends recalled that they had not seen him for some time. Supposing him to be in another coach they did not at once begin to search for him, and when they did so he was not to be found. When the train reached Grand Forks it had been searched from end to end, and still the man was missing. Messages were sent to stations all along the line, but without avail. His ticket was for Churchs Ferry, where his five friends went.

Mr Bollman is about 25 years old, about 5 feet 7 inches high, and weighed about 150 pounds. He is light complexioned, hair very close clipped, smooth shaven and wears a black sbirt with stripes, and a brown suit somewhat breabbare. Any one knowing of his whereabouts is requested to communicate with C. L. Burt, Churchs Ferry.

The missing man left his hat, coat and grip in the coach, and among his effects was found a letter from Max Bass, Great Northern immigration agent, arranging for a meeting in Chicago. It is feared that Bollman has fallen from the train and been killed.

Adjournment Denied.

Reanes, France, Aug. 16. This morning, Maitre Demange counsel for Capt. Dreyfus, applied for an adjournment of the court on account of Maitre Labori's absence. Maj. Carriere, the government commissary, unexpectedly arose and opposed the application in the most vehement manner, with the gestures of a stump orator. The court rejected the application.

NEW NATIONAL PARK.

For Pleasure and Health—Funds to be Raised by Voluntary Gifts.

The following, taken from the constitution of the National Park Association, formed last week in Chicago, sets forth the purpose of the organization:

The object of the association is to preserve as a great national park, as far as practicable, the native forests, waters and topography of an extensive tract of land in the northern part of Minnesota, together with the wild game in the woods that as an intelligent system of forestry may be established therein, and that our citizens may have for generations to come a great park abounding in native and cultivated forests and waters, to which they can resort in search of health and enjoyment, and that the preservation and renewal of the forests may be inaugurated in the central western states of the Union. Any citizen of the United States of good character and in sympathy with the object and purposes of this association shall be eligible to membership, and shall become such member when elected by the executive committee of the association, but no dues shall be required from members. The funds necessary to carry out the object and purposes of this organization shall be raised by voluntary contributions, and shall be paid to the treasurer, to be by him disbursed as directed by the executive board.

DESTRUCTIVE STORM.

Two Million Bushels of Wheat Lost in N. D. and Minn.

A severe hail storm passed across the Northern part of Cass and the southern part of Traill counties, N. D. last Thursday morning. Going in a southeasterly direction it cleaned up a strip ten or fifteen miles wide, crossed the line into Minnesota and did much damage in Halstad, Henderson, Perly and vicinity. The Grandin farm in North Dakota lost fifteen sections. At Halstad the crops were almost totally destroyed. At Hendrum the loss was little less.

Two million bushels of wheat are estimated to have been lost in the big storm. The loss seems doubly severe from the fact that harvest was progressing nicely and from 15 to 20 per cent. of the crop was cut. In many cases the binders were at work in the fields before the storm came, but after it had passed they were at once housed where they will remain till about this time next year. In all the storm stricken section insurance men assess that less than 5 per cent. of the acreage was covered by hail insurance.

Literary Notes.

REVIEW OF REVIEWS.

Several months ago the Review of Reviews published the Canadian side of the Alaskan boundary dispute. In the August number the American side is presented by Mr. William H. Lewis, of Washington State, who bases his argument entirely on the facts as set forth in the British official records.

A prominent feature of the August Review of Reviews is the illustrated article on "The 'America's' Cup Race in 1899," which tells the story of the cup itself and the famous contest for its possession, describes the new challenger and defender, and adds much interesting detail about the chief personalities concerned on both sides in the approaching race.

GREAT NEED OF AID

SERIOUS CONDITION OF AFFAIRS IN PORTO RICO

On Account of the Hurricane Outland by General Davis—All Means of Support Gone and Thousands Are Dependent on Charity—One-fifth of the Dwellings on the Island Devastated by the Hurricane—Loss of Life at Least One Thousand and Possibly Very Much Greater.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—A dispatch from Governor General Davis of Porto Rico, giving additional details of the fearful havoc wrought by the hurricane of last week, was received at the war department during the day. It was immediately sent to Secretary Root, who already has taken measures for dispatching relief to the people of the island. The dispatch is as follows:

"The true state of affairs throughout the island is not known because of total destruction of all the telegraph connections and great destruction on all roads. Not more than one-fourth of the towns are heard from yet, but enough is known to warrant that one-fifth of the dwellings in the island are totally destroyed and their owners are without any shelter whatever or any food beyond what has been saved from the debris. The coffee crop and most of the trees are ruined and thus reliance for support is gone. Fully one-third of the people and a small degree on tubes. All the former is destroyed and much of the latter rotting in the ground. Many thousands of cattle are drowned and the debris carried down by the rivers is strewn over the ocean with the wreck of the storm and the dead bodies of animals. The deaths from falling walls and drowning will number more than 1,000 and may be several times this number. The state of distress is very great and when green fruits saved from the debris are consumed the suffering will be very great. I am receiving and forwarding everywhere within reach as much as possible but in one of the way places are many thousands who cannot be reached for some time. The supplies ordered sent by the government will help much but will last only for a few days while for many weeks or some months until the bananas grow up from the ground, for which five months are at least required. Food of all kinds are needed, especially rice, beans and codfish, which has been the main support outside of fruit. Cheap cotton clothing is also needed, for thousands are naked from their dwellings at night when the gale broke. Medicines are also needed most pressingly, especially quinine and other simple medicines. I estimate that at least 1,000 tons of food will be required weekly for several weeks. I have constituted boards all over the island to receive assistance and a general board here to conduct the relief work. While I have not yet full data I repeat the estimate that at least 100,000 people are Homeless and Destitute.

Destitution Must Continue

Relief ration proposed one pound of food per day, composed of seven ounces of beans, seven ounces of rice and two ounces of codfish. In addition to the ration ordered by the McPherson I ask that 2,400 tons above proportions, should be shipped next week. Before this is consumed I will have full data respecting future needs but I fear extensive issues of provisions will be necessary for several months. I shall push work on the roads and give employment to as many as possible. I hope the charitable people of the States will send clothing, clothes, medicines and money. Colonel Hofer, chief surgeon of the department, is chairman of the board of relief and auxiliary boards are organizing in all the towns. Five posts not yet heard from."

DEFEAT FOR JIMINEZ.

Dominican Revolutionists Routed With Great Loss.

PUERTO PLATA, Aug. 16.—The government forces commanded by General Heureaux have defeated the insurgents. The rout w almost a massacre. The wounded on both sides are numerous. The engagement is considered by the government as decisively ending the Jiminez upr sing.

The government plan for the gradual withdrawal of paper money from circulation has re-established confidence. Short term bills of exchange in Europe sell for 200 per cent silver. The Dominicans are jubilant and congratulations are for the use of American money.

GERMAN VETERANS IN LINE.

Hundred Thousand Tent on Participate in a Chicago Celebration.

CHICAGO, Aug. 14.—One hundred thousand German-American citizens participated in the celebration incident to the opening of the 14th annual conference of the Kreigerbund and the 25th annual reunion in America of the Deutscher Kriegerverein. The latter includes veterans of the German army and the latter veterans of the Franco-Prussian war.

Chinese Soldiers Slaughtered.

CANTON, Aug. 16.—Five hundred soldiers were massacred at Cotkon, on the West river, by 10,000 robbers and a desperate fight occurred, ending in a victory for the robbers, who have hoisted their flags upon all commanding points, and occupied the villages in the vicinity. Two hundred and fifty soldiers were killed and one hundred wounded.

Two thousand more troops have left Canton for the scene.

Smelter Strike Declared Off.

DENVER, Aug. 14.—The strike of the employes of the American Smelting and Refining company's plant in Colorado was declared off at a meeting of the Smeltar Man's union in this city.

DOESN'T WANT THE HOME.

Admiral Dewey, If Is Said, Will Advise That Money Raised Be Used for Soldiers and Sailors.

While unwilling to accept a home for himself, Admiral Dewey is desirous that the money collected for his benefit be used in the establishment of a soldiers' and sailors' home, says a Washington correspondent of the New York Herald. A private cablegram sent by the admiral to a friend gives the authority for this statement.

The admiral has not communicated with the committee, therefore, doubtless because they have never informed him of what they are doing.

Members of the committee and friends of the admiral have been expecting that he would decline to receive the home and would suggest that the home be employed for veterans.

Treasurer Roberts, who is also treasurer of the Dewey fund, said that the committee would continue its collection and that when the sum originally determined upon had been raised a decision would be reached relative to its disposition.

In naval circles generally and among officials much satisfaction is felt at the admiral's decision. It has been stated that he would find a home such as was intended a white elephant and would prefer to live as he has been accustomed to.

—C. W. Palmer of Troy, N. Y., reached Crookston this morning. He will spend several weeks here in looking after his farms.

M. LABORI IS SHOT

COUNSEL FOR DREYFUS ATTACKED ON HIS WAY TO COURT.

Bullet Enters His Back and Causes a Bad Wound—Two Men Laid in Wait for Him in a Street Lane Leading From His Home—Further Arrests Made in Connection With Charges of Conspiracy.

RENNES, Aug. 14.—Two men ambushed Maitre Labori, counsel for Dreyfus, and one shot was fired, hitting M. Labori in the back. He is still alive, but is very badly wounded.

Maitre Labori left his house alone for the court at about 8 a. m. His residence is situated in the suburbs of the town, about a quarter of an hour's walk from the Lycee, the route being along a solitary road beside the River Villaine. He had reached a point half way on his journey when two men, who had evidently been rushed out of a narrow lane and one of them fired a single shot from a revolver. The murderers were only a couple of yards behind their victim and the bullet struck Maitre Labori in the back. The wounded man uttered an agonized cry and fell flat on his face. The murderers immediately fled through the lane from which they had emerged and both escaped.

POSTPONEMENT REFUSED

Dreyfus Courtmartial to Proceed Without Labori.

RENNES, Aug. 16.—Owing to the opposition of Major Carriere, the government commissary, the courtmartial has refused the application of M. Demange for an adjournment of the trial until Monday. The proceedings opened without disorder.

RENNES, Aug. 16.—M. Labori has been removed to the residence of Professor Basch in a suburb of Rennes. He stood the journey well, although generally fatigued. The doctors are extremely hopeful of a speedy recovery.

RATHER UNFAVORABLE.

Day's Testimony at the Courtmartial Strongly Against Dreyfus.

RENNES, Aug. 15.—The day's session of the Dreyfus courtmartial was utterly devoid of any exciting incident, the mass of the testimony being directed against Dreyfus and the lack of trenchant criticism, owing to the absence of the defense's right arm, naturally left an impression unfavorable to the prisoner. The depositions of Generals Zurlinden and Chamoine and M. Bunotaux were listened to closely.

General Mercier was acclaimed on leaving the court and M. Casimir-Perier was greeted with cheers and counter cheers for the army.

Scene at Dreyfus' Guilt.

Both M. Labori and M. Cavaignac were positive in their opinions that Dreyfus was guilty. M. Bunotaux and General Zurlinden also testified in the same strain, but less emphatically than M. Cavaignac.

When Cavaignac had finished, Colonel Jouaust then told Dreyfus to rise and asked him if he had any remarks to make upon the evidence.

The prisoner, who during M. Cavaignac's examination had been in a most nervous and agitated, replied in a low voice:

"I am astonished that the man who produced in the tribunal of the chamber the Henry forgery, can come here and base his convictions of my culpability on matters which the court of cassation has already disposed of." (Great sensation).

Court adjourned at noon until Wednesday.

CONSPIRACY THE CHARGE.

Members of the Patriotic League Arrested in Paris.

PARIS, Aug. 14.—M. Paul Deroulede founder of the League of Patriots and a member of the chamber of deputies for the Angouleme division of Charente, was arrested at 4 o'clock a. m. at his estate at Croissey, near Paris. A number of members of the Anti-Semite and Patriotic leagues were also arrested. A semi-official note issued reads as follows:

"A certain number of arrests were made as the result of a magisterial inquiry and by virtue of article 89 of the penal code, regarding a conspiracy organized for the purpose of accomplishing a change in the form of government. The persons implicated belong to the groups of the royalist youth and the Patriotic and Anti-Semitic leagues. At a trial of t. Neuilly barracks affair, facts relating to that incident alone were used as the basis of the prosecution, but searches were then made and documents were seized which led to the discovery of an organization dating back to July, 1898, and of a plot to seize the government by force. The documents leave no room for doubt, either in regard to the existence of the plot or as to the chief actors therein. After very close watch, organized proof was obtained that the same groups were preparing for a fresh attempt at an early date, the proof being such as to enable the disturbances to be averted by immediate measures. The investigation of the affair is entrusted to M. Fabre, examining magistrate."

Transport Senator Sails.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 16.—The transport Senator has sailed for Manila with about 700 officers and recruits and a signal corps.

HANNA ON PORTO RICO.

Former United States Consul Talks About the Island.

ITS POSSIBILITIES OF THE FUTURE.

Thinks It Will Prove America's Most Valuable Acquisition—Sees the Island's Condition Is Being Improved—Affections of Yankee Spirit Which Have Spread Among the Natives.

Philip C. Hanna, who was the last of the United States consuls to San Juan, Porto Rico, says that that island will prove to be the best territorial acquisition made by the United States in the past 40 years. Mr. Hanna gave up the consulship Aug. 1 and is now in the United States enjoying rest after his official labor, says the New York Sun.

"Porto Rico," said the former consul, "is not like the other islands that have come into our possession. Inasmuch as there is not a spark of that insurgent feeling among the inhabitants that there is in the other islands. The leaders as a people are not aggressive; they are not contentious, nor are they of that class that in leisure moments compares its condition with that of the classes above it in order to find some source of discontent or hatred to the existing order of things. They are philosophical to a fault, and when they see that a thing will not go exactly in the direction that they would have it, they accept the situation and wait.

"After the Porto Ricans have been awhile under United States rule, that is, after some form of self government has been given to them, with all the legal benefits that accrue therefrom, they will be found to be the best American citizens outside the United States, and, more than that, they will prove to be better citizens than many within the States. When Uncle Sam got Porto Rico he got a good thing, and all that is necessary now is to place it under a free and liberal government.

"As a class, the islanders are industrious and, moral, and the women are very religious. It has been said by some that the marriage laws were not held in very high esteem by the poorer people, but there is a cogent reason for that. According to the religious training of the people, no marriage among Porto Ricans was considered binding unless the ceremonies were performed by the church. Now, in order for a poor man to get a church marriage in Porto Rico, he would have to pay the accumulation of two years' savings. Rather than do that he says to his wife, 'We will take this money and furnish a house and therein bring up our children. During my two years' sojourn on the island I have known of a great many cases of such marriages, and I do not think I can cite one where both parties have not observed for each other respect and loyalty. When the United States established a military government on the island, they legalized all such marriages by a military law, and today Porto Ricans can be legally united in marriage without its costing them a dollar.

"It was thought by the majority of the people in the United States that just as soon as the war was over and some temporary form of American government was established on the island, the island then be ripe for American capital and American industry to step right in and take hold, but such was not the case. I received instructions from Washington to send broadcast through the States a circular to the effect that Porto Rico was not yet ready for an invasion of American capital, and that it would not be ready until congress had decided upon some lasting form of government for the island. When a government has been established and courts have been organized and laws have been made, there will be no place under the control of the United States where American capital can be invested to better advantage.

"From what I have learned from inside sources of the government's intentions toward Porto Rico, I think that a territorial government will be established, and then, when all revenue duty on exports into the United States and imports from the States are abolished, such a wave of prosperity will begin in the island as never was known before. All that money now being collected by revenue officers will go into the pockets of the poor man, and then he will be able to cloth himself better, feed himself better and enjoy life in every way better than he ever did before. The possibilities of the agricultural development of the island are without a peer in any country. The tobacco, coffee, fruits and sugar grown on the island are world famous for their excellence, and with the aid of modern farming implements and American capital the island will be the richest agricultural spot in the world.

"Every cent of revenue that the United States government is now collecting on the imports or exports of Porto Rico is being expended on the improvement of the condition of the island. Public schools are being established in all the smaller towns and villages. The large cities are being cleaned and improved throughout. Estimates on new public buildings are being taken, and everything possible in the way of modern improvement that can be done is now in preparation.

"Since the regular troops have taken the place of the volunteers on the island there has been no trouble with the military government of Porto Rico. When the volunteers were in charge, there was to be considerable friction between them and the Islanders. No one can question their ability to fight, for they have proved that. On the other hand, the regulars are not only good fighters, but they are disciplined and orderly as well. They accept their position and responsibility and, when ordered, obey. The government made a wise move when they removed the volunteers and sent down the regulars to garrison the island.

"It is amusing at times to see the infectious of Yankee spirit which have spread among the majority of our new West Indian citizens. On July 4 last they acted with a degree of patriotic enthusiasm that is rarely seen in the States. They held athletic games of all kinds, in which there was a rare mixture of American customs and old Spanish usages. They had barbecues, picnics, parades, bonfires and pyrotechnic displays that almost cast the exuberant patriotism of the States in the shade. There is no doubt but that the Porto Ricans will become the most Americanized of new Americans."

EVAPORATED BANANAS.

A New Delicacy to Be Placed Upon the American Market.

Evaporated bananas are to be a new delicacy in the markets of the United States. Mr. Arthur P. Spavin of Baltimore is said to be the originator of the idea and after a trip to Jamaica has sent representatives down there to erect a plant for carrying out the plan. As yet the evaporation idea is in its infancy, but there seems to be no doubt that it will be perfected, and bananas that now cannot be shipped from Jamaica in the natural state will reach the markets of the United States in another form.

Mr. Spavin expects to place his first evaporated fruit on the market this fall, says the Baltimore Sun. Whatever may be the state of the weather the prepared banana can reach the market in an attractive state without being affected by the summer heat or winter chill as is the case with fruit when forwarded in its original bunch from the plant. In a small way the evaporated fruit has been tried in Europe, to which country it is impossible to send it in the natural state. Confectioners like evaporated bananas as a base for candied fruits, and bakers can use them in a variety of ways.

Bananas have been evaporated to some extent in Nicaragua, and, according to authentic information, if the plan proves successful the industry will be introduced into the banana producing districts throughout Central America, the West Indies and probably all other tropical and semitropical regions where the banana is grown.

The general method of evaporation is that pursued with juicy fruits. The thoroughly ripe banana is placed in an oven and subjected to heat for 24 to 48 hours, as may be required. The sugar crystallizes on the outside. The evaporated product is then packed in boxes for the wholesale trade. It requires six pounds of fresh fruit to make one pound evaporated; hence the economy of space in transporting is important, to say nothing of the saving in preventing decay in transit.

WEDS A FUNSTON HERO.

Winfield Bachelor Girls' Club President Marries Private Davison.

The success of the Girls' Bachelor club of Winfield, near Wichita, Kan., is assured. According to the vow she took when she became a member, Miss May Williams was married the other day to Private Davison of Company H, Twentieth Kansas volunteers.

The rules of this club are that members must wed a Twentieth Kansas hero or no one at all. Miss Williams was the president of the club, and by her perseverance she will win a silver tea service as the first one of the club to marry, says the Chicago Inter Ocean.

This club was organized about two months ago, and there were 50 pretty and aristocratic girls of the little college town of Winfield who pledged themselves to marry no other men than members of the famous Funston regiment. The one who married first was to be presented a silver tea service by the club. It was on the first day of August that Private Davison came home from the Philippines. He was wounded and had arrived with a shipload of other sick soldiers. The other girls say he was sent in the park and fainted from the heat. May Williams ran to his rescue. That night they were married and the whole town rejoiced. The other club members are now busy looking around for soldier husbands. Miss Williams and Private Davison were sweethearts in their youth.

Sonnanabullet Starts on a Squirrel Hunt.

John Williams, a young farmer of West Union, O., is an expert squirrel hunter, and is also afflicted with somnambulism, says the Cincinnati Enquirer. The other day at daybreak he awakened to find himself at the edge of a wood half a mile from home. He was in his night garb, and was carrying his gun. He had evidently started on a squirrel hunt.

Lost in a Tennessee Cavern.

A Mr. Chouteau of Monterey, Tenn., left some weeks ago to explore an extensive cave, five miles south of Monterey, and has not been heard of since, says the Memphis Commercial Appeal. The cave has never been explored beyond a few miles, is supposed to be ten miles in extent, and it is feared he lost his way in underground passages and perished.

A Need in the South.

One great need in the south at present is technically educated young men, competent to take charge of the new industries which are springing up every day, says the Savannah (Ga.) News, or to succeed to vacancies in the old and established mills, factories and mines.

BOSTON LYRIC OPERA COMPANY.

Will be in Crookston Wednesday, Aug. 23.

The coming engagement of the famous Col. W. A. Thompson Boston Lyric Opera Company will prove to be an event of considerable importance. It will offer to the Crookston public an opportunity of witnessing the best repertoire opera company now playing in the country, an organization whose standard of excellence, whose reputation for grandeur of production has placed it rightfully in the topmost rank of the greatest companies of the day. It is complete in every particular. Money has not been spared in making it so. Absolute perfection in the performances is the rule always adhered to in every particular.

The company of principals with which Col. Thompson has surrounded himself and which he brings to this city for the coming engagement are well known artists of the highest order of merit in the musical world, and are famous singers. It includes Miss Josephine Stanton, for years connected with the DeWolf Hopper and Frances Wilson Opera Company, and who for a number of years was especially engaged for the Cincinnati May Festivals, sharing honors with such artists as Melba, Schalchi, De Vigne and others of the same high standard. Miss Maude Leekley, a mezzo of rarest quality, whose beauty of person and winning manner have gained for her the praise and encomiums of the entire press of the country. Miss Katherine MacNeill; Lorenz Doelwell, for years the leading baritone of the Emma Abbott Opera Company; Henry Hallam, tenor of the Casino forces, George Kunkel, the most natural and amusing of comedians; Frederick Eugene Rogers and others.

The chorus, an absolute feature in itself, composed as it is of thirty-five grandly trained voices, a large number of which are girls of handsome face and figure.

Don't Forget the Date, Wednesday, August 23.

A LITERARY COINCIDENCE.

Dreyfus Say, Like Sterne's Marquis, Reclaims His Sword at Rennes.

In the "Temple Classics," Mr. Dent's series of good literature for the pocket, Sterne's "Sentimental Journey" has just been issued, says the London correspondent of the New York Herald. Glancing through it one would strike the eye, and brings the reader to a halt. That word is Rennes, a name just now in every one's mind as the spot selected to see, very probably, Captain Dreyfus make good the right to receive again his sword. It was at Rennes that nearly a century ago Sterne witnessed the return of his sword to one Marquis of E——.

"The marquis entered the court with his whole family; he supported his lady—his eldest son supported his sister, and his youngest was at the other extreme of the line next his mother. He put his handkerchief to his face twice.

"There was a dead silence. When the marquis had approached within six paces of the tribunal, he gave the handkerchief to his youngest son, and, advancing three steps before his family, he reclaimed his sword. His sword was given him, and the moment he got it into his hand he drew it almost out of the scabbard—'twas the shining face of a friend he had once given up. He looked attentively along it, beginning at the hilt, as if to see whether it was the same, when, observing a little rust which had contracted near the point, he brought it near his eye, and bending his head over it—I think I saw a tear fall upon the place—I could not be deceived by what followed,

. . . . . .

"'I shall find,' said he, 'some other way to get it off.'

"When the marquis had said this, he returned his sword into his scabbard, made a bow to the guardians of it, and, with his wife and daughter and his two sons following him, walked out.

"Oh, how I envied him his feeling!"

How many will there be who will envy the feelings of Captain Dreyfus when he receives back his sword?

AMERICAN COAL AT PARIS.

The Showing at the Exposition in 1900.

The plans already under discussion for securing a European market for American coal, particularly anthracite, will be forwarded by the action of Ferdinand W. Peck, commissioner general of the United States exhibit at the Paris exposition in 1900, who announced recently that he desired to make the American coal exhibit one of the most interesting and prominent at the exposition.

The coal exhibit will be prominent in the United States department, and will be arranged in handsome glass cases, 7 feet high and 4 feet in length. Necessarily no large samples can be accommodated in such an exhibit, and it is preferable that small cubes of about four pounds weight should be sent, says the New York Post. The place where found or mined, the thickness of the seam, the analysis of the coal, are particularly sought from exhibitors. Views of collieries, works, shipping arrangements, steam colliers, barges, etc., will also be shown.

The Anthracite Coal Operators' association in its letter for Amerost, issued in full the other day, deprecates the fact that the commissioner has not even it to give enough space to mine coal exhibits, and suggests that unless this can be done the exhibits will have little or no commercial value. The association will, therefore, make no united effort to demonstrate the value of American coal as it could have done had sufficient space been given.

TAGS FOR SOLDIERS.

An Easy Means of Identification in Case of Death.

Assistant Secretary Melkiejohn of the war department at Washington now has under consideration several devices for identifying soldiers who have been killed in battle. The most practicable scheme yet submitted is to furnish all regiments with medallions about the size of a half dollar, made of a combination of metals of which a large part is aluminium, says the Chicago Tribune. The regimental and company designation will be on one side, and the medals will be numbered consecutively and each man's number placed opposite his name on the muster rolls.

These tags will be suspended about the neck with a ribbon or a strong piece of twine. The object in tagging the soldiers will be to afford easy means of identifying those wounded, killed in action or who die in hospitals. The inscription on the tag can be scratched upon a rude headboard when a soldier is buried on a field of battle and the device buried with him, making identification almost certain.

The large number of unidentified dead in the Spanish war has caused the department some concern, and it is to prevent a recurrence of this in the Philippines with the new volunteer regiments that the subject is now taking up.

THE popular song "She was bred in Old Kentucky" will soon be changed to "There is Chaos in Old Kentucky," for use by the anti-Goobelites.

WE call the attention of JOURNAL readers to the cut of our new Optimus press which we print on the first page. While the cut is a handsome one, the press itself is much handsomer. Come in and see how smoothly it runs.

Bryan has agreed to stump the State of Kentucky for Goebel, the regular democratic nominee for governor. As bolting democrats to a large number are opposing Goebel's election, the would-be president of the United States is liable to get himself into trouble. But then that is nothing unusual. He is always doing that when he talks.

THE great yacht race for the America's cup which is to take place near New York some time in October between the British yacht Shamrock and the American yacht Columbia is attracting a great deal of attention. This fact is refreshing and is evidence that the instinct for play is far from dead, for the race is a matter of pure sport. No money is at stake, honor alone is the prize.

Two commission men in St. Paul have been arrested for violating the Grindeland law which compels the commission men of the state to give bonds. A test case will be made in this case as the men of this business have declared the law unconstitutional. The object of the law—to protect the farmers against unscrupulous business men—was a worthy one. All that its author desired was to insure fair and honest dealings with the farmers.

Now that the war department at Washington is pushing matters anent the war more rigorously. Ex-Secretary Alger gives it out that the new secretary is merely carrying out his plans. We wonder if it was part of Mr. Alger's arrangements to seek the advice of General Miles as Secretary Root has done. The Michigan politician, we are of the opinion, is not going to improve his case by talking. The less said by him the better for him.

THE report that the new secretary of war and General Miles have been in consultation touching matters pertaining to the war department will be welcome news to the vast majority of the people of the United States. General Miles is a general favorite because of his record as a fighting soldier, and the treatment that he received from Alger was highly displeasing to the nation. As commanding general of the army his opinions with reference to the Philippine campaigns should have great weight as they undoubtedly will have in the future. If Otis should be recalled Miles is the man to take his place.

CONGRESSMAN PAYNE, of Ohio, on his way back from Alaska recently spent several days in Minnesota and with reference to this visit he said: "I am glad of it. I did not appreciate the importance of Minnesota as I see it on nearer view. It is a pivotal state between the east and west and commands attention in national affairs. I am delighted with the appearance of solidity in the community." This goes with other facts to show how great and important the State of Minnesota is becoming. Our business enterprise, rich agricultural communities and the men who represent us at Washington are fast forging us as a state to the very front rank.

THE publication of the JOURNAL last week was unavoidably delayed till the very last of the week owing to the fact that we were putting in our new Optimus press. Though work was prolonged till 2 o'clock in the morning several times, it was impossible to get the machine in working order till Saturday.

EVERYTHING points to a war in the Transvaal. The British government is sending thousands of soldiers to South Africa and the Boers are arming themselves for the expected conflict. Emperor William, of Germany, is probably backing up Kruger as he promised to do several years ago at a critical time. It seems unfortunate that the matter cannot be settled by arbitration but the indications at present are against such an outcome.

WE notice that Joseph Tyson, one of the proprietors of the Glendale herd of Polled Aberdeen Angus cattle near Redwood Falls, Minn., recently made a tour through England, Scotland and France, for the purpose of looking over the Polled Aberdeen Angus herds there. On his return he brought with him a cow and two bull calves of a strain different from any in his herd. We congratulate our old friend Mr. Tysou upon this addition of such superb animals to his herd.

COMPLAINTS are numerous from all parts of the state that the game wardens are failing to protect the game, in fact, in many instances they themselves are among those who are breaking the laws. In the country to our east moose have been killed out of season for months and now the pot hunters are after the prairie chickens. This deplorable state of affairs ought not to continue. Governor Lind ought to see to it that the game wardens who are neglecting their duties be removed from office.

OUR esteemed contemporary, the Warren Register, has been making great strides forward of late, and Stevens Bros., the proprietors, are to be congratulated upon the improvements which they have recently made in their newspaper plant. They have placed in their press room a cylinder press of a model kind and changed the paper to a six column quarto, so that it is now in shape and size similar to the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL. Such business enterprise will undoubtedly be appreciated by the people of Warren and vicinity.

THE article on the swine plague found elsewhere in this issue should be carefully read by the farmers. Though the disease that is reported to have broken out in several herds of swine in this vicinity is not the dreaded Hog Cholera still it is deadly enough. The utmost precautions should be taken, not merely by the farmers who own the diseased hogs, but by other farmers, to prevent the spread of the disease. Quarantine should be established as provided for by law, which law is quoted in the article above mentioned.

RENNES in Northwestern France is at the present time quite famous. The eyes of the civilized world are upon that village and news from there is eagerly read by men and women in all countries, for there a few, a captain in the French artillery Alfred Dreyfus, charged with treasonable conduct, is being tried before a court martial. There are few people the round world over but that hope that this man will be declared not guilty, for it is generally felt that only thus will right prevail It is indeed a wonderful spectacle to behold millions upon millions of people anxious that justice may be meted out to one comparatively obscure individual.

BOSS CROKER, of New York, has flopped over to what is called anti-imperialism and Bryanism. In other words he is now a bitter opponent of the administration's policy in the Philippines and favors Bryan as democratic presidential candidate. No one, however, for a moment believes that Croker's recent severe criticism of McKinley is at all sincere. Political or personal reasons have led him to change front hence his opinion will have very little weight save in Tammany circles. It is indeed unfortunate that a man of Croker's character should have the power in New York City that he has.

THE project of setting aside a large tract of land in Northern Minuesota for a national park is meeting with quite general approval, as it should. An association has been formed with Cyrus Northrup of Minneapolis as president, and among the vice presidents are Gov. Roseveelt of New York and Bishop Gilbert of Minnesota. Money considerations might dictate that the timber within the proposed park would better be turned into lumber but there are other standpoints from which to look at the matter than that of money making. The majestic pine forests ought to be preserved because of their life giving powers. The pure bracing atmosphere and the beauties of nature to be found in these primeval forests are worth untold gold.

THE 13th Regiment of Minuesota Volunteers, which has been doing duty in the Philippines for more than a year, sailed from Manila last Friday and with favorable weather will reach San Francisco within thirty days from that time. They will be mustered out on the Pacific coast so that they are not likely to arrive home before October. Extensive preparations are being made for the reception of the boys when they reach their various homes in the state. This is just and right and exactly what would be expected of Minuesota. Our boys left home and friends and good situations at the call of their country and this sacrifice ought to be and is appreciated. The gallant conduct of both privates and officers in the field merited and received high commendation and nothing that may be done for our returning boys in blue will be too good for them.

TROUBLE in France is eminent and a revolution not improbable. Plots on the part of Bonapartists and Orleanists are being brought to light, the leader of the Anti-Semites with many followers is barricaded at the headquarters of the league and blood is likely to be shed before he is arrested and on the top of all this is the attempted assassination of M. Labori, counsel for Dreyfus. The facts in the case go to show that the shooting of Labori was the result of a plot on the part of the Anti-Dreyfusards. The evidence against Dreyfus that has been given at the court martial has been exceedingly weak and his opponents evidently thought to strengthen their side by killing Labori, in which nefarious crime they were not successful. It was indeed a dastardly deed to attempt the murder of a man just as he was about to plead in behalf of a man who has been most shamefully treated.

NEW LINE TO FOSSTON.

G. N. Short Line From Cities via Sebeka and Fosston.

Sebeka, a village on the Great Northern about thirty miles north of Wadena, is, according to the Wadena Tribune, enjoying considerable of a boom just at present. The Great Northern is making extensive improvements at that place, which fact gives credence to report that J. J. Hill expects to build a line from Sebeka northwest to Fosston. This extension will give the Great Northern a much straighter and shorter road from Crookston to the Twin Cities and this branch will become a part of the main line, with a divisional terminal at Sebeka.

Notes From Exchanges.

Minneapolis Journal: The states of Minnesota, North Dakota and South Dakota have apparently raised a 200,000,000 bushel crop of wheat in 1899.

Detroit Record: If the Republicans of Minnesota unite upon Judge Collins they would sweep populism and political orphanism from the face of the state.

St. Peter Tribune: John Lind's new grain inspector, Reishus, has had much experience with politics and political farming, but very little in handling grain. Time will develop how much the farmers have gained by the change.

St. Cloud Journal-Press: "The Journal-Press will take the responsibility of saying, without having, however, any definite word from Judge Collins, who is out of the city, that he will be a candidate for governor when the proper time comes."

Brainerd Dispatch: It's 16 to 1 that Bryan will not mention the appeal that is going up from the farmers of the northwest for help to harvest the crops with, in his platform speeches. The extraordinary demand for laboring men at high wages is terribly discouraging to the populistic shouters.

Crookston Tribune: It is certainly very gratifying that the farmers of Polk county have taken such an interest in the display of grasses and grains that Mr. George Purvis is making to be sent to the state fair this year. The collection now is quite large and more is being added daily. The work of arranging the display is taking considerable time and a great deal of credit is due Mr. Purvis for his untiring efforts to advance the interests of Polk county.

Thirteen Towns: If you haven't done so already, it is time for you to wake up to the fact that Fosston is going to have one of the best fairs, this year, ever held here. Premiums offered are many, covering all varieties of produce, and the officers of the association will do their utmost to provide satisfactory accommodations for all exhibitors and amusements for the visitors. Get your exhibits ready and you will find a place in the premium list to class them.

Princeton Union: It was observed during the session of the legislature that the game wardens were quite active and energetic, and always on hand at vire, when the various committees having in charge the matter of legislative appropriations were holding meetings. Possibly the game wardens wasted their energies in this occupation and have not had an opportunity to revive and get their optics focussed on the violators of the law. People do sometimes get that way.

St. Paul Dispatch: Congressman Heatwole's announcement that he will be a candidate for re-election to congress simplifies the congressional situation. The entire delegation is now up for re-nomination and re-election. The seven congressmen will stand together for a return to Washington, and will all favor the re-election of Senator Nelson. They will also favor his nomination by the next Republican state convention, as the nearest approach possible to the election of United States senators by the people.

Park Rapids Enterprise: The village of Cannon Falls, this state, has adopted an ordinance whereby the chief of police is required to keep his weather eye out for the approach of a cyclone, when if in approach, he shall give three taps of the fire bell to warn everybody to get out of the surface of the earth by diving into cyclone cellars. It don't state whether each particular individual shall be required to pack a cellar about with him to keep in handy, nor does any fine attach if he don't, neither does it require the aforesaid chief to keep an unlimited supply of rum on hand to be doled out on application.

Minneapolis Times: Congressman Heatwole, Eddy, of the Seventh district, has not been looking for any strong opposition to his renomination. But now he is believed to be somewhat disturbed over the action of Hans Johnson, of Crookston. Johnson is a deputy collector of internal revenue and is about with due to keep in bandy, nor does any fine attach if he don't, neither does it require the aforesaid chief to keep an unlimited supply of rum on hand to be doled out on application.

F. H. Peavey & Co. have purchased the M. & N. line of elevators, for about $300,000. There are about fifty elevators with a storage capacity of 18,000 bush along the G. N., N. P. and Milwaukee roads.

M. Labori, counsel for Dreyfus, is improving so rapidly that it is now expected he will be able to go ahead with the case next Monday. His pockets are rifled while he lay unconscious—but the scoundrels couldn't steal his brain.

During a recent storm of three days' duration on the Lake of the Woods, Sand Island, situated in the lake, was completely destroyed, the waves dashing over it and washing away the sand. Miss Florence Doudna of Crookston hadified upon the land as a homestead.

The prince of Wales is the heaviest risk of any patron of the life insurance business, and his death at the present time would cost English, German, French and American companies not less than $10,000,000. No other person carries over 20 per cent of that amount of insurance. But $1,000,000 of it is for the benefit of his family.

Red Lake county, like Polk county, appropriated money to defray the expenses of those citizens who were at St. Paul last winter in the interest of the now somewhat famous Red Lake county bill. Van R. Brown, Red Lake county's attorney, has appealed from the action of the county commissioners in appropriating this money, and the end thereof is not yet.

CASS LAKE FIRE.

Almost Entire Business Portion of Town Burned to the Ground.

A fire which broke out at 6 o'clock last Monday evening destroyed fifteen buildings, comprising the main portion of Cass Lake.

The fire started in the middle of the block and burned every building on the west end except Lussier's jewelry store and the Times office. These buildings were saved only by heroic efforts. The fire was caused by the explosion of a gasoline stove in Jerry Bell's barber shop.

The total loss is between $35,000 and $20,000, and no insurance was carried. The buildings were all frame, and most of them of comparatively cheap construction. The absence of insurance is accounted for by the fact that there was no adequate fire protection, and the further fact that the residents were all squatters. The title to the land occupied by the town site being vested in the government.

The principal losers were:

Ed. Elston, hotel.
S. L. Daying, hotel.
M. J. Foley, hotel.
Mrs. Bye, lodging house.
Melling & Co., hardware.
T. P. Cory, general merchandise.
F. C. Hazelton, livery.
B. D. Judkins, flour and feed.
F. W. Smith, law office.

Just what will be effect of this fire upon the future of Cass Lake it is difficult to say. Though those whose prosperity was destroyed may rebuild, it is not likely that they will do so at once, owing to the uncertainty with reference to the outcome of the controversy over the townsite.

—The sister and niece of Mrs. De-Forest Buckley, Mrs. Barton and daughter Miss Jolla, from the south, will hereafter live in Crookston.

—The Grand Forks Gun Club will entertain the Gun Club from Winnipeg today. Elaborate preparations have been made. Crookston shooters will be represented.

—Dave Gorton, of Fosston, spent Sunday night in the city, returning Monday morning to his place of business. His numerous friends were pleased to see him again.

—Next Monday A. E. McDonald and Miss Mauch of the Crookston Tribune and Mr. and Miss Gilpatrick of Sauk Centre start for their claims in the vicinity of Warroad.

—Messrs. Vannet, Hoch, Vanstrum and Rowe attended the shooting tournament in Duluth last week. As usual the Crookston squad did some first-class shooting.

—The new serial, A Race For Gold, which is appearing in the columns of the JOURNAL, is a thrilling story of the adventures of a gold seeker in the Klondike regions. Don't fail to read it.

—Judge Brown, of Morris, Minn., who held court in Crookston this spring recently bought from Mr. Purvis, the Great Northern land agent, a half section of land in the town of Bristet.

—Harold Bjoln, aged 8 years, the son of Ole Bjoln, while at play with some of his young companions last Monday, was accidentally struck on the head with an ax. It was quite a narrow escape. The little fellow is doing well.

—The wheat buyers of this section through the courtesy of the Ames-Brooks commission house of Duluth have been enabled to visit the great shipping establishments, elevators, etc., at the head of the lakes. They left on their tour of inspection last Tuesday.

—Earl Marenus, who reached his majority last Monday, received as a birthday gift from his father a handsome gold watch. Earl leaves in a few weeks for Minneapolis where he will enter the State University and take up the study of medicine.

—A. N. Hixson, joint proprietor with C. E. Sawyer, of the large flour mills in West Superior, Wis., was in the city the first part of the week. He informed the JOURNAL that the mills would begin grinding wheat in about two weeks.

—Dr. Forbes will hold the fourth Quarterly Conference of the Crookston Methodist church tomorrow night at 7:30 o'clock. This is an unusually important meeting as it is the last before the Annual Conference held this year in Minneapolis during the first week in October.

—An appeal has been taken to the supreme court from a decision of Judge Watts overruling the demurrer entered by Polk county to the complaint in the suit begun to collect the interest and penalty on city delinquent taxes. In case the supreme court upholds Judge Watts the case will go to the lower district court at Crookston at its next session.

—The village of Cass Lake had no fire protection but a water method was adopted for staying the progress of the flames there last Monday. It was necessary to remove a few of the smaller buildings directly on the path of the fire, and they were pulled out of the way by locomotives to which strong ropes were attached. In this way a few of the better buildings were saved.

—The promptness with which Martin & Webster adjusted the losses by hail of those farmers insured in the company which the firm represents is strong evidence of the reliability of the company and of the business enterprise of the Crookston agents. Within four days of when their crops were destroyed John Ross received $264.00, Jacob Widenhofer $425.00, Wm. Belswenger $327.50, and Ferdinand Ross $340.00. These men are farmers in the towns of Fisher, Nesbit and Farmo.

—C. M. Lowe, of Minneapolis, is in the city.

—Mrs. S. C. Hayes of Nicollville was in the city yesterday.

—W. A. Case, of St. Hilaire, was in the city Tuesday night.

—Miss Mary Montagne is assisting the city clerk in keeping the city books.

—David Vannet, roadmaster on the Northern Pacific, was in the city yesterday.

—New heavy steel rails are being laid on the railroad track between here and Moorhead.

This evening a m sicale will be given at the Episcopal rectory. Ice cream will be served.

—Miss Bertha McIntyre entertained some of her friends at her home last Monday evening.

—Father Murphy held services at Fisher last Tuesday, returning to Ben dji yesterday morning.

—Henry Bessom will leave next Monday for Warroad to look after his homestead in that vicinity.

—Mrs. H. C. Walker came up from the Twin Cities yesterday morning and took the first train for her home.

—H. T. Gendron of Gentilly was one of those who enjoyed the St Perkins company at the opera house last night.

—Jacob Snes, after several months spent in sunny st Minneapolis, is again at his old stand in Andersen's drug store.

—Mrs. Ed. Walsh and Miss Ella Walsh left Tuesday for Minneapolis, where they will visit for two weeks with friends.

—There will be a final hearing in the estate of Geo. H. Walker, bankrupt, before Judge Lochren at Minneapolis on Sept. 2.

—B. F. Zarruecher will represent Col. Cobham Post No. 90 at the Grand Encampment of the G. A. R. held in Philadelphia next month.

Ringling Bros. sent an agent to Crookston who settled all medical bills incurred by those who were hurt when the circus tent blew down here last July.

—Mr. Bowers, the artistic painter, is frescoing the ceiling and walls of the new Masonic Hall, which will indeed be a thing of beauty when the work is finished.

—J. G. Todd, of the Minnesota Loan & Trust Company, Minneapolis, spent yesterday in the vicinity of Crookston looking over lands in company with E. M. Walsh.

—There is trouble in school district No. 218, in the town of Euclid. A petition of Mr. Vander Beek to the school board is disputed by some of the citizens and the county attorney has been asked to assist in settling the matter.

Tom Shaughnessy, foreman of the JOURNAL office, in some unaccountable way got the thumb of his left hand in contact with the sharp edge of the knife on the paper cutter yesterday and though the thumb will not be permanently injured, he will be compelled to abandon work for several days.

—Preparations for the Minnesota State Fair at Hamline, Sept. 4th to 9th, inclusive, are already so nearly complete that it is safe to promise a really great exposition of Northwestern live stock, agricultural and manufacturing interests. As the cities have agreed to leave the task of entertaining visitors to the Fair, the managers have determined to carry out a program that will be worthy of the week set apart for the great annual agricultural festival and have arranged for a brilliant evening program as well as for day events.

—The State Fair will be bigger and broader than ever as an educational institution this year. The amusement features are more prominent because the cities will have none. The fair will be the only great thing on deck early in September. The fireworks at the evening exhibitions from Monday night to Saturday night will cost double the sum expended by either city or any festive occasion. One big bomb, 60 inches in diameter, the largest ever fired in America, will be sent up every night during the fair. It will explode at a height of 1,000 feet and send down a shower of stars that will cover a space as large as four city blocks. Mr. Porter also has a new piece of fireworks that will make a sensation when fired at the fair. It is a bomb that explodes and drops a shower of white stars and at the same time releases another bomb which in turn explodes with a shower of green stars and releases another with red stars, and repeats until the air is full of brilliant stars. This bomb can be seen from Stillwater, Northfield, Anoka and Hastings.

FILIPINOS MAKE ATTACKS ALONG THE RAILWAY LINE.

Successfully Repulsed by the Americans With Trivial Loss of Life—Troops of Young's Brigade Capture San Mateo After a Sharp Fight Lost Three Men Killed and Thirteen Wounded in the Engagement.

MANILA, Aug. 14.—The insurgents have taken the aggressive in the neighborhood of the railway. On Saturday night they unsuccessfully attacked San Luis on the Rio Grande, near Calumpit, which is garrisoned by two companies of the Twenty-second infantry. The Americans had one man, a sergeant, killed and two privates wounded.

Sunday morning a similar affair took place at Gringua, four miles west of Malolos, where a small garrison is stationed as a safeguard against a possible attack upon the railway. A special train took reinforcements to Malolos and Guiguoto, just north of Bulacan.

GAINS STRENGTH.

Insurrection on the Islands of Negros and Cebu Said to Be Spreading.

MANILA, Aug. 12, via Hong Kong, Aug. 16.—Arrivals and mail advices from Negros and Cebu agree that the insurrection is gaining strength remarkably in both those islands, which had hitherto been counted as the most friendly in the archipelago and which received with the greatest cordiality Professor Schurman, president of the United States advisory commission for the Philippines, at the time of his memorable tour. Outbreaks are feared particularly in Cebu, where some of the leading men have gone over to the insurrection. Many of the wealthy inhabitants are preparing to leave the islands. Senors Llorente and Melnate, superior court justices for Negros and Cebu, have gone thither from Manila to use their influence against the insurrection. The results of the autonomist government in Negros are disappointing.

Insurgent Bands Numerous.

Insurgent bands are operating there as they did in Cuba, destroying much plantation property, claims for which are being presented to General Otis. The bombardment of Pasto, on the east side of Laguna de bay, by the Napidan, whose commander, Lieutenant Copp, was under the impression that the town had been reoccupied by the insurgents, aroused strong resentment among the natives of the whole lake region. It is asserted there that the officers and crew of the gunboat landed and looted the best buildings after the bombardment. The crew of the Napidan has been transferred to other duty.

Officers of the United States gunboat Wheeling, which has returned here from a cruise along the north coast of Luzon, report that the insurgent forces occupy every village.

FILIPINOS ROUTED.

Another Skirmish With Rebels in Which the Americans Are Victorious.

MANILA, Aug. 13.—A force of United States troops from Quingua, four miles east of Malolos, and from Buligan, near Bustos, about six miles northeast of Quingua, encountered a body of insurgents, estimated at about 300, half way between Bustos and Quingua. In the engagement that ensued the Filipinos were severely punished and scattered. The Americans lost one man killed.

The insurgent force is believed to have been under the command of General Pio del Pilar and to have had in view tearing up the railway at Bocaue and Biga, about three miles northeast of Bulacan. The object of the troops on first infantry went to the point with instructions to strengthen the railway guards and reconnoitre the country in the direction of Norzgara and on the Bustos road. General Wheaton, with the troops at Calumpit, made a reconnaisance on Augeles, about four miles to the northwest, where he found 500 of the enemy. He silenced their fire and then returned to Calumpit.

OCCUPY SAN MATEO.

Americans of General Young's Brigade Defeat Filipinos.

MANILA, Aug. 14.—A reconnaisance by troops of General Young's brigade, with the object of discovering the whereabouts of the enemy near San Mateo, northeast of the San Juan reservoir, about ten miles from Manila, resulted in the occupation of San Mateo. The American loss was 3 killed and 13 wounded, including a lieutenant of the Twenty-first infantry.

Twenty-three of the enemy are known to have been killed.

This is the first action in which Colonel Bart's colored troops participated. They behaved well, their leaders having difficulty in holding them back.

NO DECISION REACHED.

Question of Calling for More Volunteers Under Consideration.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—The question of additional volunteer regiments was under consideration by the secretary of war during the day, but it was stated that no decision to call for more troops was reached. While it is said five regiments will be organized the number has not been definitely determined upon. Neither is it settled whether all shall be infantry regiments. It has been suggested that another cavalry regiment or two may be of great advantage in the Philippines. The only objection to organizing two cavalry regiments is said to be the great difficulty and cost of transporting horses to the Philippines. The recruiting now going on will continue. The new regiments may be organized at some other posts than where the first 10 have been stationed as several localities are anxious to have them.

THE TRANSVAAL SITUATION

It Is Considered Critical by the Officials at Washington.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—The situation in the Transvaal is regarded by officials here as critical. Thus far, however, the state department has not received a word from any source concerning the strained condition of affairs and there is no disposition to take up the question of neutrality and the care of our interests in that locality unless the war issue is actually framed. Charles Macrum is the United States consul stationed at Pretoria. He has sent a number of reports, all of them dealing with commercial affairs, and has not touched on the delicate political conditions existing. The United States has also a consul agent, J. H. Manon, at Johannesburg but he has not been heard from since he was appointed. There have been recent press reports from Johannesburg that a colored blacksmith, claiming to be an American, had been roughly handled by the field cornets and that he had raised the question of his American citizenship and had appealed to the American representative

READY TO MOBILIZE.

Arrangements Made by Boers For Quick Work if Necessary.

JOHANNESBURG, Aug. 12.—The Transvaal government, it is reported, has provisionally arranged with the Netherlands South African Railway company for mobilization on the shortest notice if required.

Immense stores of provisions and war material have been collected at Pretoria. It is rumored that orders have been issued to mobilize the artillery reserve.

It is alleged from Boer sources that the government intends to introduce a passport law, aiming to prevent Outlanders leaving the country without permission in event of war.

The Portuguese have detained the steamer Reichsing from Hamburg, June 26, at Delagoa Bay. She has on board 15,000 rifles and other war material consigned to the Transvaal government.

BURGHERS ARMED.

Boers Declare They Are Being Driven to War by Mercenary Reputations.

JOHANNESBURG, Aug. 15.—The Standard and Diggers' News says:

"The Boers are convinced that there is nothing for them but the resort to war."

All sorts of war rumors are in circulation. It is alleged that the field cornets have received orders to supply all unarmed burghers with rifles gratuitously and to substitute Mausers for Martini-Henrys wherever the latter are still in use.

VOLKSRAAD APPROVES IT.

All Residents of the Transvaal Must Take Up Arms in Its Defense.

PRETORIA, Aug. 15.—The volksraad has amended the grouwet, compelling persons who are not burghers to co-operate with them in the defense of the national territory and the suppression of rebellion.

General Joubert, vice president of the republic and commander-in-chief of the Transvaal forces, denies that the burghers are loading their rifles and preparing for war.

UITLANDERS MUST FIGHT.

Special Article Added to the Transvaal Constitution.

LONDON, Aug. 9.—The Daily Mail publishes the following from Johannesburg:

By a special article added to the grondwe (the constitution of the Transvaal) the president is authorized, in the event of war, revolution or other emergency, to proclaim martial law and to compel every male resident of the country to bear arms in its defense.

The Pretoria forts are being strengthened and the government is buying up all the available draught horses in Bechuanaland.

Grandmother's Cold Cream Jar.

A writer in the Germantown Telegraph declares that our grandmothers excelled us in dainty trifles. One of the prettiest ornaments on the dresser was an egg. At first sight it looked exactly like an egg from the pantry, for the shell was unpainted; only as one looked at it he saw that one end was broken. This eggshell was used as a cold cream jar. When making cold cream, our grandmothers would pour it into an empty shell which had been carefully prepared. After the egg was taken out the shell was washed and sweetened with perfumery, with a few drops left in the bottom. The cold cream was poured in and left to harden. The result was an eggshell full of lovely white cosmetic.

Love of Perfumes.

Perfumes, though still extensively used, are by no means so popular as in ancient times. The orientals, especially, made the freest use of them. Rooms were fumigated with vapors of burning resins, the body was anointed with aromatic qualities mixed with some plant, and scents were worn about the person in gold and silver boxes. Beds, other articles of furniture and garments were perfumed with myrrh, aloes and cinnamon. When entertainments were given, a servant anointed the head of each guest as he seated himself and sprinkled his person with rosewater. The Talmud directs the apportioning of a tenth part of the bride's dowry for purchase of perfumes.

Bees Killed by Skunks.

J. B. Kinskern, owner of an apiary at Hobart, N. Y., shot four skunks the other night that had been killing his bees. The skunks do their work at night when the bees are in the hives, and to get the bees out of the hive they knock out the back of it and then go around to the front and kill the bees by striking them with their paws.

A RACE FOR GOLD

A NEW ENGLANDER'S ADVENTURES IN ALASKA

BY

CAPT. J.H. BRADSTON

[Copyright, 1898, by S. S. McClure Co.]

SYNOPSIS.

Chapter I—Tom Scott, a New England farmhand, decides to go to Klondike in search for gold. In Boston he rescues a girl from a runaway horse. She proves to be acquaintance in also going to Klondike, and asks Tom to accompany him, and the invitation is accepted. They take passage on the Seabird, a sailing vessel bound for Yukon.

Chapter II—After board the vessel and a call is made, Obed Rider, the first officer, proves to be a cold enemy of Tom's, who had accused his father of deserting the ship of which he was captain and taking with him several thousand dollars of the owner's gold. Tom's father had not been home since the accusation. Rider, however, is a friend of Tom's boy, did not believe it, and struck Obed Rider. In the fight at supper into mate's nose. Then the mate finds Tom aboard the vessel he vows to be avenged for the broken nose.

CHAPTER III.

"I GIVE MY SHARE TO YOU."

Good luck and fair winds followed our adventurers until they reached the stormy Gulf of California, where an accident occurred which greatly affected Tom's future plans.

It was an hour before sunset and the two passengers were leaning over the stern watching the water fly swiftly under the counter, when a loud shout from aloft attracted their attention. Looking quickly up they had barely time to spring aside when a heavy block struck the deck beside them with terrific force. A rope attached to it had Tom's companion across the chest, sending him backwards. His heels met the wheel ropes and the next instant he struck the water astern and disappeared from Tom's sight.

It had all happened so quickly that he hardly realized what had occurred until the sailor aloft shouted:

"Man overboard! Man overboard!"

With the promptitude of a sailor the man at the wheel swung to the rail and cut adrift the life preserver, which was always ready for use, and at the same time the captain rushed on deck and ordered the ship bove to.

Then Tom tore off his coat and shoes and leaped over the rail before the captain could detain him.

Like most Cape Cod boys, he had learned to swim at an early age, and a pond in Merrivale had enabled him to indulge in the exercise in late years, so that when he came to the surface he felt no anxiety for himself, although the vessel was rapidly increasing the distance between them.

He struck out with all his might in the direction of the vessel's wake, and soon caught a glimpse of a white face ahead rising and falling on the waves.

"Keep up till I reach you!" he shouted to encourage Avery, who was fully 50 yards away.

There was no reply, and when Tom was within a dozen strokes of his friend the latter suddenly threw up his arms and began to sink.

Tom reached the spot just in time to grasp his hair and drag him to the surface, where he lay utterly unconscious and unable to assist himself. Tom supported him as best he could, but his clothes soon began to drag him down, and his limbs felt like lead. He was nearly spent when something white swept before his eyes on the top of a sea, and he saw that it was the lifebuoy. With a last effort he struck out and succeeded in grasping it.

In the meantime the Seabird had been brought to the wind and a boat lowered with all possible speed, but it is a slow operation at best, and the craft was a half mile distant before the boat struck the water with Capt. Coffin in her stern.

Although the buoy supported Tom easily, he found it no easy task to keep the unconscious man's head above the surface, and when the boat reached them he was pulled from the water in a state of utter exhaustion.

Avery showed no signs of life, and when the vessel was reached he was taken to his berth, where the old captain gradually resuscitated him. Tom having changed his clothes in the meantime and regained the use of his limbs.

When he reached the stateroom he was shocked at his friend's face. There was a look there which comes but once to humanity, and which froze the words on his tongue.

"Scott, sit down," said the old miser. "I can see by your face what you read in mine. I have no time to waste. I'm a dying man, Scott. Something has given out inside and my time is up. Don't interrupt me, please. I must tell you something while I have time."

He paused an instant to press his hand to his side, saying:

"When that hit me something snapped in here. I think a rib is sticking into my lungs. Take off my belt, Scott. Hurry up! Don't stop to ask questions now!"

Tom obeyed, and with trembling fingers the dying man drew forth a folded bit of paper, whispering:

"It's yours, and it means a fortune to you! Give me a pen and paper and then write what I tell you!"

His request was soon complied with, and with a faint voice he dictated:

"I, John Avery, being about to die, give my share in the gold mine discovered by my partner, Dick Reed, to the bearer, Thomas Scott, who has risked his life for mine twice."

When this unique will was on paper he added:

"Give me the pen. There needn't be any witnesses. Dick Reed knows my fist, and he's as square as a die. This paper is a map to tell me how to reach the mine. It's a secret trail leads to it, and only three men know of it. You will be rich if you live to reach it. Trust no one, but go by yourself. Take the money in my belt, too, and use it as you please. You may find my brother Bill at the mine. He was sent for, too. You'll get my share—"

A violent fit of coughing interrupted him, and before it ended the handwriting was beyond recognition.

"I must tell you something while I have time."

chief he pressed to his lips was stained with his life blood.

Tom hastily summoned the captain, but the old miner sank into an unconscious state, and before morning Tom was the only living occupant of the little stateroom.

But behind the thin partition which separated it from the mate's room sat that worthy himself with a look of triumph on his evil face.

"There were no witnesses, and what is to prevent my taking Mr. Tom Scott and becoming a mine owner," he muttered to himself. "I must have that paper if I have to kill him to get it!"

On the following day the remains of the old miner were consigned to the deep, and as Tom saw the weighted canvas disappear beneath the blue waters, his grief outweighed every other sensation and drove all thoughts of his inheritance from his head. He had grown to love the rugged old man like a brother, and it was the first time he had been brought face to face with death.

That night as he was about to retire, he remembered the slip of paper given him by the dying friend, and which he had not yet examined. He had placed it in the belt and tossed the latter into his chest at the time, and a huge lump swelled in his throat now as he lifted the lid and drew it forth.

Carefully arranged in the various compartments were bills to the amount of $10,000, and Tom's eyes opened in his own belt at once. The paper was evidently torn from a blank book, and contained these lines in a bold hand:

"Old Partner: If you haven't forgotten the old days and the bargain we made, come out and share my find with me. I have struck it rich. I have written to Bill. I have a new chum with me, too. Come to Dyea and take the old Dalton trail. No one else is now. It goes just west of Arkell lake and runs straight for Fort Selkirk. It's almost dead north by the compass. About 25 miles before it is reached the fort is seen on the left. A big white cliff faces the trail. You can't mistake it. The trail loops on to the right. Take the other. It only goes along for miles and leaves you at the entrance of a big gorge. Camp there and make a big smoke. If you have to bring anyone to help, be sure of your man. We have grub enough to last till spring, and when my partner, Joe Tarlton, is coming to Dyea he will meet him. He'll get there in April or May, I expect. There is gold here by the ton if we only had water to wash it out. I am sending this from the fort by an Indian who came here after candles and flour. Your old friend,

"DICK TAYLOR."

Tom's heart was beating like a trip-hammer as he finished the letter, for he now realized that the old miner's words were not of light import. The note bore the imprint of truth in every line, and for awhile he could scarcely realize what he had read.

He had no suspicion that the mate was at that moment gluing his eye to a crack in the bulkhead and vainly trying to get a glimpse of the paper of which he had heard the dying man speak the night before. In his villainous heart, he had sworn that Tom Scott should never grasp the golden treasure, but how to prevent him was the question. Clearly he must obtain possession of the precious paper, but how was this to be done?

His peephole was too small to enable him to tell where Tom kept it, but as he heard the lid of the chest closed he drew a long breath and muttered:

"It's in his clothes. I'll find a way to have a peep inside of it before we get to Perseus. It would never do to meddle it now. He'd suspect me the first thing he'd be missed it. I must rig some kind of a derrick on him, that's sure!"

For the next few days he eudgeled his brains for some safe means of attaining his ends, but without success. Then chance did what he had failed to do.

"Land ho!" was the welcome cry from aloft one morning just after sunrise, while the captain and second mate were asleep, the mate was stumping the deck and Tom, who had turned out earlier than usual, was standing on the topgallant forecastle watching a school of fish play about the bows. He ran up the foreriggings at once to catch a glimpse of the welcome sight.

"Now's my time," said the mate, under his breath, as Tom went over the forestup and began to shinny up the topmast rigging. "He'll go clean up to the man on the 'gallant yard before he sees it."

The next moment he had stolen softly down the cabin stairs, entered Tom's room and tried the lid of the chest.

To his surprise it was not locked, and there on top, half hidden by the sleeve of an old coat, lay John Avery's belt before him. His fingers trembled as with feverish haste he pulled it open, and then a furious oath came through his clenched teeth.

The belt was empty!

A rapid search convinced him that the object he sought was not in the chest, and hastily rearranging the articles as he had found them he closed the lid and stepped out of the room to meet Capt. Coffin face to face in the narrow passage.

"What are you doing in there?" demanded the latter.

"We're going to wash decks and the porthole was open," he stammered. "I just stepped down to close it."

Whatever comments the old skipper was about to make was interrupted by the man aloft, who again gave that long drawn out, indescribable cry, so dear to the sailor's heart:

"Land ho!"

The captain forgot everything else instantly and sprang on deck at once, exclaiming:

"It's the Golden Gate or I'm a lubber! I've made a record passage this time for the old hark! We're only 98 days from Boston and we'll keep it down to two figures if the wind holds and have a day to spare! Ship the canvas on her, Mr. Rider! There's letters and fresh grub waiting for us over the starboard bow! Sweat her for all she's worth!"

The orders were promptly obeyed, and as Tom reached the deck and examined the captain added:

"We'll soon be ashore, Mr. Scott. If my reckoning's right, that is the entrance to 'Prisen harbor and we ought to be tied up alongside the dock by night. You've never been there, have you?"

Tom replied in the negative and the captain continued:

"Well, see here. I don't know how you're fixed, but I always live ahead when I'm in port. It's cheaper and I keep a good grub by her. If you like you can stay with me and it won't cost you a red. I've made a rattling trip and you are welcome."

"Thank you," said Tom. "I'll do so until I start north. I shall be glad to have a familiar face with me. This is my first trip, you know."

"He's going to live aboard," shouted Obed Rider, who was standing close by, "and it'll be queer if he doesn't run into trouble coming down through Tar Bay some dark night. Things are coming my way all right. The fool must carry that paper somewhere about his person and I can easily find some one to help me in the job."

Without the slightest suspicion of what was passing in the mate's mind Tom watched him bustling about the deck and congratulated himself that in a short time he would see the last of the red-faced sailor who had brought the only shade of discomfort into his life.

Early that evening the Seabird was anchored in the magnificent harbor of San Francisco, and the long voyage was over.

CHAPTER IV.

WAYLAID AND ROBBED.

When Tom Scott went ashore in Frisco he found the city was Klondike mad. On every hand were huge posters calling attention to the superior merits of some particular route to the fields of gold, and men of all walks in life were straining every nerve to be among the first to reach the Yukon with the advent of spring. Every steamers were loading at the piers, but every inch of space on board was being engaged months ahead. After consulting with Capt. Coffin he determined to go by rail to Seattle and there try his luck to secure a passage from that port.

He made no mention of the singular secret he possessed, nor that of the old miner, but frankly told the captain of the money he had received from the same source, and the latter promptly gave him some good advice.

"Better not be drifting round 'Frisco with all that stuff in your pocket," he said. "I've got a good little safe here and you're welcome to use it. There's some desperate characters on the water front here, and plenty of 'em would kill a man ten times over for half your pile. They've all got the gold fever now. My second mate is going to leave me. He's got it, too. Hope the mate doesn't follow suit."

Tom was wise enough to listen to the warning and left the larger part of his money in the safe, but he kept the two precious papers in his money belt, a proceeding which he was to regret very soon.

He found there was a special excursion advertised to leave the following morning, and was just in time to secure a ticket. After taking in the sights of the city during the afternoon he procured his supper in a restaurant and decided to spend the evening at a theater. For it must be remembered that he was country reared and with few rare exceptions, when he had visited Boston, a theater had been beyond his reach.

He thoroughly enjoyed the performance and about 11 o'clock drove over to his car front when it was finished without a thought of any danger as he strode rapidly along the well-lighted and thoughfares. While he is thus engaged let us take a look at Obed Rider, the villainous mate of the Seabird, and see how his schemes are progressing.

While Tom was watching the footlight favorites Obed Rider was sitting in a little drinking saloon near the wharf where the Seabird had been docked. Before him was a bottle of liquor and a glance at his face was sufficient to show that he had been indulging deeply. His small, bloodshot eyes were fixed upon vacancy, and he was apparently meditating deeply.

"He'll be off to-morrow," he muttered, savagely, "and then my chance is gone. I must have those papers and money enough to get an outfit. I dasn't get anyone to lend me a hand, for then the cat would be out of the bag. If I had that paper the old man gave him which, to hinder my going and claiming to be Mr. Scott? There's a fortune in it, but it's ugly business."

Filling his glass again he drained it at a gulp as if trying to screw up his courage to the necessary point for some resolve. Then he looked at his watch and said:

"Ten o'clock. No time to lose. First to see if he is on board yet."

Five minutes later he was back again. Tom had not returned, and Rider found down another draught of fiery liquor and then skulked up the street until he came to the darkened corner, where a narrow alley afforded him a secure hiding place. His right hand was hidden in the pocket of his coat, and grasped a short implement made of lead hose, which he seldom left a "fid," and which he had secured while on board a few moments before.

Under ordinary circumstances the liquor he had imbibed would have confused his brain, but now he was only conscious of an intense, overpowering determination to secure the papers which meant so much to the man who could reach the gold region with them.

There had been a smart shower in the early part of the evening and the drippings from the low eaves of the houses still continued, but had a dragging and relenting sound. A solitary street light 50 yards away cast a dismal gleam for a few square yards in either direction, while an occasional burst of drunken laughter from the next street told of some party of revelers making their noisy way home.

The mate noticed none of these things. His eyes were fixed intently in the direction from which he expected his victim to come, and his square jaws were set. Through his brain ran but one thought:

"The papers!"

Half an hour passed and Tom came striding along under the gaslight, humming a tune and merrily rehearsing the play he had just witnessed. Suddenly the watcher uttered an inhuman oath under his breath for just as he was gathering himself for a spring he espied a dark figure stealing noiselessly along behind the young man.

Closer and closer crept the fateful shadow, and as Tom arrived opposite the alley where the mate was crouching, the latter saw the second figure raise a few rapid, noiseless strides. Then an arm was raised over Tom's head and fell with crushing force, sending him stunned and senseless to the muddy pavement, while his assailant bent over his form to secure the valuables he might have about him.

With a shout of rage the mate rushed from his place of concealment toward the stranger, who, acquiring fleetly to his feet and speeding down the street at amazing speed, without waiting to dispute the right of way with him.

To kneel by the prostrate form and tear open his clothing was the work of an instant, and wasn't none sooner arose to his feet than he felt one relishing the precious documents in his hands.

Slipping it quickly into his pocket he gave a hasty glance about him. All was still and save more he knelt by Tom's side, panting:

"Is he dead? I must be sure!"

With that he raised his fid weapon and the other he placed over the young man's heart.

At first he detected no pulsation, then there was a feeble flutter and a moment later Tom groaned faintly.

"He's alive!"

The words were hissed forth in a murderous manner and as he spoke Obed raised his weapon.

But the blow did not fall, for even as he nerved himself for the stroke the mate had a new thought which arrested his arm. He must have money and had no time to lose. If he murdered Tom both money and papers the victim, even if he recovered, was powerless to pursue his journey further. Who would believe his story of the gold mine?

All this flashed through his brain in much less time than it takes to write it, and with feverish, trembling haste he began fumbling about in Tom's clothes. He was not long finding the money belt. Tom carried it on inside pocket of his vest and was rising to his feet when a door suddenly opened a few feet away and a man came out of the house.

Without waiting to see in which direction he was turning, Obed Rider hurried away toward the wharf and was soon safe in his stateroom with his illgotten booty. His eyes shone with devilish triumph as he pored over the papers, and the sight of over $700 in cash wrapped around the railroad ticket to Seattle filled his measure of satisfaction to overflowing.

He had no knowledge of the amount left Tom by the old miner and as he stood some of his side shook his head sorrowfully as he glanced at the burning cheeks and prone face.

"I'm afraid the poor fellow has got his discharge."

THOUSANDS TOMISSIONS

Christian Alliance Leader Simpson Breaks Collection Record.

SAID TO HAVE RAISED $120,000

Sunday, Aug. 13, was the most remarkable day in the life of Dr. A. B. Simpson of New York, leader of the Christian Alliance society, says the New York Times. It was the closing of the two weeks' convention at Old Orchard Beach, Me., and the annual collection was taken. Both Dr. Simpson and his assistants positively refuse to state the amount received, but it is generally understood that it is nearly if not quite $120,000. The doctor also replied to charges recently made to the effect that he misused the money annually collected by him. While his reply caused no sensation there was much talk among the elders.

People commenced coming to Saturday night, Aug. 12, to be present at the great meetings the next day. Early morning excursion trains came from all parts of Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont. Steamboats also sent train loads. It is estimated that 20,000 people were in town at 3 o'clock Sunday afternoon, Aug. 13. On Saturday night, Aug. 12, Dr. Simpson, with his assistants, held a long vigil of prayer, making that their efforts to break all previous records at money collecting be successful. At 5 o'clock the next morning the first service of the day was held. There was an unusually large crowd present for a meeting before daybreak. As soon as the little bell in the tower on the northeast corner of the Tabernacle in the grove had ceased ringing, Dr. Simpson came on the speakers' platform and dropped to his knees in prayer. For half an hour praying was continued, one brother commencing as soon as another had finished.

When all who desired to do so had offered supplication Dr. Simpson asked the congregation to join in singing "Praise God from Whom All Blessings Flow." The echo of the last words of the chorus had not died away when Dr. Simpson announced that it was the day of the annual missionary offering and called upon his congregation in the name of God to give freely. Young men and women took little wicker baskets and went through the aisles. When they had finished they returned to the speakers' platform and passed up the baskets. They were laden with banknotes of all denominations, checks, drafts, jewelry and other collections of value. It is estimated that $1,500 was taken in. The ushers passed to their respective seats and counted until the benediction had been said. Dr. Simpson announced that another meeting was to be held at 7 o'clock, and many remained in their seats until after the services at that hour. The Rev. William La Larouche led the service. Dr. Simpson not appearing on the platform until nearly time to close the service. Then he again told about the collections of money each year, and asked the sisters to pass among the people. Another stream of silver and paper flowed into the baskets, and when at 8:15, the service was closed there was $3,000 more.

At 9 o'clock the Sunday school session was held. Summer residents commenced to appear from the village, and it was easy to see even at that early hour that the attendance would exceed previous records. The excursion trains also had commenced to arrive then, and their human freight started for the grove as soon as it was discharged from the cars. At this time testimonials from some of those who had been cured of disease and infirmities were given. This had a tendency to unloosen pocketbooks, for at that service over $16,000 was taken. The doctor announced that at 10:30 o'clock he would reply to charges made against him by his enemies. Around and through the grove there was a dense mass of humanity, and as soon as a seat was left by one man it was at once taken by another. Far back there was a surging crowd, each one in it trying, in the sweltering heat, to get closer to the front.

When Dr. Simpson offered prayer at 10:30 a. m., there were fully 12,000 persons within hearing of his voice. His prayer was short, but forceful. He depicted the scenes in foreign lands among the heathen and asked God to inspire his hearers to give freely to help along the cause of converting the ignorant. When he had finished, every one joined with the choir in singing a hymn, and then a chapter of Scripture was read. One of the brothers made a few remarks, and then Dr. Simpson again came on to the platform. Stepping to the front, he raised his hands above his head, and, closing his eyes, offered a short prayer. He held in one hand a newspaper, and when he commenced speaking he referred to the charges, and in a talk of less than two minutes disposed of his subject. He denied that there was ground for any allegations against him and said that if requested he would give an itemized account of all the money ever given into his keeping. Then he asked his audience not to let the reports circulated about him have any effect on their liberality. As he said this there was shouting of "Amen!" in all parts of the grove. Then the doctor preached a short sermon and closed by asking all to join in singing.

Almost before singing had stopped the signal was given to the ushers, and they started down the aisles. It was with difficulty that they made their way to the crowd back of the tents. Twice they were obliged to return to the platform and leave the heaped up baskets. They were fully half an hour making this collection, and how much they secured is unknown. Good judges, however, say that the total of offerings at this meeting must have been $60,000. Hand baskets were brought into use, and it was after the noon hour when the benediction was asked.

Another service was to be held at 1 o'clock, and many were willing to take the chance of losing his seat by going down town. While the people were yet waiting for the afternoon meeting to commence many of the converts passed through the crowd describing wonderful cures that had been made during the two weeks' session of the meeting. A woman who had suffered from childhood with a deformed leg had prayed, and the limb was straightened. A man who for many years had been a drunkard had come to the meetings prayed, believed and now had no desire for drink. A woman who had been thrown from a carriage by a horse running away said that one of her ribs had been broken and driven into her lung. Doctors were of no avail. Their treatment had done her no good, but after coming to Old Orchard last year she had asked the Great Physician to relieve her, and she was now well. Scores of other remarkable cures were mentioned.

When the 1 o'clock meeting commenced, there was a still larger crowd present. Another collection was taken, but the amount fell off apparently. At the children's meeting little tots gave up their pennies and in sevens' instances brought the little banks which for years had sat on the shelf at home to receive the pieces, one by one. Parents took rolls of bills and gave them to the children that the little ones might add to the great collection. One of the leaders said after the services that undoubtedly this offering was the greatest ever made by children.

The next service had hardly commenced when a heavy thunder shower began and rain fell fast. One of the speakers cried out to the audience to keep their seats, as a little rain was needed for the good of God's fields, and that while water could injure the clothing it could not harm the soul. A loud "Amen" rang through the crowd and few people left the grove. The shower was soon over and the wicker baskets again went through the crowd. Money rained into them almost as fast as the water and bulged with bills of lesser denominations, while others went to their hotels to seek rest. Sunday evening, Aug. 13, another service was held and another collection was taken.

A man who is interested personally with Dr. Simpson was asked how much had been collected. He would express no opinion until he had consulted his chief. Dr. Simpson said that he had decided not to give out any figures. "But," he added, "the collection was quite large; in fact, I think it is far ahead of any previous year." At 9 o'clock it was said that the amount would reach $120,000.

CONVERTED BY MECHANISM

Toledo Infidel Owes His Salvation to a Grocery Clerk.

M. O. Waggoner of Toledo, the infidel who has announced his intention of sacrificing his valuable collection of books treating on infidelism and will make a bonfire of them in public, was converted in a peculiar manner. Mr. Waggoner, who is 76 years old, is a lawyer and ranks high in the Lucas county bar. He made an open avowal of his conversion in the presence of a large congregation at the Memorial church in Toledo.

Some time ago, according to the Chicago Tribune, he listened to the sermon of an evangelist, and the thought of his disbelief forced to his mind. He has a graniaphone with which he is wont to amuse himself, and at midnight, when the man is wide awake and, placing a disk in the instrument at random, started the machine.

The air of "Praise God From Whom All Blessings Flow" filled the room, and this was followed by "Rock of Ages Cleft For Me." At the conclusion Mr. Waggoner was singing and shouting praises of the Lord.

AMERICAN FANS IN ASIA.

Rajah of Kotl Places a $30,000 Order For Electric Coolers.

"PUNKA" WORKERS DISPLEASED.

They Are Plotting to Destroy the Little Instrument That They Believed Was Operated by the Devil. The Japanese Also Order American Electric Fans.

The American electric fan is destined to supplant the Hindoo "punka," and thousands of members of the Punka Workers' Association of ancient India are greatly concerned over the prospects, says the New York Journal.

A "punka" is a fan hung from a ceiling and operated by hand. A very large proportion of the population of Hindustan spends its life wabbling "punkas" at so much per hour. These people now see themselves about to lose their employment.

The rajah of Kotl, who does not live in India, but on the east coast of Borneo, has started the movement to do away with the "punka," and the news of his progressiveness has spread all over Asia, and what he has done will be done by others. This fuller received lately a catalogue from an American firm showing the operation of the electric fan by motors. He wrote to the firm for further particulars. In reply they sent him a small electric fan as a sample. This he put on one of the arm rests of his throne and started it going. The breeze was delicious, and the rajah was so pleased with his new toy that he gave a festival on the spot, which was participated in by all his subjects. Free food and drink were distributed to all present.

The only persons in the rajah's dominion who were not pleased with the fun were the "punka" workers. They met all night hatching measures how to reduce to a position of ill favor the little circular "punka" that they believed was operated by the devil. It is said that they covered the blades with a mixture of ink and uncilings, and that the next time the rajah used it he received a sticky shower bath.

As ink was the color of his skin, however, the rajah did not mind a bit. Instead of getting up and smashing the fan with his scimitar, as the "punka" workers thought he would, he laughed heartily at what he thought was a practical joke played on him by the little "punka" limp.

Now the rajah has ordered $30,000 worth of fans from the American firm that had the enterprise to send him the deodhend sample. One pair of these, which will be hung on the throne, will be gilded and covered with real diamonds. They are the finest fans ever manufactured anywhere. The rajah announces that he will send specimens of the "electric punka" to all the other rajahs of his acquaintance. As he has a very large visiting list, this means another good order for the United States.

A consignment of electric fans that were once shipped to Rangoon were destroyed by the native "punka" men. They were also in the habit of loosening the fans, so that when they were started they would fly off and hit a fellow-fan on the nose. In spite of all they could do, however, the fans retain their popularity, and the people of Rangoon have ordered another shipment. The Rangoon Times, of Burmah has sent to the United States for some notes with which to print the paper.

The Japanese have also learned of the convenience of the fans and they have just ordered 600 of them at a cost of $12,000. Most of them will be put up at the Imperial Hotel works at Yokohayor. The Japanese are not superstitious enough to think that the fans are worked by a little devil in the motor who turns the wheels. It is said that when they get hold of one they immediately took it to pieces and began making one like it.

German manufacturers have stolen all the ideas involved in our electric fans and are manufacturing them and sending them around in the east, bearing American trademarks. By-putting inferior material in the fans they are able to slightly undersell American fans. But their products last only about one-half the time that ours do.

The natives have discovered that the German drummers have poor goods when they avoid them, so the German firms have taken to dressing up their men so that they think they look like Yankee commercial travelers. It is said that some of the "make ups" are very funny. The German drummers try to look as much like Uncle Sam as they can. They wear goatee, beards and white silk hats and pretend to have come direct from New York.

Spanish Guns as Junk.

According to the Breslau letter to the Chicago Record the bronze barrels of 30 Spanish guns, weighing 4,000 pounds each, captured by the United States army in Cuba, recently passed through Breslau, consigned to the Deutsche Phosphor Bronze industrie, Kattowitz. These guns bear the Spanish inscriptions, together with the dates 1799-1800. The Kattowitz firm is said to have bought the guns as old metal from the United States government.

Chance For Don Carlos.

The Spanish army is to be reduced from 107,000 to 80,000 men, says the Syracuse Journal. Don Carlos should make terms with those 27,000 discharged warriors right away.

RACING THE MOON.

Over the Siberian Railroad Earth's Circuit May Be Made in Thirty Days.

A military gentleman declares that in the year 1902 he intends with a friend to go around the world in 30 days. His companion will be Prince Hilkoff, the Russian minister of railways, says Harry Stevens.

"Suppose," he says, "we start from Baltimore. It is, say, 3,150 miles to Seattle; then, via the Pacific, to Yokohama, 4,500 miles, whence to Port Arthur, via Nagasaki, it is 1,200 miles more.

"At Port Arthur we leave ship, and going ashore, take train on the Manchuria extension of the Transsiberian railway for St. Petersburg, 5,600 miles. Thence by rail direct to Berlin, 1,000 miles, and on to London, 750 miles. Ship again, this time on the Atlantic, to New York, 3,200 miles, winding up with 200 miles or less of railroad.

"The total of rail travel is 10,700 miles, and of water 8,000 miles, an aggregate of 19,600 miles.

"An average of 40 miles an hour by train and 20 by ship would insure the transit within 30 days.

Prince Hilkoff declares that with the completion of the great Siberian line to Port Arthur and Ta-Lien-Wan in 1902, he will make the time from London to Shanghai 12 days.

The distance from London to Yokohama has already been done in 20 days.

Fresh Water for Fowls.

If food is not furnished the hen in her own domain, she will go hunting and soon find enough to keep her busy, but she is not so successful in getting water to drink. The farmer or his wife will usually provide some feed, but "Biddy" many times takes her chances to find water. Yet chemists state that 84 per cent. of the egg is water. In view of this, fowls to lay well must be furnished with an abundance of fresh water. Drinking vessels should be thoroughly cleansed every day, and if possible so made that the hens cannot stand therein. In winter these drinking vessels should be emptied at night to prevent freezing. It is advisable to give fowls a warm drink in the morning when they first come from the roosts, as at this time they usually drink freely. If you will practice this, the hens will come for water as quickly as for feed.—Maine Farmer.

If the yarded fowls scratch holes along the fence and crawl under into the dooryard or garden, lay old boards along the fence or stretch a narrow piece of wire netting along the bottom, letting six inches or more of it lie flat on the ground.—Farm Journal

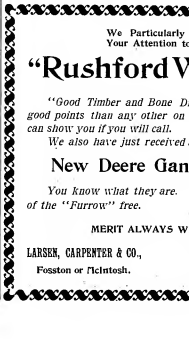
The Nichols-Shepard Separator

The essential points in a Separator are capacity, thoroughness of separation, durability and simplicity and flexibility of construction. On each of these points the Nichols-Shepard Separator has great advantages over all other threshing machines. Any one of the nine sizes will thresh more and save more grain than the corresponding size of any other separator. The Nichols-Shepard Separator is so strongly, simply, yet perfectly made as a separator can be. The work of separation is done without the aid of pickers, raddles, forks, or other complicated parts that in other machines cause continual bother and expense by breaking or wearing out.



This shows the Nichols-Shepard Self-Feeder loaded with a full load in the field.

Write for large free catalogue that pictures and explains every part of the Nichols-Shepard Separator and the Nichols-Shepard

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

By local application, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

W.C.T.U. CONVENTION

Meets in Crookston Aug. 29 to Sept. 1==200 Delegates to be Present.

MRS. BULLOCK OF NATIONAL FAME,

Will Speak==Many New Features== Large Chorus Will Sing.

One of the most important meetings ever held in Crookston will be opened at the Methodist church next Tuesday morning. It is the annual state convention of the W. C. T. U. which will be presided over by the State President, Mrs. B. Saythe Scovell. There will be here not only over 200 delegates from the various unions in the state but large numbers of visitors, particularly from the towns and cities in the northern part of the state. The various committees of the local union of which Mrs. W. S. Davies is chairman of the committee on arrangements. Mrs. N. P. Stone, of the committee on entertainment and Mrs. Spendley, of the press committee together with the officers, Mrs. M. E. Doherty, president, Mrs. L. C. Olds, secretary and Mrs. Elizabeth Walker, treasurer, have been hard at work for more than two weeks. The citizens of the city are responding generously to the appeals for entertainment for the delegates and it is hardly likely that it will be necessary to take any of these to the hotels. As far as possible visitors also will be taken care of.

The state officers of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union have departed from the usual order in arranging the program for this convention which will be held from Aug. 29. to Sept. 1, inclusive.

It has been the custom in the past for the superintendents of the different departments to present their reports, which were almost entirely statistical and consequently little listened to by the majority of people. This year a new plan will be adopted. Instead of telling what has been done, the superintendents will propose some line which will increase the usefulness of the work. The departments are subdivided into minor departments and when all the superintendents of each department have reported the suggestions will be informally discussed from the floor. The proceedings will really be more in the nature of an institute than a convention. There are so many members in the northern and western part of the state that the change in the program was made to enable them to obtain a more comprehensive idea of the work that the Union is doing in Minnesota. The National Convention last fall, which was attended by a large number of the local workers, has been an inspiration and the enthusiasm of the delegates has lasted through the year with splendid results.

Each Union is entitled to a representative of the officers, a delegate at large and one delegate for each fifty paying members. All the state officers will be present. The presence of Mrs. Bullock, a national organizer, will greatly add to the interest in the convention. Meetings of the executive committee will take place every morning from 8 to 9 o'clock and every afternoon from 1 to 2 o'clock.

Some of the special features of the convention will be a lesson in parliamentary law by Mrs. Bullock, a recognized authority on the subject, and author of "Condensed Parliamentary Rules," a home keepers' hour, in which subjects of practical interest will be discussed; the election of officers, of delegates to the National Convention and delegates to the World's Convention at Edinburgh in 1900. A plan of work by which Unions may be organized in every school district in the state will be considered and suggestions will be made to increase the interest and membership and to organize new Unions and push department work. A banner like Miss Willard's "Star Spangled Banner," gold stars on a white ground, will be presented for increase in membership. Mrs. G. C. Riggs, who drilled the ladies chorus last winter for the band concerts is drilling a chorus of twenty-five voices and, over, which chorus will furnish the music for the evening programs.

Tuesday evening addresses of welcome will be delivered by the mayor of the city and others to which Mrs. Scovell will respond. After this a program will be given by the president of the district, which have had a gain of one hundred members. Wednesday evening the program will be in charge of the young people and Thursday evening Mrs. Bullock will give an address. There will be a gold medal contest Friday evening in which the contestants will be matrons who have won a silver medal.

The delegates will be met at the train and carriages will take them to the homes where they will be entertained. The coming convention promises to be one of the most interesting and instructive in the history of the W. C. T. U. movement in Minnesota and the people of Crookston will have a rare opportunity of hearing hundreds of women tell what has been done and discuss plans with reference to what will be done for the betterment of humanity.

The conventions of W. C. T. U. women are not social affairs and, though the members derive great pleasure from being brought in personal contact with each other, they assemble for work and each day is filled to the last minute. The year just closing has been one of progress and encouragement, which will give an impetus to the meetings.

Mrs. Helen L. Bullock, a national organizer of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, who will be present at the Crookston meeting, spent some time in the southern part of the state after the close of the National Convention in St. Paul last November and those who heard her then will be glad of this opportunity of hearing her again. She and her daughter, Florence will spend the month of August in Minnesota, speaking and organizing new Unions.

Mrs. Bullock is considered one of the brightest of the bright galaxy of national organizers. Her work began in a local union in her native state of New York. Her abilities soon led to her appointment as a state organizer, and ere long the national union called her to the wider field of a national organizer.

The first work given her in the national was in Pennsylvania and Iowa, the first year after the division. These were at the time exceedingly difficult fields, but God signally blessed her labors there, as had been the case in the state and local work previously undertaken. Today there are few states north, south, east or west where the Unions have not felt her magnetic presence and been inspired to good works by her energetic influence. Next to her entire consecration, the secret of her success lies in her attention to details; nothing is forgotten.

At the World's W. C. T. U. Convention in Toronto, Canada, November, 1897, Mrs. Bullock was appointed 'round-the-world missionary, and expected to leave America for the foreign field the following April. In January she met with an accident which was feared would prove fatal, but she was spared to the work, and considered it best to remain in this country during the present year, although she has just received an urgent call to Burmah. Last winter she was in South Carolina, and a successful four weeks' campaign was put in then closed in Chicago.

In addition to her work as organizer and lecturer, Mrs. Bullock was last fall appointed by the convention superintendent of the purity department. This who an eminently fit appointment for sympathy for the tempted and a helping hand for the fallen have ever been lovingly given by this busy woman. Her heart has been especially tender toward the rescue work for girls, which she began several years ago by helping to establish the Anchorage Mission in Elmira, N. Y. She has been president of the board of managers since it was founded and scores of girls have been saved in this institution.

Miss Florence Bullock, who accompanies her mother as her secretary, also works among the children in the interests of temperance, addressing schools and Sabbath schools, or any gathering of the children. Miss Bullock speaks in an easy, interesting way, gaining the attention of the children at the very first and holding it to the close of her remarks.

The following state song, which was written by Miss Garvin, of Hamline, will be sung:

MINNESOTA.
Tune of Zion.

Thou art dentist in regal splendor
As a bride in fair array;
For the rein- ter lides are pleasing.
For thy robes the whentield sway,
Minnesota,
State where thousand waters play!

From thy breast the Mississippi
Rolls in grandeur to the ocean;
At thine ear sweet Minnehaha
Sings her never changing song
Land of Waters!
Shall we let their suffer worse?
Shall thy sonderful thy fairness!
Soil thy crystal purity?
To a curse turn gifts God given,
Pearls to tears of misery?
Bane or Blessing
Shall thy beauty be to thee?
God of love! withold Thy judgment
Thine we are, our work is Thine:
Thine our country, its Salvation
Rests on thy heart divine,
Does thy handmaids
Fleeting Want and Woe and Wine!

POLK COUNTY EXHIBIT

Is an Assured Success—Vast Quantity of Grain and other Desirable Specimens.

MORE VEGETABLES ARE WANTED

George Purvis is Having the Exhibit Arranged in an Artistic Manner.

At the Great Northern land office, where business is always rushing, there has been unusual activity during the past week, for it is at this place that the Polk county exhibit, which is destined to head the list of county exhibits at the coming state fair, is being arranged. Hither farmers and other citizens have been carrying specimens of all manner of vegetable growth, till Mr. Purvis' office has the appearance of a place where a harvest home festival was to take place. The very finest specimens of wheat, oats, barley, corn and other cereals are here collected. Grasses of all kinds hang up on the walls, buckwheat and flax are also there, though not in such large quantities as might be wished.

Supt. Hoverstad of the Crookston experimental station has been particularly assisting himself in the collection. The JOURNAL has already referred to some of the material that he has brought in. This week he added to the collection eighteen varieties of splendid corn, two sets on stock, specimens of arbor vitae, flax, and the Siberian hedge plant, and vegetables of all kinds are forthcoming next week.

A sample of an unusual variety of grain, styled "spelt," was sent in by C. A. Tullar. This spelt Mr. Tullar has grown on his farm in Brisbet.

A complete collection of the game birds and other varieties of birds in Polk county has been promised to Mr. Purvis by H. C. Johnson, who has already left at the office a pelican, which he shot in the river here last spring. This bird, it is claimed, is one of the largest of its kind. A large long-leafed tobacco plant, at least four feet high, has been secured.

What is now wanted, and in large quantities as well as in many varieties, is vegetables, threshed grains and preserved fruit. Let the farmers pick out their largest vegetables and best samples of threshed grain and bring them in. Don't think your neighbor will do it and hence you don't need to. Bring or send in what you have and if your neighbor does the same so much the better. The ladies, both in the city and in the country should aid to the county exhibit the fruit preserved fruit and they have lots of it.

Mr. Purvis, to whom great credit is due for the success that has already crowned the work of collecting the products of the Red River Valley, who has spent both time and money in the cause, and is arranging the material and artistic designs, will do go down to Hamline, to the state fair grounds, next Saturday to make arrangements about the exhibit.

THE CHILDREN'S HOME SOCIETY.

Quarterly Report—Plea for $10,000 to Build a Receiving Home.

Rev. E. P. Savage, superintendent of the Children's Home Society of the state, was in Crookston Sunday and Monday, and Tuesday morning he went to Warren. Sunday morning he spoke in several of the churches in behalf of the homeless children. He had with him a bright little fellow for whom he wished to secure a home. The society is doing a noble work caring for these homeless waifs and is deserving of any and all aid which may be given them. The entire number of children cared for during the ten years of the society's work is 1430. The quarterly report of this society shows that in the last three months eighty children were in charge of the society, thirty were placed in homes, twenty-two otherwise provided for and twenty-eight were in charge at the close of the quarter. A strong plea is made for a $10,000 fund to build a receiving home and plans are outlined in the report for raising the money.

A Stabbing Affair.

Tuesday morning's train from the west brought in a passenger who had almost to be carried from the railroad coach to the carriage. The passenger was Harry Lauderman, who was returning home to be taken care of, he having been but a few days out of the hospital. It seems that he was working in the mining camp out in Montana and a man stabbed him, the main artery being severed, so that the pulse in his right wrist did not beat for several days afterwards. It is hoped, however, that the arm may be saved.

The monument fund is increasing very rapidly and at such a lively rate it won't be long before strangers as well as citizens will be gazing upon a reminder of our "brave Dakotans" in the Philippines.

Lieut. Dan Godfrey and his famous British Guards band afforded an evening of rare pleasure at the Metropolitan Sunday evening. They were the finest of its kind that has ever visited this city, not barring the famous Sousa. They played with expression. Although mechanical, could only be acquired by long years of practice. All their music had a finish which seemed lacking in Sousa's entertainment. The program was just long enough to send every lady home in good humor and delighted.

By a short correspondence between Frank Schofield, band sergeant and secretary of the 90th battalion, the mayor, on behalf of the citizens of Grand Forks, extended a most cordial invitation to the citizens of Winnipeg to visit this city Aug. 17. Such a movement created quite a sensation among our citizens as this was the first time our "Canadian Cousins" would have a chance to take possession of our mill for one day. Signs of the approaching event came forth Wednesday evening when lines of flags and banners were being strung across the streets, the Union Jack and stars and stripes flying as one. By Thursday morning the city was decorated to a "queen's taste." In front of the Hotel Dakotah hung a large key, overhung by a banner with the inscription, "The Mayor and Citizens of Grand Forks give our Canadian Cousins the Key to the City." The first train arrived at 11:30. It was decorated with the stars and stripes and Union Jack and a painting of Her Majesty, took the place of the number plate on the engine. This train contained the 90th. They were met by the K. P. band, the Herald Guards" and Norn band. As soon as they were formed the parade started. Tosee England's soldiers in uniform and arms was quite a novel experience, especially on our soil. After parading the city they went into their outing quarters which the city had provided for them in the old postoffice building. At 2:30 the second parade took place, in which were the different bands, battalion and baseball nines, among them being the Boston Bloomers." They passed through the streets and then went direct to the baseball park, where an exhibition of drill was given, after the Bloomers played a picked nine composed of Grand Forks and Winnipeg. The "Bloomers" defeated the latter with a score of 5 to 3. Three races for horses were followed and then came the game of ball between this city and the visitors. We won, most unfortunately. Score, 1 to 2. In the evening a reception was given to those in uniform at the Hotel Dakotah, the different lodges in their rooms. The first train left at 11:40, the second at 12:30 a.m. They left among cheers and music. They went with a feeling of having had a most hearty welcome and a grand "send off." Since that time the officials of the city have received many letters of thanks for such a royal time and the editors from over the line have devoted columns expressing their thanks and compliments to our hospitality.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

By local application as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces. We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

—A change in Great Northern time table has come into effect. No. 3 Vincent train now reaches here at 8:52 a. m. and leaves for the north at 9:30. The St. Hilaire train instead of leaving at 8:30 a. m. now will not leave for from Grand Forks and leaves at 1:20 a. m.

Objectionable Obedience.

All orders to inmates servants in India must be literally given, for in that manner they will be received. A missionary once took a country lad as a servant when going out on a hunting journey. As there are no luxuries on board the country boats, such conditions have to be performed in a very simple manner, an ordinary bucket serving as a wash bowl. The boy was told to bring some water, and, in doing so, happened to spill a little on the floor. "Why don't you throw it all over me?" asked the missionary, jocosely. "Aha," said the lad, and immediately, to his master's astonishment, took up the pail and emptied it over his employer's head.—Golden Days.

Academic Humor.

How neat a commentary upon the value of academic honor or a place among the immortals is the examination of the obscure Leon Dieux when told that he had been chosen to succeed Mathieu as "Prince of Poets." "Henceforth I shall be a butt for ridicule," said the great unknown, and nothing more to the point could have been said. Yet 60 poets of Paris were concerned in giving him this empty honor, and how many ambitions were thereby set trying to lift in doing it does not appear.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat

A Better Prize.

A clergyman was very much vexed by one of his congregation. An old man used to go to sleep during the sermon. The clergyman offered the old man's grandson a penny if he would keep his grandfather awake. This went all right for a month. One Sunday the old man went to sleep as usual. The clergyman asked the boy why he did not keep his grandfather awake. The boy answered: "You offered me a penny to keep him awake, but grandfather gives me twopence not to disturb him."—Pearson's Weekly.

The Rout of the White Hussars.

By RUDYARD KIPLING.

It was not in the open fight
We threw away the sword,
But in the lonely watching
In the darkness by the ford.
The waters lapped, the night wind blew,
Full armed the fear was born and grew,
And we were flying ere we knew
From panic in the night.
—Beoni Bar.

Some people hold that an English cavalry regiment cannot run. This is a mistake. I have seen 437 sabers flying over the face of the country in abject terror; have seen the best regiment that ever drew bridle wiped off the army list for the space of two hours. If you repeat this tale to the White hussars, they will in all probability treat you severely. They are not proud of the incident.

You may know the White hussars by their "side," which is greater than that of the cavalry regiments on the roster. If this is not a sufficient mark, you may know them by their old brandy. It has been 60 years in the mess and is worth going far to taste. Ask for the "McGaire" old brandy and see that you get it. If the mess sergeant thinks that you are uneducated and that the genuine article will be lost on you, he will treat you accordingly. He is a good man. But when you are at mess you must never talk to your hosts about forced marches or long distance rides. The mess are very sensitive and, if they think that you are laughing at them, will tell you so.

As the White hussars say, it was all the colonel's fault. He was a new man, and he ought never to have taken the command. He said that the regiment was not smart enough—this to the White hussars, who knew they could walk round any horse and through any guns and over any foot on the face of the earth! That insult was the first cause of offense.

Then the colonel cast the drum horse—the drum horse of the White hussars! Perhaps you do not see what an unspeakable crime he had committed. I will try to make it clear. The soul of the regiment lives in the drum horse who carries the silver kettledrums. He is nearly always a big piebald waler. That is a point of honor, and a regiment will spend anything you please on a piebald. He is beyond the ordinary laws of casting. His work is very light, and he only maneuvers at a foot pace. Wherefore so long as he can step out and look handsome his well being is assured. He knows more about the regiment than the adjutant, and could not make a mistake if he tried.

The drum horse of the White hussars was only 18 years old and perfectly equal to his duties. He had at least six years more work in him and carried himself with all the pomp and dignity of a drum major of the guards. The regiment had paid 1,200 rupees for him.

But the colonel said that he must go, and he was cast in due form and replaced by a washy bay beast as ugly as a mule, with a ewe neck, rat tail and cow hocks. The drummer detested that animal, and the best of the band horses put back their ears and showed the whites of their eyes at the very sight of him. They knew him for an upstart and no gentleman. I fancy that the colonel's ideas of smartness extended to the band, and that he wanted to make it take part in the regular parade movements. A cavalry band is a sacred thing. It only turns out for commanding officers' parades, and the bandmaster is one degree more important than the colonel. He is high priest and the "Keel Row" is his holy song. The "Keel Row" is the cavalry trot, and the man who has never heard that tune rising, high and shrill, above the rattle of the regiment going past the saluting base has something yet to hear and understand.

When the colonel cast the drum horse of the White hussars, there was nearly a mutiny.

The officers were angry, the regiment was furious and the bandsmen swore—like troopers. The drum horse was going to be put up to auction—public auction—to be bought, perhaps, by a Parsee and put into a cart! It was worse than exposing the inner life of the regiment to the whole world or selling the mess plate to a Jew—a black Jew.

The colonel was a mean man and a bully. He knew what the regiment thought about his action, and, when the troopers offered to buy the drum horse, he said that their offer was mutinous and forbidden by the regulations.

But one of the subalterns—Hogan-Yale, an Irishman—bought the drum horse for 160 rupees at the sale, and the colonel was wroth. Yale professed repentance—he was unnaturally submissive—and said that, as he had only made the purchase to save the horse from possible ill treatment and starvation, he would now shoot him and end the business. This appeared to soothe the colonel, for he wanted the drum horse disposed of. He felt that he had made a mistake, and could not of course acknowledge it. Meantime, the presence of the drum horse was an annoyance to him.

Yale took to himself a glass of the old brandy, three cheroots, and his friend, Martyn, and they all left the mess together. Yale and Martyn conferred for two hours in Yale's quarters, but only the bull terrier who keeps watch over Yale's boot trees knows what they said. A horse, hooded and sheeted to his ears, left Yale's stables and was taken, very unwillingly, into the civil lines. Yale's groom went with him. Two men broke into the regimental theater and took several paint pots and some large scenery brushes. Then night fell over the cantonments, and there was a noise as of a horse kicking his loose box to pieces in Yale's stables. Yale had a big, old, white waler trap horse.

The next day was a Thursday, and the men, hearing that Yale was going to shoot the drum horse in the evening, determined to give the beast a regular regimental funeral—a finer one than they would have given the colonel had he died just then. They got a bullock cart and some sacking and mounds and mounds of roses, and the body, under sacking, was carried out to the place where the anthrax cases were cremated. Two-thirds of the regiment followed. There was no band, but they all sang "The Place Where the Old Horse Died" as something respectful and appropriate to the occasion. When the corpse was dumped into the grave and the men began throwing down armfuls of roses to cover it, the farrier sergeant ripped out an oath and said aloud, "Why, it ain't the drum horse any more than it's me!" The troop sergeant majors asked him whether he had left his head in the canteen. The farrier sergeant said that he knew the drum horse's feet as well as he knew his own, but he was silenced when he saw the regimental number burned in on the poor, stiff, upturned near fore.

Thus was the drum horse of the White hussars buried—the farrier sergeant grumbling. The sacking that covered the corpse was smeared in places with black paint, and the farrier sergeant drew attention to this fact. But the troop sergeant major of E troop kicked him severely on the shin and told him that he was undoubtedly drunk.

On the Monday following the burial the colonel sought revenge on the White hussars. Unfortunately, being at that time temporarily in command of the station, he ordered a brigade field day. He said that he wished to make the regiment "sweat for their damned insolence," and he carried out his notion thoroughly. That Monday was one of the hardest days in the memory of the White hussars. They were thrown against a skeleton enemy and pushed forward and withdrawn and dismounted and "scientifically handled" in every possible fashion over dusty country till they sweated profusely. Their only amusement came late in the day when they fell upon the battery of horse artillery and chased it for two miles. This was a personal question, and most of the troopers had money on the event, the gunners saying openly that they had the legs of the White hussars. They were wrong. A march past concluded the campaign, and when the regiment got back to its lines the men were coated with dirt from spur to chin strap.

The White hussars have one great and peculiar privilege. They won it at Fontenoy, I think.

Many regiments possess special rights, such as wearing collars with undress uniform, or a bow of ribbon between the shoulders, or red and white roses in their helmets on certain days of the year. Some rights are connected with regimental saints and some with regimental successes. All are valued highly, but none so highly as the right of the White hussars to have the band playing when their horses are being watered in the lines. Only one tune is played and that tune never varies. I don't know its real name, but the White hussars call it "Take Me to London Again." It sounds very pretty. The regiment would sooner be struck off the roster than forego its distinction.

After the "dismiss" was sounded, the officers rode off home to prepare for stables, and the men filed into the lines, riding easy—that is to say, they opened their tight buttons, shifted their helmets, and began to joke or to swear as the humor took them, the more careful slipping off and easing girths and curbs. A good trooper values his mount exactly as much as he values himself, and believes, or should believe, that the two together are irresistible where women or men, girls or guns, are concerned.

Then the orderly officer gave the order "water horses," and the regiment loafed off to the squadron troughs which were in rear of the stables and between these and the barracks. There were four huge troughs, one for each squadron, arranged en echelon, so that the whole regiment could water in ten minutes if it liked. But it lingered for 17, as a rule, while the band played.

The band struck up as the squadrons filed off the troughs, and the men slipped their feet out of the stirrups and chaffed each other. The sun was just setting in a big, hot bed of red cloud, and the road to the civil lines seemed to run straight into the sun's eye. There was a little dot on the road. It grew and grew till it showed as a horse, with a sort of gridiron thing on his back. The red cloud glared through the bars of the gridiron. Some of the troopers shaded their eyes with their hands and said, "What the mischief 'as that there 'orse got on 'im?"

In another minute they heard a neigh that every soul—horse and man—in the regiment knew, and saw, heading straight toward the band, the dead drum horse of the White hussars!

On his withers banged and bumped the kettledrums draped in crape, and on his back, very stiff and soldierly, sat a bareheaded skeleton.

The band stopped playing, and for a moment there was a hush.

Then some one in E troop—men said it was the troop sergeant major—swung his horse round and yelled. No one can account exactly for what happened afterward, but it seems that at least one man in each troop set an example of panic, and the rest followed like sheep. The horses that had barely put their muzzles into the troughs reared and capered, but as soon as the band broke, which it did when the ghost of the drum horse was about a furlong distant, all hoofs followed suit, and the clatter of the stampede—quite different from the orderly throb and roar of a movement on parade or the rough horseplay of watering in camp—made them only more terrified. They felt that the men on their backs were afraid of something. When horses once know that, all is over except the butchery.

Troop after troop turned from the troughs and ran—anywhere and everywhere—like spilled quicksilver. It was a most extraordinary spectacle, for men and horses were in all stages of easiness, and the carbine buckets flopping against their sides urged the horses on. Men were shouting and cursing and trying to pull clear of the band which was being chased by the drum horse, whose rider had fallen forward and seemed to be spurring for a wager.

The colonel had gone over to the mess for a drink. Most of the officers were with him, and the subaltern of the day was preparing to go down to the lines and receive the watering reports from the troop sergeant majors. When "Take Me to London Again" stopped after 20 bars, every one in the mess said, "What on earth has happened?" A minute later they heard unmilitary noises and saw far across the plain the White hussars scattered and broken and flying.

The colonel was speechless with rage, for he thought that the regiment had risen against him or was unanimously drunk. The band, a disorganized mob, tore past, and at its heels labored the drum horse—the dead and buried drum horse—with the jolting, clattering skeleton. Hogan-Yale whispered softly to Martyn, "No wire will stand that treatment," and the band, which had doubled like a hare, came back again. But the rest of the regiment was gone, was rioting all over the province, for the dusk had shut in, and each man was howling to his neighbor that the drum horse was on his flank. Troop horses are far too tenderly treated, as a rule. They can on emergencies do a great deal, even with 17 stone on their backs, as the troopers found out.

How long this panic lasted I cannot say. I believe that when the moon rose the men saw they had nothing to fear and by twos and threes and half troops crept back into cantonments very much ashamed of themselves. Meantime the drum horse, disgusted at his treatment by old friends, pulled up, wheeled round and trotted up to the mess veranda steps for bread. No one liked to run, but no one cared to go forward till the colonel made a movement and laid hold of the skeleton's foot. The band had halted some distance away and now came back slowly. The colonel called it, individually and collectively, every evil name that occurred to him at the time, for he had set his hand on the bosom of the drum horse and found flesh and blood. Then he beat the kettledrums with his clinched fist and discovered that they were but made of silver paper and bamboo. Next, still swearing, he tried to drag the skeleton out of the saddle, but found that it had been wired into the cantle. The sight of the colonel, with his arms round the skeleton's pelvis and his knee in the old drum horse's stomach, was striking, not to say amusing. He worried the thing off in a minute or two and threw it down on the ground, saying to the band, "Here, you curs, that's what you're afraid of!" The skeleton did not look pretty in the twilight. The band sergeant seemed to recognize it, for he began to chuckle and choke. "Shall I take it away, sir?" said the band sergeant. "Yes," said the colonel, "take it to hell and ride there yourselves!"

The band sergeant saluted, hoisted the skeleton across his saddlebow and led off to the stables. Then the colonel began to make inquiries for the rest of the regiment, and the language he used was wonderful. He would disband the regiment, he would court martial every soul in it, he would not command such a set of rabble, and so on and so on. As the men dropped in, his language grew wilder, until at last it exceeded the utmost limits of free speech allowed even to a colonel of horse.

Martyn took Hogan-Yale aside and suggested compulsory retirement from the service as a necessity when all was discovered. Martyn was the weaker man of the two. Hogan-Yale put up his eyebrows and remarked, first, that he was the son of a lord, and, secondly, that he was as innocent as the babe unborn of the theatrical resurrection of the drum horse.

"My instructions," said Yale, with a singularly sweet smile, "were that the drum horse should be sent back as impressively as possible. I ask you, Am I responsible if a mule headed friend sends him back in such a manner as to disturb the peace of mind of a regiment of her majesty's cavalry?"

Martyn said, "You are a great man, and will in time become a general, but I'd give my chance of a troop to be safe out of this affair."

Providence saved Martyn and Hogan-Yale. The second in command led the colonel away to the little curtained alcove wherein the subalterns of the White hussars were accustomed to play poker of nights, and there, after many oaths on the colonel's part, they talked together in low tones. I fancy that the second in command must have represented the scare as the work of some trooper whom it would be hopeless to detect, and I know that he dwelt upon the sin and the shame of making a public laughing stock of the scare.

"They will call us," said the second in command, who had really a fine imagination—"they will call us the 'fly-by-nights,' they will call us the 'ghost hunters,' they will nickname us from one end of the army list to the other. All the explanations in the world won't make outsiders understand that the officers were away when the panic began. For the honor of the regiment and for your own sake keep this thing quiet."

The colonel was so exhausted with anger that soothing him down was not so difficult as might be imagined. He was made to see gently and by degrees that it was obviously impossible to court martial the whole regiment and equally impossible to proceed against any subaltern who, in his belief, had any concern in the hoax.

"But the beast's alive! He's never been shot at all!" shouted the colonel. "It's flat, flagrant disobedience! I've known a man broke for less, damned sight less. They're mocking me, I tell you, Mutman! They're mocking me!"

Once more the second in command set himself to soothe the colonel and wrestled with him for half an hour. At the end of that time the regimental sergeant major reported himself. The situation was rather novel to him, but he was not a man to be put out by circumstances. He saluted and said, "Regiment all come back, sir;" then, to propitiate the colonel, "An' none of the horses any the worse, sir."

The colonel only snorted and answered, "You'd better tuck the men into their cots, then, and see that they don't wake up and cry in the night." The sergeant withdrew.

His little stroke of humor pleased the colonel, and, further, he felt slightly ashamed of the language he had been using. The second in command worried him again, and the two sat talking far into the night.

Next day but one there was a commanding officers' parade, and the colonel harangued the White hussars vigorously. The pith of his speech was that since the drum horse in his old age had proved himself capable of cutting up the whole regiment he should return to his post of pride at the head of the band, but the regiment were a set of ruffians with bad consciences.

The White hussars shouted and threw everything movable about them into the air, and when the parade was over they cheered the colonel till they could not speak. No cheers were put up for Lieutenant Hogan-Yale, who smiled very sweetly in the background.

Said the second in command to the colonel unofficially:

"These little things insure popularity and do not the least affect discipline."

"But I went back on my word," said the colonel.

"Never mind," said the second in command. "The White hussars will follow you anywhere from today. Regiments are just like women; they will do anything for trinketry."

A week later Hogan-Yale received an extraordinary letter from some one who signed himself "Secretary Charity and Zeal, 3709, E. C.," and asked for "the return of our skeleton which we have reason to believe is in your possession."

"Who the deuce is this lunatic who trades in bones?" said Hogan-Yale.

"Beg your pardon, sir," said the band sergeant, "but the skeleton is with me, and I'll return it if you'll pay the carriage into the civil lines. There's a coffin with it, sir."

Hogan-Yale smiled and handed 2 rupees to the band sergeant, saying, "Write the date on the skull, will you?"

If you doubt this story and know where to go, you can see the date on the skeleton. But don't mention the matter to the White hussars.

I happen to know something about it because I prepared the drum horse for his resurrection. He did not take kindly to the skeleton at all.

Odors and the Voice.

Dr. Sanderson, an English resident of Paris, says certain essences will give certain qualities and capacities to the voice. This is interesting to embryo Pattis, De Reszkes and Plancons. Dr. Sanderson asserts that in order to modify the sounds of the human voice one has only to inhale the vapors of certain liquids and essences.

Thus inhalation of curacao, according to Dr. Sanderson, will raise the voice two notes, the inspiration of absinth will add one high and two low notes, and essence extracted from pines will give two low notes. A dissolution of coffee beans in rum, he claims, strengthens the medium notes.

There are other odors that are said to be even more efficacious, though they have the disadvantage of not tickling the olfactory nerves so agreeably. But no singer would stick at such a trifle as this if he or she desired to reach a much coveted and hitherto unattainable note. For instance, there are kerosene and turpentine and—yes—even strychnine.

The effect of the latter, according to the doctor, is marvelous. He asserts that it raises the voice no fewer than five notes and will enable almost anybody to deliver with ease Tamberlick's famous chest C that never failed to bring down the house.

Coal Stealers.

Coal stealing from railroads, common along the lines of all the coal carrying roads, has been reduced to a system in Syracuse, The Post-Standard of that city says. The thieves work hard and take many risks, not only of detection, but of bodily injury. Their methods would be called clever if employed in an honest business. The heaviest thieving is done by men with sacks, who climb up between the cars of a slow moving train, with two or more bushel sacks concealed under their clothing. As opportunity offers they fill a sack and throw it from the train, to be picked up by accomplices.

Another trick is adopted by men who, dressed like tramps, board trains as if with the intention of stealing a ride. These men travel along from one car to another, apparently seeking a comfortable place in which to lie down, but in their progress they manage to dislodge a large amount of coal, which is subsequently picked up by the women and children who are employed in the "industry." Large quantities of coal are stolen by these and other methods, the plunder being disposed of to unscrupulous dealers, who subsequently rob the honest poor by dishonest measure.

Our First Clocks.

The oldest clocks of American manufacture were made by Gideon Roberts of Bristol, Conn. According to the best authorities, no clocks were manufactured in what is now the United States prior to 1800, at which time Mr. Roberts first placed his timepieces on the market.

His clocks were made with the greatest care, and much time was spent in perfecting them. They were all of the style commonly known as "hall" clocks, about six feet in height, handsomely finished and a recognized separate piece of furniture in which the owner always took great pride.

Hutchinson Times: We hasten to get in line with the appreciative chups who are saying that the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL is the handsomest thing that comes to their desks. Crookston is fortunate in the high quality of her newspapers, for the Times too is a neaty sheet—if it is Pop.

EVIDENTLY the would-be office holders in Minnesota believe in the old saying "the early bird catches the worm," as they are certainly getting an early start on them for next year's campaign.

THOSE newspapers—and there are some of them not a thousand miles from Crookston—which have been publishing an advertisement for the New York Star, in which ad. a present of a bike is promised if certain conditions are complied with, have been warned by the postoffice authorities not to continue the said publication, as they are thereby printing a lottery ad., which is unlawful. The JOURNAL is always careful and does not get caught in this way.

THE St. Vincent New Era proposes J. Adam Bede as the republican candidate for governor, chiming that he is a prime favorite of J. J. Hill and would thus have strong support. It ought not to be forgotten, however, that Hill was the chief owner in the St. Paul Globe last fall, which paper was the chief supporter of Lind. In case, then, both Lind and Bede ran for the governorship the great railway magnate might find his position a difficult one.

THERE is still almost a week left in which to bring in to Geo. Purvis specimens of grains or any of the articles called for for the county exhibit. Polk county has the material with which to make a prize winning exhibit if the farmers will only bring or send the stuff to town. It is not often, either, that a county has the opportunity of having its exhibit arranged by a man of such experience in that line of work as Mr. Purvis. Give him a chance and Polk county will come out ahead.

WHILE it is a great calamity that has befallen this fertile region, it is nothing to what other portions of the country have undergone. In the storm in Puerto Rico 1,000 lives were lost, 100,000 people rendered homeless besides untold damage to property. So that by a kind providence we have been spared a greater loss.—Hendrum News. This is certainly a very cheerful and optimistic view of the situation that existed after the late destructive hail storm, and as the paper speaks for the community it is evident that the people in the vicinity of Hendrum are persevering and will never say fail.

THE present trial of Dreyfus ought to set Americans thinking and make them appreciate more than ever the administration of law in this country. Very appropriately is the court at Rennes sitting on the stage of a theatre, for theatrical and dramatic in the extreme are the scenes enacted there. The situation will perhaps be better appreciated when it is remembered that in France a man is held guiltly till he is proven innocent, while with us it is the reverse. We can hardly comprehend a court refusing to adjourn when the leading counsel for the defense was shot. Dreyfus' path has been beset with difficulties that would long ago have discouraged him had he not been a man of wonderful self-control.

BRYAN in his speech at the Des Moines democratic convention prepared the way for the shelving of the silver issue. New issues may arise, he said, which ought to be given more prominence than the old ones. The chief new issue he referred to is the Philippine war, which he, of course, strongly opposes. Taken in conjunction with Richard Croker's flop, Bryan's language is significant. The democrats of the east and west are evidently trying to get together and they think the expansion issue the one upon which they can agree. To abandon the Philippines now would be as base and humiliating as to repudiate our debts which Bryan et al wished us to do three years ago.

THE program of the state convention of the W. C. T. U. which will be in Crookston next week is printed elsewhere in this issue. The subjects to be discussed cover a wide field and much will the citizens of Crookston learn by attending the various meetings. The fact that such themes as "The Art and Science of Cooking," "Food Values" and the Child's Physical and Moral Nature" will be considered shows the inclusive character of the work being done by this organization. Not merely do these noble women strive to close the saloons and reform the drunkard but they aim to have the young grow up with temperate habits.

CROOKSTON and vicinity furnished several volunteers for the 13th regiment, which is now on its way from Manilla—Archie Patterson, who was one of the first to lay down his life on the field of battle in the Philipines, and several others who are now with the regiment. The boys will be mustered out at San Francisco and Minnesota proposes to give them railroad transportation to their state. Already thousands of dollars have been contributed. Ought not Crookston, one of the most important places in the state, to assist in such a worthy cause? Even had no soldier gone forth from Crookston, as the regiment is a state organization, this city ought to show her appreciation of the noble deeds of our boys in blue, by contributing something toward the transportation fund.

GOVERNOR ROOSEVELT'S recent address on "Practical Politics and Decent Politics" at Ocean Grove, N. J., was timely, manly, straightforward and right to the point. It is no use to complain of the evils in the political world, the thing to do is to get out and right them. Politicians are just what people allow them to be, though this does not excuse the politician. We shall be guilty, he says, of a terrible wrong to humanity if in the Philippines we retreat before armed savagery, instead of organizing a suitable government which shall guarantee justice to everyone and an ever increasing measure of liberty to those who show themselves worthy of it. Had we more men such as Governor Roosevelt in public positions our public affairs would be conducted with less trickery and more statesmanship than is now the case.

THE U. S. Commissioner of education, W. T. Harris, in his report shows that in the secondary schools of the land, that is, all schools doing a high school grade of work, Latin is gaining faster than any other study, the increase in enrollment in the past eight years being 174 per cent. This is evidence that in the study of this language there is much educational value, for it is a well established law that only the fittest in everything survives. The complaint is often made that Latin is a useless study, but such is not the case. Were only the so-called practical subjects taught in the secondary schools the training which the pupils receive would lack breadth. Parents in assisting their children to choose a course of study in the high schools would do well to remember that though a knowledge of certain subjects may be more readily turned into money than a knowledge of others this is not the supreme test. Those studies which lay the deepest foundations for one's future development are worthy of the utmost consideration.

THE democrats are willing to sacrifice anything and everything to get votes. Listen to this from the platform of that party in Iowa; "We also condemn the war against the Filipinos, believing it to have been inspired by Great Britain for the purpose of producing conditions that will force an American alliance." Twisting the British lion's tail was one of the chief performances of the demo-pops last year but it will not have the effect now as then. Contrast the action of the Des Moines convention with that of the people of Grand Forks last Thursday. At that time the latter city was decorated with the stars and strips and the Union Jack intertwined, in honor of the visit of the Ninetieth Battalion of Canadian Rifles, and other Winnipegers. The latter act was a friendly one showing a truly progressive American spirit. The attitude of the Iowa convention was a thoroughly partisan one.

WITH Pease of the Anoka Union and Heatwole of the Northfield news for governor, Bede of Bede's Budget for congress in the Sixth district, Dowling of the Renville Star-Farmer for congress in the Third, Miller of the Luverne Herald in the Second, or possibly Huntington of the Windom Reporter, Langum of the Preston Times for secretary of state and Dunn of the Fergus Falls Union for state auditor, the country newspaper boys are coming in for pretty much the whole cheese but the state treasurership. No county editor seems to have a desire to handle the money.—Ex. While these newspaper men without doubt could acceptably any of these offices for which they may be candidates, is it not possible that the brethren are making a mistake? A man cannot successfully do more than one thing, and an editor, we think, is in a better position, out of office than in it, to tell the people the truth in every matter and certainly his first business is to look after the interests of the citizens.

NUMEROUS friends have called during the past week to examine and admire our new Optimus press and we were much pleased to show them our newspaper plant. With reference to equipment let us say that in addition to our model press, than which there is nothing better manufactured, we have recently added to our press rooms a new folding machine that will paste and trim newspapers, eight, ten or twelve pages. We have also a new Gordon job printing press, 10x15, and a complete new outfit of type, superior copper mixed, with the newest faces. All of this machinery and type we bought from the Minnesota Type Foundry Company of St. Paul, the accommodating manager of which company, W. A. Potter, was at Crookston when we received our Optimus and very materially assisted us in getting the machine in working order. He is also setting up a new Babcock press for Editor Mitchell of the Alexandria Press-News. In fact almost all of the boys give their orders to Mr. Potter, for they find him most obliging and painstaking.

THE state examinations for teachers' certificates which were held this year under the direct supervision of the department of public instruction show a rather low grade of scholarship among the examinees. Forty-five per cent failed, though twenty per cent of these—the ones who failed in one subject—will be given a certificate good for one year. The examinations were neither hard nor long and all that can be said is that almost half the candidates were somewhat ignorant, to say the least, of what are called the common branches. As more than 1000 applicants will be unable to teach, it is likely that common school teachers will be scarce this coming year, which would probably have the beneficial effect of raising teachers' salaries. With the small wages that are paid in most rural schools it is not to be expected that those who intend teaching will make thorough preparation. They can hardly afford to do so. Raise the wages and improvement will be made in the common school system, where it is evident there is great room for improvement.

THE state high school board recently decided to abolish state examinations in the state high schools. The teachers in the high schools will be the sole judges of the standing of the student and the latter may enter the state university upon presentation of a certificate from the principal of the high school which he attended to the effect that he has done satisfactory work in certain subjects. We heartily endorse such action of the board. We do not think that any pupil should be graded upon the result of an examination held at the end of the year. Where such is the test of scholarship the nervous strain upon the majority of the pupils is very great. A better spirit of study can be created in a school and the ends of education better secured where the dreaded state examinations are not held. A faithful and competent teacher—and only such should teach—who has spent the year with a student ought to be the best judge as to his knowledge of the subjects which he has studied and as to his general progress and attainments, which is no unimportant matter when one is deciding the question of the standing of a student.

Notes From Exchanges.

Fairbault Pilot: Harley Jim Tarney thinks his mud organs will fit the senatorial skin of Knute Nelson. Ambition and self-conceit have made you as blind as a bat at high noon of a sunny day, Jimmy. You could no more travel with Knute's official skin than you could successfully face Jim Jeffries in the ring.

Glencoe Register: There is not a solitary week goes by but what this office is asked to print this or that advertisement "for the good of the cause," and we have had as high as 140 lines of free advertising in one week for different "causes." This means an outlay of $4.20 cold cash for which we don't even get thanks. Cold world, this.

Minneapolis Journal: Of course, the Boers of the Transvaal under Kruger's leadership have been very nonprogressive and narrow. They want to reap all the pecuniary advantages of gold-mining developments and a large influx of foreigners without allowing the latter to have any privileges whatever. It is a conflict between progress and stupidity.

The Farmer: It is generally supposed that the Red River Valley is the country of "No. 1 hard" and there live stock is a scarce article. But times have changed in the Valley and live stock is now an important adjunct of farming. There is a packing house in Grand Forks, North Dakota, which packed 200,000 pounds of pork in '98 and will be ready for twice as much in 1899.

Alexandria Post-News: None in the United States were more rampant for war than the Demo-Pops. Mr. McKinley did not move fast enough. They voted unanimously the $50,000,000 war fund. They were every one in the war movement with all their mouths. Now they would sneak. Let them. The Republican party can well take the responsibility of the war with Spain and its results, just as it has been responsible for every forward movement made in this country for the last forty years.

Roseau Region: Very few Roseau county laborers will go to the harvest and threshing fields of Dakota this year. Those who have not crops of their own to take care of are finding work with as good wages as can be had in Dakota right in our own county. The contract for clearing the right of way of the Manitoba & Southeastern railroad has been let and employment is to be had for three hundred men. Four years ago nearly every farmer and laboring man in the Roseau valley depended on the fall work in the Dakotas for their winter's living, but that's a thing of the past—the same as Cleveland's administration.

Farm Stock and Home: In looking over eastern agricultural exchanges the great amount of advertising space devoted to commercial fertilizers is striking, and suggests the advantage the western farmer has over his eastern brother. In all probability the time will come when the now fertile northwestern prairie will need applications of commercial fertilizers, but it is in the power of every farmer to postpone that evil day by rotation of crops, using clover as a nitrogen trap, growing cattle and carefully saving and applying the barnyard manure, and by raising sheep.

Red Wing Republican: The process by which the system of grain inspection in Minnesota has been turned over to become the mere sport and prey of politics is worthy of more than passing mention. It marks a day of disaster for the farmers of the commonwealth. It is a public misfortune scarcely short of a calamity. And all the circumstances by which it was accompanied and accomplished constitute such a satire upon the very name of "reform" that the word can never again pass the lips of any advocate of the party now in possession of the executive office in this state without provoking a shout of laughter.

St. Peter Tribune: Fifty years ago Hon. Knute Nelson came to this country with his parents from Norway a poor boy. He now goes back to the home of his childhood after these long years of absence, crowned with the proud title of a U. S. senator, the highest office in this country that can be attained by a citizen of foreign birth. From the plow boy to the United States senate is a record to be proud of, and but shows the possibilities of a boy not afraid of hard work, and who made the best possible use of his time, under many adverse circumstances, to secure an education, and by his personal conduct secured to himself the confidence and respect of his fellow citizens to such an extent as to choose him first for the legislature, then congress, then governor, and last for the high office of U. S. senator from the great state of Minnesota.

BURNING OF MANILLA.

At the State Fair in the Evening—A Most Brilliant Spectacle.

The evening program of the state fair will be of great interest to everybody in Minnesota from the fact that members of the gallant Thirteenth will take part in Porter's brilliant spectacle of the "Burning of Manilla," which has been prepared especially for the fair and is the first modern war spectacle presented to the American public. The part of Manilla that was burned will be represented exactly as it was, with fruit-stands, carts, street cars, and other real things in the foreground, with soldiers of the Thirteenth about their headquarters and the bay in front of the city, floating Dewey's victorious fleet. All these things will appear as real and actual as will the fighting through the streets, the blowing up of the buildings and the killing and wounding of soldiers in the streets, the Red Cross service, with the ambulances, the terrific bombardment from the fleet, the frightful havoc of the real battery which comes up at full gallop, wheels into line and goes into action. The looker on cannot separate the real from the spectacular and is impressed with the reality of the entire scene and action. The men, the artillery, the guns, the firing, the bombardment, the water, the street cars, the horses, the fields, torn by shot and the air full of bursting bomb shells he knows is real. The rest is scarcely less thrilling than it would be if real. It will be a scene worth visiting and one that will impress a historical event of vast import on the mind of every body that sees it.

—At the business meeting of the band association of the city held last Tuesday evening Frank Brown was elected president, O. D. Dahl, manager, Lucius Miller, treasurer and Arthur Kirsch, secretary.

Perhaps the most beautiful paragraph in Ingersoll's writing is the following, says the East Grand Forks Courier: "Strike with hands of fire, O weird musicians, thy harp stung with Apollo's golden hair, fill the vast cathedral aisles with symphonies sweet and dim, deft toucher of the organ keys; blow, bugler, blow until the silvery notes do touch and kiss the moonlit waves, and charm the lovers wandering midst the vine clad hills; but know, your sweetest strains are discord all, compared with childhood's happy laugh—the laugh that fills the eyes with light and every heart with joy."

Odd Fellows and Rebekah Reception

Last Friday evening there was a very pleasant nalon meeting of the Odd Fellows and Rebekahs at their lodge rooms. The special occasion of the meeting was the presence in the city of Mrs. Alice Kelsey, the state president of the Rebekahs, to whom a reception was tendered at that time. Mrs. Kelsey presided at a district meeting of the Rebekahs held at Red Lake Falls last week.

At the reception Friday evening Mr. and Mrs. John Sanbergwere presented by the members of the two lodges with a beautiful wedding gift.

HONOR TO CROOKSTON PASTOR.

Rev. F. W. Fraser Offered a Professorship in Macalaster College.

It is within the bounds of possibility that the Presbyterian church of Crookston may lose its popular pastor, Rev. F. W. Fraser, who has been in the city for more than a year. He has been offered the chair of Hebrew and Biblical literature in Macalaster College, which college is under the control of the Presbyterian church of the state. The professorship offered has been held for years by one of the most eloquent Presbyterian ministers in the state, Dr. Davis, who will spend the next two years in Europe. Holding this position, Mr. Fraser would preach in the college chapel every Sunday morning and have his Sunday evenings to preach in other churches. This would give him a rare field for the growth of reputation and influence.

Mr. Fraser is a man of scholarly attainments, a thoughtful and eloquent preacher and Crookston would, indeed, sustain a great loss if he were to leave.

He has several weeks in which to consider the matter, but at present he is rather inclined to decline.

HOTEL CROOKSTON DEAL.

St. Paul Scandia American Bank Redeems Property by Paying $2,100.

Last Monday $2,100 was paid by the Scandia American Bank of St. Paul to the sheriff, this being the amount of money necessary to redeem the Hotel Crookston property. A certificate of this transaction was issued and the same has been filed.

To understand this business deal aright it will be necessary to recall a few facts of history. At the time the hotel was built, about five years ago, the directors of the company mortgaged the property to the amount of $15,000. It was understood that this money was contributed equally by the Merchants National Bank of Crookston, Louis Fontaine and George Q. Erskine and William Anglim, and hence deposited the latter as trustee. The directors also at the same time borrowed a sum of money from the First National Bank of Crookston. A year ago this money, amounting to about $2,100, was put in judgment and the property was sold on execution issued on that judgment. Mr. Anglim bought the property, paying the bank the money. The time for the Hotel Crookston Co. to redeem expired last Saturday, but the hotel directors took no steps to redeem.

It transpires also that the contractor had not been paid in full, but was owed about $800, including interest. This claim he sold to the Scandia American Bank of St. Paul. When this bank had discovered that the property had been sold under execution, they caused an attachment to be levied for the amount and filed notice that they would redeem the property, which they did last Monday, as stated above.

ANNUAL STATE FAIR

Sept. 4-9—Will be an Event Unsurpassed in the History of the Northwest

SPECIAL EVENING PROGRAMS

Many New Features—Large Exhibits —Great Trotting and Pacing Races.

The sound of the hammer at the state fair grounds is as deafening as in the building of Babylon. A visit to the grounds recently under the guidance of President Cooper and Secretary Randall revealed the enormous rapidity with which preparations for the great annual event of the northwest is progressing. Buildings in every direction are springing up like mushrooms, and still the space is not equal to the demand. The grounds are also being laid out with artistic bedding designs of beautiful flowers and on every hand nothing is heard but hurry and bustle.

"The people of the state do not begin to appreciate the magnitude to which the fair will attain this fall," said President Cooper, and his statement is borne out by the other members of the board. "Nothing like the rush for space has ever been known," said he, "in the history of the association. We have spent over $600 in new buildings and improvements, yet many exhibits will either have to be refused or else be accommodated under tents. It will be the biggest thing the people of Minnesota ever saw and we have received the most reliable advice that no state fair in the United States will approach it in magnitude and completeness."

It was evident at a glance that Secretary Randall, who has been on the grounds like a steam horse, is leaving no stone unturned to the bottom side down to make the grand event a complete success. "This year's state fair," said he, "will be an event unsurpassed in the history of the northwest. It will be a complete epitome of the history of the state, its progress and splendid prospects for the future. We have never had at this time so many applications for space and mail orders are pouring in every day. It shows the northwest is on the high tide of prosperity. Not only that, but the farmers and people over the state have more cash in their pockets to come up to the twin cities and give themselves the longed-for holiday which they have not been able to do since 1893. We will have the biggest crowds and the biggest attractions the people of Minnesota ever witnessed, and we propose to give them more than their money's worth. The 2:13 pacing and the 2:21 trotting races, each for a purse of $5,000, contributed by the business men of Minneapolis and St. Paul, will be one of the sporting events of the year. It is by all means the finest sensational race ever billed for the northwest and is a bonafide horse race between some of the best known horses on the continent. For the trotting race alone twenty-one horses are entered, representing twelve states from New York to California. When we consider that an entrance fee of $250 is charged for each horse and the race is for $5,000, it guarantees a genuine contest, such as the people in the northwest have never seen. For the grand 2:13 pacing race for $5,000, we have twenty-three of the most famous horses on the American track. They, too, represent some of the best horse flesh from thirteen states, each one paying $250 for the racing privilege alone."

Evidences of the magnificence of the coming exposition can be seen all over the grounds. The exhibits in the machinery buildings are already arriving, all the space has been disposed of, and the secretary has been compelled to purchase large numbers of tents for exhibits of machinery that cannot be placed in the hall. There will be this year several acres of machinery under tents as the unexpected rush has far exceeded the housing capacity, though since last year the board has expended large sums in new buildings and improvements sufficient as was thought to accommodate all comers. The farmer and the mechanic can here find every appliance used today in the most progressive farming anywhere in the world. It will be the largest show of machinery of every description which machine men in this section have ever had the opportunity to examine and no department of mechanics which applies in any way to the industries of the northwest has been omitted. The largest industries have, of course, been given the largest amount of space, but in the acres of machinery which will all be seen in operation from the central power house, will be found the most approved machinery eagiuery used in agriculture, mining, lumber, and the varied industrial life of Minnesota and the northwest.

Passing on into the main building, which will be under the superintendence of George H. Partridge, of Minneapolis, the same story was continued. Mr. Partridge has already received more applications for the many and varied exhibits for which the big main building is designed than can possibly be crowded within its walls, and is asking for more space. "In this building," said Mr. Randall, "will be the most complete and comprehensive exposition that has ever been gathered under one roof in the northwest. Owing to the numerous applications far in advance of the fair, Mr. Partridge has been able to arrange the exhibit in a way that will bring out in one view the real extent and solidity of the industries of our section of the United States as it has never before been done. Every sort of manufacture, every evidence of our resources and the inestimable value of our mines, farms and factories will be presented before the eye in one grand panorama. The board calculates to make this feature of the fair particularly strong, as its influence is undoubtedly felt directly or indirectly in every home, farm, factory, or commercial house in the commonwealth. It will be an epitome of the wealth and material prosperity of the whole northwest section."

In the way of improvig the fair grounds, no greater work has been done than in the addition of the one half-mile track which is just being completed within the circle of the old one-mile track. The secretary and president were both enthusiastic in regard to the substantial addition that this would make to the amusement program of the fair. The new half-mile track has been put in order to give facilities for holding night amusement programs, which is an altogether new feature with any fair. Heretofore the grounds have been closed in the evening, but next the night will be made a veritable carnival. On the smaller track it is proposed to have races the same as in the day, including bicycle races and fancy exhibition riding of all kinds. In addition, the ground within the smaller track has all been graded and will be used for the grand spectacular panorama representing the battle of Manilla. On this feature and the accompanying fireworks a large sum of money has been expended, and the battle of Manilla will be represented by over three hundred actors under excellent leadership. The fireworks alone will cost $1,000 a night and will include some set pieces 75 feet in diameter. The back-ground, representing the scenery of the battle, is painted on a canvas 250 feet long and 30 feet high. It is believed that the night exhibitionas will be one of the strongest amusement features ever given to the people of Minnesota, as neither time nor money has been spared in providing it.

A visit was paid next to the extensive barns for live stock, racing and exhibition horses, and every sort of bird and beast that escaped unhurt from the Ark. Mr. Randall pointed out the complete sanitary arrangements that had been completed for insuring the health of the animals on exhibit. "We have never received up to this time so many applications for space for live stock as this year," said he, and it is becoming evident that the barns will be crowded; but we intend to shelter everything that comes on foot. All the barns have been just freshly painted and put in the best sanitary condition. The live stock show will be unsurpassed in our northwestern history, and the best animals of every kind will be shown. The poultry exhibit will this year show the finest fowls and the largest number in our history, as this branch of farm products is receiving renewed attention by the farmers of the northwest, and we wish to give them the advantage of seeing and competing with the best fowls in the country."

In addition to other improvements, Secretary Randall called attention to the large porches which are almost completed on all the exhibition buildings. These are designed both for the addition to the general space of the buildings and are also for the comfort of the coaccosionaires and visitors. They are a very great addition to the architectural appearance of the structures. The grand stand also has had its share of attention, as it is just coming out of a couple of dips in the paint pot, and the whole panorama of the buildings, in their new coat of white paint, calls to mind the "Great White City" of 1893. New fences are just being completed around the entire ground, and new fences have been built around both the inner and outer race tracks. Tree-planting was going on in every direction, and a veritable forest is suddenly appearing on the previous clear ground. This is a very artistic addition to the general effect produced on the eye of the visitor.

On returning to the secretary's office no better evidence of the tremendous energy with which things are being pushed could be found than a large bed of different colored flowers in the form of a star and another representing a crescent, each nearly 20 feet aroead, both of which had sprung into existence while the visit about the grounds was being made. The effect produced upon a visitor as the fair grounds at this date, is certainly gratifying, and bears witness to the fact that all the promises of Minnesota outdoing herself this fall in the matter of her state fair have not been exaggerated. President Cooper well summed it up in saying that "Minnesota would outdo herself, as she usually did, and produce at her fair, in miniature, the great evolution in industry and commerce of which she is the center in the northwest."

NO CHANGE JUST NOW

MERRITT SAYS OTIS IS TO BE CONTINUED IN CONTROL.

Had Just Been the President and Evidently Talked the Matter Over—Confident the End Is Near—Sufficient Force to Be Sent to Crush the Insurrection Before Long—Himmes American Sympathizers For the Prolongation of the War.

PLATTSBURG, N. Y., Aug. 21.—At this close of an interview with President McKinley General Merritt said:

"So far as I know there will be no immediate change in military commanders in the Philippine islands. General Otis, whom I regard as one of the most capable and efficient officers in the service, will continue in command of the American forces.

"With an efficient force of, say 50,000 troops, I believe he will be able to put down the rebellion. Just how much time will be required, however, I cannot say. Aguinaldo and his men have put up a much better fight than I thought them capable of at the outset, but there can be but one ending to the conflict, a complete victory for American arms. I can but now repeat what I have said time and time again that the insurrection would have been broken ere this had it not been for the moral support which have received from the United States. The delay in the ratification of the peace treaty coupled with the impotent opposition to the administration's policy in the far east did more to encourage Aguinaldo and his followers than anything else. However, this is an event of the past and must be considered as such.

"There remains but one thing to do that is to carry the conflict to a successful conclusion. The result will, I believe, soon be accomplished by General Otis and the corps of able assistants who have been assigned to his command."

"Will you be sent to the Philippines?" was asked.

"Not now," replied the general.

FIGHT AT ANGELES.

Lieutenant of the Twelfth Infantry Killed and Another Wounded.

MANILA, Aug. 21.—One lieutenant of the Twelfth infantry was killed and another was seriously wounded while reconnoitering north of Angeles. The party encountered a large force of insurgents and drove them from their position.

Lieutenant Cole of the Sixth infantry, with 30 men, encountered 100 insurgents entrenched in the mountains of the island of Negros and reported them after an hour and a half of severe fighting. The Americans had three men slightly hurt. Nineteen dead insurgents were counted in the trenches. Six horses and a quantity of reserve ammunition were captured.

The insurgents recently cut the cable in Laguna bay leading to Calumpit, on the south shore of the lake, but the break has been repaired.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—The following dispatches announcing engagements with the Philippine insurgents has been received at the war department:

Lieutenant Cole, Sixth infantry, 30 men, attacked and routed 100 of the enemy entrenched at Tibnan, Negros mountains, having three men slightly wounded. Enemy left intrenchments 19 dead, six rifles and reserve ammunition. Supposed to be armed Tagalos who few days since crossed from Panay in small boats.

"First Lieutenant Alfred W. Drew, Twelfth infantry, instantly killed, and First Lieutenant Willis Uline, same regiment, severely wounded in an attack on insurgents vicinity Angeles by two companies Twelfth infantry. No other casualties. Enemy routed."

THIS EVADED THE CENSOR.

Fighting Spirit of the Filipinos Said to Be Far From Broken.

MANILA, Aug. 19, via Hong Kong, Aug. 23.—The Filipino rebels appear to retain much more of a fighting spirit than might be expected after their recent San Fernando experiences and General Lawton's drubbing in the South.

After giving up San Fernando with a feeble struggle, they entrenched themselves at Angeles, working for several days and impressing noncombatants into the work, thus saving the armed men for the fighting. They engaged Lieutenant Colonel Smith's regimental vanmly for four hours, making one of the most stubborn resistances of the campaign. But the Americans are indebted to the usual poor marksmanship of the Filipinos as well as their strategy for their small losses.

In the province of Cavite, where it was supposed the rebels had been scattered and demoralized beyond recuperation, they have assembled an army of several thousand men, distributed among the important towns from the lake to the bay.

Despatches Were Censored.

Of their operations, the Associated Press correspondent was permitted to send only an inadequate dispatch, dictated verbatim by Major General Otis. The censor struck stereotyped official phrases and adjectives into the dispatches, tending to magnify the American operations and to minimize the opposition.

General Otis says newspapers are not public institutions, but private enterprises, and the correspondents are only here on sufferance.

All reports from the rebel territory agree that the scarcity of food is increasing and that the rebel commanders at Aparri and other points refuse to obey Aguinaldo's order in regard to closing the ports held by the rebels against American ships and say that any ship bringing stores will be welcomed. Several ships from Manila are now at such ports.

CORNERED MERCIER

FORMER WAR MINISTER PLACED IN A TIGHT FIX BY M. LABORI.

Admits Grave Violation of Law in Connection With the Secret Dossier—Probably the General May Occupy a Cell Before the Week Is Out—Presence of the Wounded Attorney Animates the Proceedings.

RENNES, Aug. 23.—The presence of M. Labori enlivened the day's proceedings of the Dreyfus courtmartial. He woke things up, fanned the dormant proceedings into an active living thing. Demange was conciliatory. He had always seemed to fear to treat the military corn. Labori is a gladiator and always speaks to touch his foe to the quick. Let there be the slightest opening in his opponent's defense and he thrusts home.

Generals Roget, Mercier, Billot and Boisdeffre, with other military witnesses, gave one another an accusing glance and put their heads together to discuss obviously disagreeable questions as Labori piled the smaller fry who occupied the witness stand with disconcerting questions. Later on on the Schneider letter which the latter had used in evidence and which Colonel Schneider had repudiated as a forgery. The general was surprised when Labori suddenly demanded that Mercier be recalled. Evidently he hoped the tribunal would support him in refusing to explain how he got a copy of a letter which was of a later date than he incumbency at the ministry of war. But Labori was not to be denied. He insisted that Mercier should give some explanation. Then, after hesitating, Mercier declared that he would assume all the responsibility attaching to the possession of the document. This Labori intimated it should be, was a demonstration of incommendation by the general staff, of part at least of the secret dossier in an ordinary soldier, such as Mercier became immediately on leaving the ministry of war. When Labori had obtained his object and forced a concession of

Grave Violation of the Law

on the part of General Mercier he gave a smile of grim satisfaction and then answered significantly:

"I shall have other questions to put to General Mercier."

The scene was highly dramatic and made a profound impression upon all the spectators.

General Mercier must have spent a very miserable evening, for, as the result of his admissions and with the additional charge of communicating secret documents to the courtmartial of 1894, he is liable to arrest at any moment. Indeed counsel generally think it is not impossible that he will be lying in the military prison adjoining the cell of Captain Dreyfus before the week is out.

Another series of questions put by Labori connected La Jonaz, a spy formerly in the employ of the French war office, but according to various military witnesses, because he proved a swindler. Labori asked how it was, if that were so, that La Jonaz was still receiving monthly payments.

Commandant Rollin, completely mean about, replied that La Jonaz was being paid by the war office to keep out of the way in the interests of Esterhazy, whom La Jonaz, in a letter read in court offering revelations in the Dreyfus affair, insisted was the real traitor.

M. Labori's cross-examination in this matter, therefore, was a distinct advantage to the accused. He also announced that he intended to call several witnesses who had made depositions during his absence. This means that Mercier, Roget and others will be put to the test of a severe cross-examination. To his friends M. Labori has of being able to bear to pieces the evidence these generals have given so confidently before a sympathetic tribunal.

Captain Dreyfus preserved the attitude he took up a day or two since and replied to the statements of hostile witnesses with arguments and the presentation of counter facts, only once giving way to feelings and offering a protest.

This was at the conclusion of Bertin's evidence, when, with broken voice, the latter declared his love of France and the army.

"Yes," he cried, "I love France. It is because I am not yet worthy to suffer from those animating those who came here to testify against me."

Kruger's Answer to Chamberlain's Demand Regarded a Positive Refusal, English Sincerity Will Assert Itself—An Attack on the Transvaal Would Be a Great Outrage Civil War in Cape Colony Predicted as Soon as Hostilities Break Out.

LONDON, Aug. 22.—There is no longer any doubt that President Kruger has refused to submit to the demand of Mr. Chamberlain for the appointment of a court of inquiry. He may have done so diplomatically or hedgingly. But that his answer is regarded by the British government as tantamount to positive refusal is now an established fact. The colonial office is normally unexcitable, but there are other evidences which amply justify the statements. The report that President Kruger has proposed new terms is somewhat verified by the large number of cots on board. They now receive 50 cents.

SOLDIER'S VIEW OF LUZON.

Many Nationalities That Are Present at an Evening Concert.

Here is a bit of description from Corporal Alexander Hunt, a Wilson county (Kan.) boy, with the Twentieth Kansas at Manila:

"The other evening I went over to the Luneta to a band concert given by the Twenty-second band. It was very good. The crowd was just the same as seeing all the people of the earth, nearly. There were the natives (the well to do) in fine turnouts, with fine little horses, the ladies dressed in plain cloth of very bright color and the gentlemen in white. Everybody dresses in white here. You can imagine what a fine picture it makes under the electric lights.

"The English were there in swell carriages. Our American officers, naval and infantry, with their wives and daughters, make a pretty sight, with the black cutaways, in red and gold livery. The Spanish senoritas, dressed in black and with black hair and eyes and beautiful olive complexions, made a striking contrast with the American ladies, dressed in white, with pink cheeks. The rich Chinese ladies were there, too, dressed in native attire, with—well, I will call them trousers, and a kind of a skirt that they had forgotten to tuck in. They were not what I would call pretty. The Japs were present and were very pretty. Some French ladies added color to the white dress'd crowd. Many Germans drove around in their slow manner. You can imagine all this made an impression not soon to be forgotten.

"Tiring of the crowd, you could take a chair down on the beach and watch the rollers come in or look at the big battleships throwing their long, slim beams of light over the waters or the great transports upon one of which you hoped soon to be homeward bound. The breeze is fine on the Luneta, and it is the chief cooling one here, but about 8 o'clock the crowd disperses, as everything is closed by 9:30 on account of the revolt."—Kansas City Journal.

NOVEL JUVENILE IDEA.

Detention of Children to Perform at Unveiling of Lafayette Statues.

Robert J. Thompson of New York, secretary of the Lafayette Monument association to the Paris exposition, said recently that the Educational Tours association of Chicago has proposed a novel scheme, which is being seriously considered by the Lafayette commission.

The proposition is that the United States senators from each state and the governors from the territories shall select one delegate and one alternate from the school children of their state to go to Paris to take part in the unveiling of the Lafayette monument at the exposition on United States day, July 4, 1900.

If the plan is adopted, the young people, boys and girls, will file their applications with their senators and governors, says the Pittsburg Dispatch. When the appointments have been made, the school boys and girls selected will be thoroughly drilled under instruction in military tactics and calisthenics, the same to be performed before the world's audience at the Paris fair. The plan contemplates the chartering of a steamer to carry this crowd of exuberant American young folks to Paris.

An Ingenious Couple.

A newly married couple in Portland, Me., who are both deaf and are trying housekeeping without a servant, have devised an ingenious arrangement for their doorbell, says the Cleveland Plain Dealer, by which a caller, when he presses the button lights the lamp and thus makes his presence known.

Paul Kruger.

Deep mournful eyes that seek the ground,
The restless pulls to trace;
The gl ge form of Lincoln, crowned
By Connecticut's inner lore;
Coarse rustic garb, of uncouth cut,
Yet marks each slightly limit;
Its simplest folds the ready butt
Of Europe's puniest wits.

So much the crowd can see; the rest
Aids critics clearer eyed;
So much a statesman's brain unpossessed
How keen the blade inside!
The merchant will, the soldier brain
So strangely doomed to wage
With Bishop's selfish ruling main
The hopeless war of age.

His kindred are a rugged breed
That tame a lofty land;
The sons of Calvin's bitter mood
And stern thin blood are they.
By faith through trackless deserts steered,
Past mine or mountain wall
Far from the interplay world they feared
They found freedom last and all.

By such grim guardians tutored well
The Spartan childhood grew;
The wind tent of the lone Karoo,
The lion's path he knew,
The camp surprised at dawn, the rush
Of feet, the crackling smoke,
The rally and the hunter's hush
The sudden Kaffir broke.

Son, sons, "his sole, when Zaal in flood
Had barred the hunter's way,
And with its current stayed stood
A sounded task to-day.
While some before the brute drew back,
And some before the flesh,
Plunging that torrent's foaming track
The stony master's.

A stream more rapid and more wide
This Rubicon has stemmed and won;
Called from the plodding team to guide
The stricter wills of men;
Chosen president to see a trade,
Unlettered and unlearned,
The sled bred clownish peasant made
To less a ruler and rebel.

Yet through that rocks he still sustains
Against an empire's might,
And with untiring skill maintains
The so unequal fight;
He buys his victories all too dear
Whose foes have time for friend;
Each fatal triumph brings more near
The inevitable end.

Haply the hoarse voiced guns must close
The long debate at last,
Ere the young future can compose
Its quarrel with the past;
Matheless our England unashamed
May greet a brotan true
Of her own stubborn metal framed,
For she is one too.

SYNOPSIS.

Chapter I.—Tom Scott, a New England farmhand, decides to go to Klondike to search for gold. In Boston he rescues a Mr. Avery from footpads, and, as his new acquaintance is also going to Klondike, he asks Tom to accompany him, and the invitation is accepted. They take passage on the Seabird, a sailing vessel bound for 'Frisco.

Chapter II.—They board the vessel and a new mate, Obed Rider, whom the captain had just secured, proves to be an old enemy of Tom's, who had accused his father of deserting the ship of which he was captain and taking with him several thousand dollars of the owner's gold. Tom's father had not been home since the accusation had been made, but Tom, then a boy, did not believe it, and attempted to whip Rider. In the fight he broke the mate's nose. When the mate finds Tom aboard the vessel he vows to be avenged for the broken nose.

Chapter III.—During the passage Mr. Avery is knocked overboard accidentally and Tom again saves his life by jumping into the ocean after him. The man is injured internally and about to die. He calls Tom to him and wills him all his money, $5,000, and also his share in a rich gold region which his partners have discovered and where he was going to join them. He gives Tom a letter from one of them which gives direction for finding the territory, the possession of which and Avery's will will serve as an identification when he gets there.

Chapter IV.—Rider hears the man's conversation with Tom and determines to get the papers and the gold which they entitle the holder to. In San Francisco Tom is waylaid and robbed by Rider of the paper and what money he had with him, but the majority of his cash was on board the Seabird. Tom is found by the second mate of the Seabird, Green, who has left the sea to search for gold, and taken to his lodgings. Rider escapes and starts for Dyea.

CHAPTER V.

RIDER GETS A SURPRISE.

Obed Rider was far from easy in his mind as the train sped on, leaving San Francisco behind. He had slept on board the vessel the previous night until the noise of the second mate arousing the captain had awakened him. They did not call him, knowing the enmity that had existed between himself and Tom, but he overheard enough to tell him that Tom was alive, although badly hurt and out of his head with fever.

He knew Tom was in utter ignorance of the identity of his assailant, but had he been aware of the loss of the belt? Would the skipper remember the time he had seen the mate coming out of Tom's room and place any new significance on the incident?

A guilty conscience made him imagine all sorts of dangers to himself, and he trembled each time the train stopped at a station lest an officer should be in wait for him.

But nothing of the kind happened, and in due time he reached Seattle. Here things seemed more encouraging, for he was fortunate enough to find a man who had engaged a passage on a steamer for Skaguay and Dyea, which sailed the same day. The man had received a telegram announcing the dangerous illness of his wife, and was eager to leave Seattle by the next train.

The mate happened to be the first man he met, and the latter soon came to terms with him, and hurried on board to secure his quarters. He kept himself out of sight as much as possible, but when the lines were cast off the following day and the City of Seattle steamed out of the harbor he drew a long breath of relief, and said half aloud:

"We're off at last, and I'm safe now."

He found that his ticket entitled him to a stateroom, and that the trip from Seattle to Dyea usually occupied about five days. All his fellow passengers were wild with impatience to reach the land of gold, and now that he felt safe from pursuit he eagerly listened to the stories of wonderful wealth found by lucky miners, for each one made it more probable that the papers he had secreted about him were genuine evidence, a fact which at times he was inclined to doubt.

He had paid the returning miner $500 for his ticket and outfit, the latter including three horses and a good supply of provisions, while the former included their transportation to Dyea free of cost. He must, however, land them himself, the company declining all responsibility for this part of the work.

A short stop was made at Juneau, and two days later he found himself on the beach at Dyea with his belongings and feeling utterly at a loss how to proceed. How to handle this formidable outfit was a puzzle. On board a vessel he was at home, but a horse was an animal of which he knew very little and here were three of them besides the heap of miscellaneous articles piled on the rocky shingle.

It was plain that they must be moved before the tide came in, and with a sailor's knowledge of knots he soon lashed the burdens on the backs of the raw-boned animals and succeeded in getting them to the town safely.

A small tent was among his newly acquired possessions and he proceeded to pitch it as best he could, piling his goods outside. He set up his little sheet-iron stove and was going for water when he passed close to one of his animals, who launched out viciously at him with his hoof, sending him to the ground several yards away with a broken rib and his left arm badly bruised.

"What's the trouble?" said a rough voice from the next camp as a burly, bearded man strolled leisurely to the spot. "Hurt ye much, pard?"

A string of oaths burst from Rider as he scrambled to his feet.

"Something's cracked inside," he growled, "and my arm's hurt. D—n the horse, anyway!"

"Better let my mate see if anything's wrong. He's a master hand with anything o' that kind. Here, Scott!" he added, raising his voice.

Obed Rider started at the name, but he turned fairly white with amazement as a tall, broad-shouldered man in the prime of life issued from the tent and came toward him, saying:

"What is it, Jack?"

Before the other could reply both Rider and the newcomer uttered exclamations of astonishment.

"Obed Rider!"

"Capt. Scott!"

The mate looked about him in a helpless way as if seeking some avenue of escape, but the other held out his hand cordially, saying:

"Of all men, to see you here!" Then he added:

"But you are hurt. Can I do anything for you? Let me have a little look. We can talk afterward."

The injury was soon located, and after predicting that a few days would set the matter right, Capt. Scott said:

"What on earth brought you here? Have you been home lately? Did you see my boy?"

The mate had done considerable thinking during the past few minutes. After the first surprise was over he had rapidly determined upon his course, and he now shook his head, replying:

"I'm afraid I can't give you much good news from home, cap'n."

His eyes fell as he spoke, but the other was too eager to notice.

"What do you mean, Rider?"

The voice was hoarse now with suppressed eagerness. "My boy! Tell me! Is he—why don't you speak? My brother, too! D— it, man speak out! Has anything happened to them? They might both be dead by the way you act!"

"They are," murmured Rider, still with his eyes cast down.

Without a word the captain turned on his heel and disappeared. It was half an hour before he returned, and there was such a change in his rugged features that even the mate felt compassion for him. But he had no alternative. Anything to prevent Tom's father from learning the truth. He had told his story, and now he must be prepared with the details. Fortunately the absence of his latest victim had given him time to rapidly sketch out a line of procedure which he hoped would be safe.

"Your brother died three years ago," he said, "and your son was a passenger with me to 'Frisco this winter. He was coming to the mines, he said. He was killed a couple of weeks ago one night when he was coming down to the vessel. Capt. Coffin took charge of the body. It was the day before I left town. I had my ticket all bought and couldn't wait for the funeral."

"Did you see the body yourself?"

"No," said the mate, hesitatingly, "but I heard the second mate say he was dead."

"Do they know who did it?"

"No."

"How did it all happen?"

The stalwart miner's voice trembled as he spoke, but he controlled himself by a superhuman effort and Obed Rider replied:

"He was picked up dead on the water front one night. He was on his way down to the vessel and they supposed some one hit him from behind. They went through the poor chap's clothes and left him on the sidewalk, the scoundrels! The second mate found him there the same night 'long toward morning. I had my ticket on an excursion train that day and I couldn't wait. I had lots to do getting ready."

"Was there no clew to the murderer?"

"No, they said there warn't no chance of ever finding out who done it. No one was 'round to see the feller do it and he got clean off."

"Then you don't know where he was to be buried?"

"No, but Cap'n Coffin would see that he was taken care of all ship shape and snug."

"Who is this Capt. Coffin?"

"Skipper of the Seabird."

"Was that the craft you came out in?"

The mate replied in the affirmative, and the unhappy father went on:

"God bless him for his big heart if he does that! Money is no object to me now. I've frozen and sweltered all these years to get gold, and now I'm alone in the world. You haven't told me how my brother died. When was that?"

The mate gave him all the details, this time truthfully, for he had heard them all at Merrivale. When he had finished, Capt. Scott said:

"Did you never hear Tom speak of me? Why did he never write? When I left the ship in your charge I gave you a letter to mail to him, telling him that I was going up in Alaska after gold, and giving him an address in Seattle where he could write, and I would get the letter some time. He never wrote as far as I know, or if he did it was never forwarded to me. For over three years I have been buried where no letters could reach me, and now I was on my way to Seattle and then for home. It's an awful blow, Rider!"

The mate was silent, and the stricken man continued:

"What did the owners say when you turned over the vessel and accounts?"

The other's face was ashy pale, but he made a great effort, and replied:

"O, it was all right."

"Accounts were all straight?"

Rider's agitation was so great that the other must have noticed it but for his own great grief, but he managed to say:

"All straight, cap'n."

Tom's father was silent a moment, and Obed Rider's thoughts were anything but pleasant. His brain was in a whirl, and he feared that any moment his tongue might betray him to the man he had wronged so deeply. He was at his wit's end for the best course to pursue, when suddenly his companion settled the matter at once by exclaiming:

"I have only one thing left to live for now! I have more money than I know what to do with, and I'll see that my poor boy is buried properly in 'Frisco. Then I'll do the square thing by everybody that was good to him there and then—"

He broke off suddenly and set his teeth hard.

"Then I'll put $20,000 reward up for the wretch who killed him!"

Rider shuddered involuntarily as the captain spoke, but he made no reply. The belt about his waist seemed to fairly burn his flesh as the father went on, and he dared not meet the speaker's gaze:

"What will he do if he finds his whelp alive and hears what I told about his skipping out?" he thought. "He will murder me! I must be out of this before he gets back here, and he will never think of looking for me on the Dalton trail! Besides, if he's rich the chances are that they'll go east at once and I can work my little scheme without anyone to hinder me. Perhaps it's the best thing after all that I met him. If the youngster is dead the old man will never hear what I told about him unless he goes to Merrivale, and he ain't likely to go there now he has no folks there. He won't go near no shipping firms to hear it, not if he's rich."

He was beginning to feel more easy in his mind when he was interrupted by Capt. Scott, who said:

"What brought you out here, Rider?"

"O, I got the gold fever like the rest."

"Going to the Klondike region?"

"Yes, I suppose so."

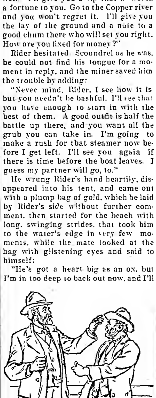
"Take my advice and don't. It's on Canadian ground, and you can't do so well. I'll give you a tip that is worth a fortune to you. Go to the Copper river and you won't regret it. I'll give you the lay of the ground and a note to a good chum there who will set you right. How are you fixed for money?"

Rider hesitated. Scoundrel as he was, he could not find his tongue for a moment in reply, and the miner saved him the trouble by adding:

"Never mind, Rider, I see how it is but you needn't be bashful. I'll see that you have enough to start in with the best of them. A good outfit is half the battle up there, and you want all the grub you can take in. I'm going to make a rush for that steamer now before I get left. I'll see you again if there is time before the boat leaves. I guess my partner will go, to."

He wrung Rider's hand heartily, disappeared into his tent, and came out with a plump bag of gold, which he laid by Rider's side without further comment, then started for the beach with long, swinging strides, that took him to the water's edge in very few moments, while the mate looked at the bag with glistening eyes and said to himself:

"He's got a heart big as an ox, but I'm in too deep to back out now, and I'll need all I can get to keep out of his clutches if he ever finds out the truth!"



"No, he started up north a week or ten days ago."

The steamer sailed the following morning, but before he left the returning miner saw that Rider wanted for nothing. He gave him the benefit of his experience in the wilderness, made a list of the necessary articles of outfit and paid a penniless unfortunate to look after the mate and his horses until the former was able to do it himself.

The return voyage went well for two days, then the steamer broke down and it was nearly a week before she was able to proceed. The following night she ran on a small island, causing another week's delay. It was over three weeks before Capt. Scott reached San Francisco and was driven to the dock where the Seabird still lay.

Old Capt. Coffin was on deck and Tom's father accosted him at once:

"Is this Capt. Seth Coffin?"

"That's my name."

"Well my name is Scott. My son came out with you and—"

"What? Are you his father?" interrupted the old skipper. "Yes, I can see the look! Give us your flipper! Won't he be disappointed? It's too bad!"

His visitor's weather-beaten face turned ghastly pale and he gasped:

"Disappointed! What do you mean? Is he not—"

"Aboard? No, confound it, he started up north a week or ten days ago."

SCHURMAN TALKS BRIEFLY

Commissioner's Idea of the Issue in the Philippines.

ITHACA, N. Y., Aug. 22.—Commissioner Jacob G. Schurman has reached Ithaca. Since leaving Manila he has, he says, steadily refused to discuss Philippine affairs although he has been besieged by reporters everywhere. However, he now makes the following statement for the Associated Press:

"The United States, having assumed sovereignty over the Philippine islands by virtue of a treaty of peace with Spain, the chief executive of the republic is engaged in establishing that sovereignty. The issue today is not a commercial one, although the natural resources of the Philippine islands are of great value and want only American capital for their development. Nor is the question one of political expedience or party principles, although in its collateral branch there may be aspects upon which political parties may properly divide, but the question today is neither one of commercial advantage nor of partisan politics. It is a purely moral question. The vital issue is the honor of the nation, the protection of loyal Filipinos and the fulfillment of our obligations to the nations of the world involved in our acceptance of sovereignty."

WILL SAIL SHORTLY.

Three New Volunteer Regiments Ordered to San Francisco.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 21. — Secretary Root has issued orders for the Twenty-seventh, the Thirty-first and Thirty-fourth regiments of volunteer infantry to proceed to San Francisco at once. These regiments will sail for Manila when transports are provided.

The war department has directed that the Glenogle and Tacoma of the Oregon steamship line be chartered for carrying troops to Manila. The Glenogle will carry 800 and the Tacoma 650 men.

Orders were also issued from the war department placing all majors, captains and lieutenants appointed for the regiments on recruiting duty. They will assist the nearest recruiting officers for a period of about one week and will then conduct the recruits to rendezvons.

Organizing Bryan Clubs.

CHICAGO, Aug. 23.—The first steps to organize the Democrats of Illinois outside of Chicago for William J. Bryan in 1900 have been taken and a number of prominent Democrats have organized the "Original William Jennings Bryan Club of Illinois." Congressman B. F. Caldwell is credited with being the promoter of the plan of organization.

Jiminez Finally Gets Away.

HAVANA, Aug. 21.—General Juan Isidro Jiminez, the aspirant to the presidency of Santo Domingo, left Cienfuegos during the morning on board the Polaria, bound for Manzanillo and Santiago de Cuba. After his release he remained at the Union hotel until he left the city.

PARIS EXPOSITION FEATURES

Immense Power Required to Move the Machinery.

Captain A. H. Mattox of the bureau of publicity, United States commission to the Paris exposition, says there will be a sporting exposition annex of the exposition at Vincennes. On Lake Daumesnil there will be a squadron of various kinds of boats, among which will appear small electric launches that will delight the visitor.

The lighting of the exposition will call for 20,000 horsepower. At the Paris exposition in 1855 the motive force was of 350 horsepower, in 1867, 626 horsepower; in 1878, 2,500 horsepower; in 1889, 5,500 horsepower. In 1900 45,000 horsepower may be needed, about one-half of which, however, may possibly answer every requirement.

One of the great attractions of the exposition will be the aquarium situated on one of the banks of the Seine between Pont des Invalides and Pont de l'Alma, says the New York Mail and Express. A dark incline will lead vistors to it, and they will suddenly feel as if transported to the very bottom of the sea, in the midst of the marine landscapes and their inhabitants. Immense glass tanks will form the aquarium proper. The buttresses, pillars and iron girders, which will constitute frames for the tanks and hold the glass together, will be entirely concealed under rocks and sea plants of every description. Illusion will be obtained by means of electricity and powerful glass reflectors.

Liquid Air Crematory.

It is said that a company has been formed in New York city which will erect a crematory near Nyack, where the rapid consumption of dead bodies will be effected by means of liquid air. —Medical Record.

LIGHTNING RIPENS GRAPES.

Growers In This Way Account For Early Maturing of Wordens.

The presence of full grown, ripe Worden grapes upon the market at St. Joseph, Mich., for the past few days has puzzled the oldest grape growers of that vicinity, who report that this particular variety of grape was never heretofore ripe enough to market before Sept. 10, and grapes at St. Joseph are only partly developed and are still very green.

They account for the unusually early ripening as follows, says the New York Times: A few weeks ago several large vineyards were struck by lightning, which leaped along entire rows over the wires which support the vines. Contrary to the growers' expectations, who thought all the vines would be ruined, the green fruit began to ripen immediately, and the vines were practically uninjured.

BIG ICEMAKING PLANT.

How American Army's Provisions Will Be Housed In Manila.

LARGE REFRIGERATOR TO BE BUILT

Ice Will Be Supplied at the Rate of Two Pounds a Day to Each Soldier. Interesting Features of the Building—Quantity of Meat That Can Be Stored.

The war department is most anxious to hurry up the building of the proposed refrigerating and icemaking plant at Manila, and everything possible will be done to hasten its construction, says the Washington Post. Too much emphasis cannot be laid upon the importance of this enterprise in its reference to the health and welfare of the American troops, and great regret is felt that it is not already completed and in operation. A contract was awarded to a New York firm the other day for the icemaking machinery, which will be shipped to the Philippines as soon as it can be got ready. The structure that is to house it has not been begun as yet, but it will stand on the south side of the Pasig river, between the Espana bridge and the suspension bridge.

The plant will be on an immense scale, as may be judged from the fact that space will be provided for hanging 1,200 tons of beef and 200 tons of mutton. If desired, one-half of this vast quantity may be kept chilled, while the other half will be held frozen at 12 degrees F. The refrigeration will be accomplished in the ordinary manner, by the expansion of ammonia gas, manufactured on the premises. Ice will be turned out at a wonderful rate—nearly 100,000 pounds every 24 hours, or more than two pounds per diem for every officer and man in the army. Imagine what a comfort it will be in that tropical climate! But the icemaking apparatus will occupy only a small part of the building, relatively speaking.

The building itself will be severely plain, being designed rather for utility than for architectural effect. Through it, from end to end, will run a driveway, with platforms on either side for loading wagons. On the left of this driveway, as one enters, will be a room 128 feet long by 32 feet wide to hold 50 tons of butter and 100 tons of bacon. The rest of the lower floor on that side will be occupied by four rooms equally large for beef. On the right hand side of the driveway will be offices, elevators, a great room for the storage of ice, the machine room and an icemaking room 100 feet square, the floor of which last will be composed of a series of long and narrow tanks, sheathed inside with iron plates and filled with filtered water. Behind the plates will run coils of pipes, through which expanding ammonia gas will flow, freezing the water in the tanks into solid blocks.

On the second floor of the building will be five huge rooms, four of them for beef and one for mutton, while the space over the driveway will be devoted to the storage of canned goods, potatoes and onions. In short, the building will be commodious enough to house provisions for the entire American army in the Philippines. The quantity of beef mentioned will furnish no fewer than 2,016,000 full rations, allowing 1¼ pounds a day to each soldier, and will feed all the Yankee troops 50 days without renewing the supply. The mutton will yield 336,000 rations, or more than eight days' allowance. As for potatoes and onions, enough will be kept on hand to last the forces a week. Ordinarily each fighting man gets a pound of vegetables per diem, and of these onions and potatoes make up 70 per cent.

All of the fresh beef and fresh mutton for the troops in the Philippines comes from Australia, whence it is brought to Manila in a frozen condition by steamers. There is now fitting out at New York a cold storage vessel, provided with everything that is latest in the way of refrigerating apparatus, which will shortly proceed to the eastern seas and take up this business of meat transportation for the government plying between the island continent and Luzon. Some of the potatoes and onions for the soldiers come from Australia also, though most of them are shipped from San Francisco. Pork, ham and bacon are furnished to the army by Chicago packers. The peas and beans are forwarded mainly from St. Louis and Chicago. In view of the importance of this military trade, lines of steamers are being established at New York to follow the route via the Suez canal.

Chicago's Great Child Swimmer.

May Huhn of Chicago, 6 years old, has the honor of being the greatest swimmer in the world for her age. The other day, according to the New York Times, at the North Side Natatorium, the little girl swam a mile in 1 hour and 7 minutes, making a new record, for no child ever accomplished the feat before in such time. May is the daughter of Alexander Huhn, janitor of the Turner hall, at 684 Wells street, and it was in the pool in the rear of this building that she made the record. She lives with her parents in the building, and two years ago Fritz Mayer, who has charge of the natatorium, taught her to swim.

Water Tandem Bicycle In Berlin.

The water tandem is the latest application of the bicycle in Berlin. The cyclists are seated on a middle platform, which is supported by a couple of cigar shaped floats, says the New York Sun. The contrivance holds six persons, including the two wheelmen. It goes either backward or forward, and the steering is perfect.

Pennsylvanians Start Home.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 23.—The men of the Pennsylvania regiment met at the Ferry depot, their arrangements for departure being unofficial. At 9 o'clock the first section of the train started for the East.

MARVELOUS CORN CROP.

Kansas Expects to Have One of 300,000,000 Bushels.

EXPERT OPINION ON THE PRICES.

Make Is King of the Prairies Today. Prosperity Well Distributed—Elton P. Allerton's Poem, "Walls of Corn," Finds an Answer in This Year's Record Breaking Crop.

Only a revolution of nature stands between Kansas and the realization of that corn crop of 300,000,000 bushels. The ideal season draws near its close, and the result will be without equal, says the Atchison (Kan.) correspondent of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. Professor Cottrell of the State Agricultural college is just back from a three weeks' journey which took him to the Colorado line.

"The corn is good everywhere," he says. "The farmers of the western counties told me they had raised enough corn this year to feed the live stock now on hand for five years. They are already arranging to bring droves of cattle from Colorado to eat their surplus."

When the news first went out that Kansas had 300,000,000 bushels of corn in sight a skeptical crop editor in Chicago commented: "That is always the way with Kansas. Before the crop is harvested she is going to feed the world. After the harvest she passes round the hat." Now, it is true that when the wheat harvest is a record breaker, or when cattle and hogs mean bank accounts, it doesn't follow that all of Kansas has fared well. But everywhere corn is planted this year it is a 40 bushel crop. The farmers are not as pessimistic on prices as might be expected from this enormous crop. The time was when a big yield meant 10 cent corn. Frank M. Baker, the elevator man in Atchison, said the other day that corn would not go to 10 cents this year and that he never expected to see it so low in Kansas again. Then he explained why.

Corn is worth now in St. Louis and Chicago 30 and 31 cents, with fluctuations of eighths of a cent. The buyer in Kansas deducts from that price the freight rate and his margin and pays the farmer on the basis of Chicago and St. Louis prices. Here come in the changed conditions which justify Mr. Baker in his assertion that the Kansas farmer is getting the best price of any farmer, according to location.

"Twenty years ago," he said, "the railroad rate on corn from Concordia to St. Louis was 22 cents per 100 pounds. Now it is 17 cents. Twenty years ago the grain dealer thought he must have a margin of 3 cents. The changes represent so much gained to the farmer. With corn around 30 cents in the markets which make the price for all of us, the Kansas farmer now gets 20 cents, two-thirds of the Chicago and St. Louis price. Under the freight rate and margin of 20 years ago 30 cents at St. Louis meant 10 cents to the Kansas farmer. I have no idea that I shall be able to buy corn again for 10 cents a bushel. I do not look to see prices go much lower than they are now for the new crop, large as it is. The price to farmers may drop to 18 cents or 17 cents, but I do not think it will go lower. There are other new conditions in Kansas which will tend to check the rush to market when prices show signs of dropping any lower. These Kansas farmers are in a position to refuse to sell bad corn to the extent they never were before. Besides this, there is the feeding. At least one-third of the crop will be fed out on the farms, and that amount will be increased if the price of shelled corn weakens. I believe that feeders estimate they can make corn worth 35 cents a bushel on the farm by turning it into pork when the latter brings $3.50 per 100 pounds. Cattle feeding assumes the value of the grain in like proportion. With one-third or more of the crop in demand for feeding and one-half of the remainder likely to be held in the cribs of the farmers, you can see the strong probabilities that this corn will not be rushed in to break the market."

Some years ago there lived in Kansas a Mrs. Ellen P. Allerton. Her husband was a farmer. He had been one all of his life, having to Kansas from Wisconsin. The picture of Ellen P. Allerton shows the deep lines which grow with the cares of a farmer's home. It is pathetic. Children did not come to soften the life. This woman found her respite from the duties of the house in her pen. She saw the early evolution of the corn belt, and she wrote of

Walls of corn,
Whose banners toss on the breeze of morn.

Mrs. Allerton did not live to see much "walls of corn" as this year has produced. Her verse has gained in force with the crop of 300,000,000 bushels. It embodied a spirit of prophecy in the light of what has come true. The marvelous change she noted stands greatly magnified today. Her question is more timely than ever before:

And where is they stand, you walls of corn,
Whose banners toss on the breeze of morn?

Upon the skies, round by the sun,
In the olden days of the district school.

Point to the rich and bounteous land
That yields such fruits to the toiler's hand.

"Produce of corn," they called it then,
Haunted by beasts all fierce by men.

Little they knew what wealth untold
Lay hid where the fecund prairies rolled.

Who would have dared, with brush or pen,
As this land is now to paint it then?

And how would the wise ones have laughed in scorn
Had prophets foretold these walls of corn,
Whose banners toss on the breeze of morn!

In the railway guides there is no place for "the corn road," but it is none the less a factor in today's prosperity. It begins at Atchison and ends in the short grass counties of western Kansas. The plans of those who originated it contemplated a transcontinental route from the Missouri to the Pacific. Construction westward from Atchison was started about the same time that it was from Omaha and from Kansas City. But the days came when more powerful influences in favor of the other routes dominated, and the building on the Atchison line stopped in the prairies. "Central Branch, Union Pacific," was the name given to this road without a terminus.

This Central branch retained its misnomer with its loose end in the prairies. It languished awhile until patient pioneers began to discover the corn producing qualities of the counties through which its course lies. Even the Union Pacific company was tardy in recognizing the possibilities. Jay Gould, traveling over the western country and picking up bits of road, saw the growing acreage in corn in the border tier of counties from Atchison west. He leased the Central branch. The cornfields grew. From the loose end in the prairies feeders were constructed as the country became settled. The Central branch became a parent stem, with sprangled terminuses still farther out in the prairies. Then time came when the Union Pacific could give a title and was willing to sell. Two great systems struggled for possession. The Gould system won. Officially, this is still the "Central branch." By the people who know the territory it serves and the wonderful development "the corn road" is the familiar designation. Surely no route in the country more naturally merits the title.

Mr. Baker says it will take 50,000 cars to move the crop. That means 2,500 trains. There are 90 stations on "the corn road" and its sprangled feeders. Rigeuing in the fields trihnday to these 90 stations is a yield of corn which will require over 600 cars to a station to move it. Some of these stations will need from 1,000 to 1,500 cars. Others will call for less than 500. The average will be over 600. But one-third of the corn raised in the territory considered will be fed to live stock. The remaining two-thirds will go in original form. The farmers will begin picking in October and shelling in November. They will let it all winter and into next March. The marketing of the crop will begin in November and it will continue until next summer, taxing the ability of the officials to furnish cars. When hot weather comes again both of this year's crop, Mr. Baker estimates, will still remain a reserve in the bands of the farmers and of the local dealers.

The doubts of those who do not know the particulars must go down before the recent government estimate, which, based upon hundreds of local reports carefully compiled at Topeka, placed the corn crop of the state at 100 per cent. It seems incredible. Taking the crop of the last seven years and dulug what is the best that Kansas, with acreage and climate favoring, can be expected to do, these crop statisticians established what they considered a 100 per cent crop. But the present season breaks their record, and they are confronted with a crop which is 6 per cent better than the best.

In merely fair years the average yield is from 25 to 45 bushels to the acre. A yield of 26 bushels for the whole state is considered all that farmers have a right to expect from their fields. That means a 100 per cent crop. This year the certainty is an average of 40 bushels, with something over if the conditions continue as favorable as they have been. In making up the latest information from correspondents in every county the state officials see that they indicate that the amazing average of 41 bushels to the acre. That, with the enormous acreage, would give a crop of 362,000,000 bushels. So it appears that 300,000,000 is the minimum estimate and that the actual returns may go many millions more.

While the old corn is being rushed out to make room for the new, while farmers are buying crib lumber by the thousands of carloads to build new cribs, while improved conditions will enable them to hold over till next year perhaps half of the crop, nevertheless the marketing is going to be a great problem. There are strange sights in the corn belt of Kansas in a good year. These scenes will be magnified with a crop which is beyond all precedent. Millions of bushels will never see shelter until the ears are found to count it away. The elevator men are getting ready to buy corn and keep it on the ground until they can ship it. They have had to do this to some extent in previous seasons, but they have never before had such conditions as confront them now. The elevator man has to take all that comes at his price. If his crib gets overcrowded and he cannot get cars fast enough, he must simply let the farmer shovel the corn onto the ground. Verily, the task of the Kansas farmer has turned at last.

Good Ark Lumber Becoming Scarce.

It is reported that the chlttim tree, from which chittim bark is peeled, is becoming very scarce in Russia and other counties, says the Portland Oregonian. As is well known, wherever the tree is skinned of its bark it soon dies and of course is becoming scarcer, until the chittim tree at no great distant future, at the present rate of consumption, will naturally be destroyed. The price of chittim bark under these conditions will, in a few years, greatly advance.

NEW ROTARY ENGINE.

Invention to Revolutionize Steam Craft Tested In Chicago.

CAN BE OPERATED WITH EASE.

Steam Launch Equipped With Machine Patented by Elisha Seymour Has to Fear Mile Cents an Hour. Its Maker Predicts Higher Speed and Less Fuel Consumption.

A new type of rotary engine, which, its inventor, Elisha Seymour, claims will revolutionize the use of steam as power, was tested the other day at Chicago in the trial trip of a steam launch from the foot of La Salle street to the four mile crib and back. If the hopes of the inventor and his financial backers are realized, the cost of fuel is to be reduced one-third, the amount of space required to install a machine almost one-half and the weight of the engine itself made correspondingly less than any of the types now in common use, says the Chicago Tribune. Results similar to those obtained by the turbine engine, which has driven a yacht over 40 miles an hour, are claimed for the new machine, while the cost of construction, which, in the turbine, is almost prohibitory, will be less to a horsepower, it is said, than in the style of engines now in use.

Elisha Seymour, who is 75 years old, has worked unfalteringly on the problem for nine years. He has spent $17,000 on experiments, and when funds gave out and members of his family urged him to abandon his scheme he pawed his watch and overcoat and stuck to his work.

The engine, at last completed, has been installed in a launch. The party of guests gives an opportunity to watch the test run included B. D. Angush, Peter Phillips and several newspaper men. It is Mr. Seymour's intention to construct a big speed yacht with fine lines and power enough for any speed. The engine used on the test run was found to have defects which it is proposed to remedy in the next. It is hoped to have the second boat in operation by October 1, when, if this is done, Secretary of the Navy Long and prominent engineers and naval officers will be invited to witness a run. The inventor says he hopes to prove that his machine is just what is needed for torpedo boats, battleships and cruisers. The next plan is to build a locomotive, and a prediction of a 16 hour schedule between New York and Chicago is made, and that with a third of the cost for fuel now necessary.

The trial run lasted 1½ hours, and a speed of eight miles an hour was the highest attained. But the hull of the launch was not intended for a torpedo boat, and those interested regarded the work of the engine as satisfactory. Designed to develop 25 horse power, it weighs but 1,500 pounds. Running with 95 pounds of steam 175 revolutions a minute were made, and there was a conspicuous absence of vibration. The propeller wheel is 26 inches in diameter. The engine could accelerate by two feet high and is of the same width and twice that length.

The application of steam is something on the plan of the overshot water wheel confined in a chamber. Two pistons on arms revolve in the chamber. There is no dead center, and the flow of steam is continuous. The steam passes around nearly two-thirds of a circle between the inlet and the exhaust, then is turned into a second wheel. In high power engines it can be used, it is said, three or four times, insuring the utilization of all the expansion of the steam.

The claims for economy of operation are based on the fact there is no dead center, as in the reciprocating engine, also a larger expansion of steam and less friction, owing to the smaller number of working parts. In saving of coal it is asserted that a saving of an engine of the old type weighing 200 tons can be replaced by the rotary engine weighing 60 tons. Simplicity in operation also is claimed for the machine.

Mr. Seymour began work on the engine in the mountains near Georgetown, Colo. He has spent $17,000 on nou-working inventions. When he became penniless and was deserted by his last watch and overcoat for ready cash. B. D. Angulsh, a commission man, came to his aid with capital. Since then two machines have been built. The invention has been patented in the United States, Canada, nineteen countries in Europe and Australia.

The Seymour-Angulsh Engine company has been incorporated in Illinois with a capital stock of $10,000,000.

Marine men say that the engine, if it accomplishes what is claimed for it will revolutionize the motive power of every first class steamship afloat, be it freighter, passenger boat or war vessel.

Disease Germs on Copper Cents.

Dr. Adolph Gebrmann, chemist of the health department in Chicago, has made experiments which show that there is danger in the handling of a copper cent, says the New York Times. At the Conferences' Convention at the Buffalo recently resolutions were adopted urging the government to substitute aluminum in making postage stamps the copper coins are carriers of disease. Dr. Gebrmann, in order to discover the disease carrying power of the copper penny, collected a number of the coins from stores and schools, experimented with them and found that disease germs could be seen on every one of them.

The Nichols-Shepard Straw-Burning Engine

More practical, more efficient and more durable than any other engine ever designed for burning straw. It is the easiest to fire and the easiest to manage. The fire box, boiler and combustion chamber are so constructed that all the heat is saved and utilized. It is the only straw-burner having a water-protected crown sheet.

Every one who is interested in threshing should send for free catalogue, which contains full descriptions of the Nichols-Shepard Straw Burner, the wonderful Nichols-Shepard Separator and other threshing machinery.

A CHURCH DEDICATION.

Services Held Last Sunday In the New St. Paul's German Lutheran Church.

TOTAL COST ALMOST $2,000.

Frame Building—Electric Lights—Seating Capacity, 200—Rev. J. Fritz Pastor.

The New St. Paul's German Lutheran church, situated on North Broadway between Fifth and Sixth streets, was dedicated last Sunday morning with appropriate services in the presence of a large concourse of people. Revs. G. Paul of St. Paul and H. Schliesser of Ada were present to assist Rev. J. Fritz, the resident pastor, in the exercises.

At half-past ten o'clock in the morning the congregation assembled in front of the church and after they had sung a hymn, the key to the new edifice was given by one of the trustees to Rev. J. Fritz and he therewith opened the church door and the congregation entered. Music, "Oh how lovely is Zion," was rendered by a quartet composed of Mrs. F. G. Rauch, Mrs. H. Schliesser, and Revs. H. Schliesser and J. Fritz, after which came the dedicatory ceremonies. Rev. G. Paul then preached an eloquent sermon, the service closing with a quartet, "Exalt, Exalt the Lord." In the afternoon a missionary service was held, at which Rev. H. Schliesser preached the sermon.

At the evening service the exercises were conducted mostly in the English language, Rev. H. Bussett preaching in English. The pastor, Mr. Fritz, followed him with a short address in German. Music was furnished by the choir from the Norwegian Methodist church.

This church which was thus dedicated with solemn and impressive ceremonies, is a monument to the industry and perseverance of Rev. J. Fritz and his band of church workers. Three years ago on August 10, 1897, Rev. H. Drewe organized the church and remained in the city till February, 1897, when the present pastor came among us and he has been here ever since. The congregation has been worshiping in the building, on South Ash street, that was formerly used as a public reading room. A little over a year ago the initial steps were taken toward the erection of a new church edifice with the result that, on May 9 last work was begun on the building that was last Sunday dedicated to the worship of God.

It is a frame building sixty feet long by twenty-eight wide and has a seating capacity of 200. The top of the church steeple is sixty-eight feet from the the ground. It is plastered on the inside and will subsequently be calcimined if the plaster does not break. In the eastern end of the church are the choir loft, the altar, the sacristy and the pulpit. There will be one aisle down the center of the church and on either side handsome oak seats, which unfortunately did not arrive until after the Sunday services, so that at that time chairs had to be used. The arched ceiling is twenty-two feet high and therefrom hang two chandeliers, which reflect incandescent electric lights. It is possible that a furnace may be put in, but this matter is not yet definitely settled.

The total cost of the building has been $1,977, of which $1,350 has been paid and arrangements have been made to pay the remaining $600 in annual installments of $100.

With this handsome edifice and such workers among the members the outlook for this church society is most promising.

LARGEST IN THE WORLD.

Illinois Central Will Have a Giant Locomotive in a Few Days.

The Brooks Locomotive works will turn out within a few days, says a press dispatch, a locomotive for the Illinois Central larger than any other locomotive in the world. It will be eight tons heavier than the locomotives built by the Brooks works a year ago for the Great Northern railroad, and which up to this date have been the largest in the world. This giant locomotive is a 12-wheel freight with cylinders 23x30. It has eight drivers, 57 inches in diameter. The boiler is an improved Belpaire wagon top. The waist is 82 inches in diameter, and throat 91½. It has 424 2-inch flues, 14 feet and 8½ inches long. The total weight of the engine is 218,000 pounds; total weight of engine and tender 320,000 pounds. It will have a draw bar pull of 52,000 pounds, or 26 per cent more than either of the monster locomotives built for the Great Northern.

THE ARMY VS. FARMERS.

Lieut. Becker Says Farmers Have the Better of it now but Won't Later

Lieutenant S. M. Becker, of the Thirty-fourth Volunteer Infantry, speaking of his recent trip through the northern part of Minnesota in search of recruits said:

"Why, when I was up in Crookston I got hold of a lot of good men who had just about decided that they wanted to be soldiers, but they didn't enlist. While they were on the way to my office some farmer would corner them and tell them of the beauties of the harvest fields and chuke so much money under their noses that before I knew it they would be sitting in the front seat of a farm wagon, headed for the fields. Sometimes they would come up and tell me that they would enlist when the busy season was over, and sometimes they would go away without a word.

"In some of those townships there would be a lot of farmers to meet every train, and if a man got off that looked like he could do any work he was hired on the spot. There was no haggling about the price. He could get just as much money as he had the nerve to demand. Some of the fellows had never seen a harvest field, but that didn't matter—they were hired just the same. There's going to be a great opportunity, though, for the recruiting officers that go up there in the latter part of September.

G. N. DOUBLE TRACK.

From Duluth to Cass Lake and Probably to Crookston is Being Laid.

Men are scattered as thickly as they can be worked along the Great Northern's Fosston line, west from Duluth, and it, too, is to be double tracked shortly as far as Cass Lake and possibly to Crookston. This road is now doing an immense business, and railway men wonder how the vast volume of wheat traffic is to be handled in addition to the iron ore and general merchandise now going over the line. It is handling 8,000 to 9,000 tons of ore alone every day and will double this when the Virginia branch is completed.

When the Fosston line was opened, a year ago, an important stretch of eight miles had not been completed, and trains used the old Duluth & Winnipeg track as far as Cloquet. All the year work has been going on along this eight miles, and it is now, after 18 months of steady labor, ready and in use. It cuts the clay bluffs of the St. Louis river and follows near the stream and has been a costly and difficult piece of engineering. Its completion will aid materially in handling the fall's crops.

It is not generally known that the Eastern Minnesota, under whose direction all these works are being done, is one of the most notable roads in America in the density of its traffic, being exceeded by perhaps only a dozen in the country.

CASS LAKE LUMBER DEALERS.

Raise Price of Lumber—Citizens very indignant Over the Matter.

Considerable excitement and ill feeling have been aroused at Cass Lake by the action of local lumber dealers toward those recently burned out. Those deciding to rebuild after the fire looked about to buy lumber as cheaply as possible. At Farris is a lumber yard run by M. N. Nygaard for the McGulre saw mill on Wolf lake. Some of the Cass Lakers went there and bought lumber for their new buildings, and bought it for 8 less than it could be bought right at home, and a better grade of lumber, too. The local lumber dealers went to Farris and saw Mr. Nygaard, and sought to induce him to raise the price of lumber at Farris to correspond to the price at Cass Lake. Mr. Nygaard refused to do it. Then the Cass Lake lumbermen wanted to buy the entire stock and output, and to this proposition he said no.

The incident is very freely talked about town as a heartless and most reprehensible piece of business. There has been talk of burning the Cass Lake lumbermen in effigy but no action has as yet been taken.

W. C. T. U. CONVENTION

Delegates From all Over the State Present—Able address by Mrs. Scovell.

MRS. FRY SPEAKS TONIGHT.

Enthusiastic Welcome Meeting Tuesday Evening—Last Night Program Conducted by the Y's.

The twenty-third annual convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Minnesota opened at the M. E. church in this city last Tuesday morning. Of the state officers there were present Mrs. D. Lyndie Scovell of Minneapolis, president. Mrs. A. C. McCurdy, of Minneapolis, corresponding secretary, Mrs. Ella P. Hendrix, of Minneapolis, recording secretary, Mrs. C. S. Soule, of St. Paul, treasurer and Miss Louise E. Hollister, of Minneapolis, secretary of the Young Woman's branch. Of the sixteen districts in the state all but three were represented at the first meeting, making a total attendance of delegates of almost one hundred which was largely increased as the convention continued.

Tuesday morning and afternoon were largely given up to strictly business matters, that is the appointment of committees, and the reports of the secretaries and superintendents. The members of the committee on resolutions are, 3rd District, Mrs. Juliet B. St. John, Fairmont. 4th District, Miss Plymat, Mankato. 5th, Mrs. J. P. Watson, Marshall. 6th, Miss H. Hitchcock, Redwood Falls, 7th, Mrs. Isabella Sterling, Red Wing. 8th, Mrs. Anna J. Harper, Hendricks. 9th, Mrs. Maria L. Clark, Minneapolis. 10th, Mrs. M. J. Russell, St. Paul, 12th, Sadie Irish, Wheaton. 13th, Miss Hanson, Detroit. 14th, Mrs. Smith, Argyle. 15th, Mrs. Clark, Breckenridge. 16th Mrs. Emily Merritt, West Duluth. and Mrs. Anna A. Lyon, of the board of superintendents. This committee is to investigate the matter of the salaries of the state officers, the amount of money appropriated to the superintendents of the different departments, etc. Mrs. Bayrell, of Argyle, was appointed chairman of the credentials' committee. Mrs. Chesterman of the committee on courtesies and Mrs. Soule on finance.

The treasurer's report showed receipts for year $2,407.02 and disbursements $2,374.84.

Miss Dockstader, superintendent of the anti-narcotic department, reported that the sentiment against the narcotics was widening and deepening. "The Christian Young People's Societies are discussing this subject and denouncing most emphatically the tobacco habit. The medical men are a unit against the cigarette." She recommended that more effort be made to secure the co-operation of superintendents and teachers of the public schools.

In reporting the work among lumbermen Effie A. Burgan said that more than ninety camps had been furnished with excellent literature. "Each union sending twenty-five cents has preached one hundred sermons and furnished "Backbone" to go with them."

Miss Hitchcock in her report on the evangelistic work says, "I find that those unions reporting strong work along evangelistic lines are alive to all other lines of W. C. T. U. work."

During the year two unions were added to the colored people have been formed.

The plan, Miss Hollister reports, of having local Y's' branches is meeting with favor. It removes the old prejudice against the Y., that it takes the girls off by themselves and so hinders the growth of the older unions. Still Miss Hollister is rather in favor of the independent "Y." Character," she says, "is not gained by following the thought and plans of others, but by independent thinking, planning and executing."

In her annual address the president, Mrs. Scovell, gave an exhaustive review of the work, not merely in Minnesota but elsewhere. Signs of growth and progress were noted on every hand and the out look was considered most promising, though incessant and hard labor is the price that must be paid for success. The work of the union, Mrs. Scovell said, was to plant temperance seed. The seed of the eternal truth of righteousness. The women of the White Ribbon army have been plowing the hearts and harrowing the consciences, and sowing the seed, that alcohol is a poison, that used as a beverage it threatens the physical, mental and moral nature of the individual, that it causes heartbreaks, poverty and death in the home, that it is sending 100,000 victims annually into drunkards' graves, that for every dollar the government receives in revenue from the liquor business, the liquor business gets nine Dollars from the pockets of the people, that putting a revenue on the business for restrictive purposes does not restrict the business, that with its destructive power, it is a sin to use alcohol as a beverage, it is, therefore, a sin to sell it, a sin to license a sin and the man who does not drink but votes to license the temptation for his brother man is still a sinner.

* * * More thought is being taken for the child and his development than ever before. It has been predicted that the 20th century will be the child's century. When the adult begins to think for the child long before it is called into being, when educators are beginning to see that the physical and moral development is of as great importance as the mental, when the rearing and training of the child is studied scientifically, as educators are now out doing now, when parents' clubs shall take the place of the mothers' meetings of long ago and I may say that these ideas have gotten out of the W. C. T. U. pasture and are becoming the ideas of the world. * * * The proposition vote was increased in last fall's elections in nearly every state.  Municipal reform is in the air. Let us name it one of our studies this coming year of 1900. Let us own our city charter and keep it next to our bibles and study both until the law of Christ shall prevail in every ward. With reference to Professor Atwater's great experiments anent the effects of alcohol, Mrs. Scovell quoted the professor as saying that "the ground for the abolition of the traffic on the basis of its economic and moral results remains as unshaken as ever."

Commenting on the kind treatment received by the national president of W. C. T. U. when she recently made a western trip, Mrs. Scovell said, The Woman's Christian Temperance Union with its do-everything-for-everybody spirit, with its spirit of Christ dominating all lines of work, with its constant reiterations of total abstinence, and steady aim against the saloon, does command the respect of the world.

Tuesday evening a very enthusiastic welcoming meeting was held at which addresses of welcome were delivered by the Hon. A. D. Stephens, mayor, in behalf of the city, by Rev. Mr. Greer for the clergy, by Mr. Amos for the Y. M. C. A., by A. A. Miller for the board of education, by Mrs. Bayrell for the 14th District and by Mrs. Roberts for the local W. C. T. U. The response to these addresses was given by Mrs. Scovell in a very happy manner which drew forth much applause. Music furnished by the chorus, under directorship of Mrs. Riggs, and by the quartet composed of Misses Carpenter, Lanctot, Mix and Rood, was interspersed through out the evening.

As the Fourteenth District, the Crookston district, was the only one which had during the year received more than a hundred new members—the exact number was 107—the closing part of the program wascentirely in the hands of Mrs. Bayrell, of Argyle, who delivered a very entertaining and instructive address, at the close of which the white silk banner dotted with gold stars was presented to her by Mrs. Scovell. Mrs. Parks, of Ada, also sang a solo as a part of the program arranged by Mrs. Bayrell.

Wednesday morning the executive committee reported, recommending as superintendents, Mrs. Princell. Mrs. Lyles. Miss Hitchcock, Mrs. Burgan, Mrs. F. R. Riggs and Mrs. Carrie Crawford. of Laird. The latter will have charge of the Sunday school work. This work has been in the hands of Mrs. S. B. Irvine, of St. Paul, but much to the regret of the Minnesota Union Mrs. Irvine has been obliged to resign. For seven years Mrs. Irvine has superintended this department and the success which has attended the work has been in great part due to her. She sent to each member of the convention a beautiful souvenir.

Several amendments to different constitutions were passed at the morning session. Five of the vice-presidents also presented their reports.

In the afternoon there was the department symposium, and the matter of organization and of social affairs was discussed. In the evening the program was in charge of the Y branch. This evening Mrs. Susanna Fry, for years state president and now corresponding secretary of the National W. C. T. U. will deliver an address at the M. E. church. This will be an opportunity to hear a talented woman. Mrs. Fry has not merely a state but a national reputation, and those who cannot attend the meeting will miss an instructive entertaining and scholarly address.

INSPECTOR AITON'S REPORT

Of the State High Schools—On the Whole Progress has Been Made.

Geo. B. Aiton, state inspector of high schools, has submitted to the state high school board his sixth annual report. Comparisons in many respects with the reports of previous years show that general progress is being made in the high schools throughout the state. Nearly all the schools show an increase in enrollment, with a respectable gain for the state at large. "My observation," says Mr. Aiton, "is to the effect that an instructor is needed for each thirty students or major fraction thereof. Where fewer instructors are employed, some interest has to suffer. Either the superintendent neglects the grades, or too many students are necessarily thrown into one class, or else the number of subjects taught, that is to say, the number of classes formed, is insufficient to meet existing differences in the tastes and proficiency of the students themselves. Overwork on the part of the instructors cannot wholly counterbalance shortage in number of teachers. * Progress has been made, too, in the adoption of a college education as the minimum requirement of high school instructors.

Crookston high school. It is noted, expended $800 for outfit,—$50 for science and $100 for supplementary reading. With reference to the matter of expenditure Mr. Aiton says: "I like to have the president of the board see to the superintendent. Our interest for the coming year is about so much. Here are our standing charges salaries, heating, etc. We must be ready at all times for some unexpected outlay. You can see for yourself what our ability is. Now, we want $1,000 for school or we had far only money. We know that good teachers need something to work with. We have confidence in your judgment of what we ought to have or we would not employ you. We expect you to be progressive, prudent and business like. We make you an advisory committee. This committee has power to act in all small matters and will present its recommendations to the board in case large purchases are under consideration.' This kind of treatment puts a man on his mettle, and develops administrative ability.

HUNTING SEASON OPENS

Synopsis of Game Laws—Chicken Shooting Begins Sept. 1.

The hunting season is at hand, and the following brief summary of the provisions of the game laws passed by the last legislature will be read with interest by sportsmen and others.

The open season for prairie chickens, snipe, white-breasted or sharp-tailed grouse and turtle doves begins Sept. 1 and closes Oct. 31. The season for quail, partridge, ruffled grouse or pheasant opens Oct. 1 and closes Dec. 1. The season for ducks, geese, brant and all aquatic fowl opens Sept. 1 and closes Dec. 31.

The sale, exposing for sale, having in possession with intent to sell, or shipping or taking out of state either within or without the state by common or private carrier, of any quail, ruffled or sharp-tailed grouse, prairie chicken, partridge or pheasant is punishable by a fine of from $10 to $25 and costs or by imprisonment of from 10 days to 90 days and every bird sold or shipped. No licenses are required except for hunting deer.

Shortage in the County Treasury.

Attorney A. R. Holston is securing through the Register of Deeds of Polk County a list of names of those men who were bondsmen of Mr. Beaudry, late county treasurer. Some time in September Mr. Holston will call a meeting of these bondsmen in order to settle up the matter of the shortage in the county funds. As Mr. Beaudry was treasurer for four terms and their was a shortage in each term and he did not have the same bondsmen during each term the case is somewhat complicated.

OCTOBER 3, 4 AND 5.

Is the Time for the Crookston Street Carnival—Big Preparations Being Made.

THREE THOUSAND DOLLARS

Will be Spent in Providing Entertainment—Grand Naval Battle on River.

Crookston has a great reputation in the way of entertaining those who come within her borders, but the coming street carnival, the first week in October, promises to surpass anything that the city has ever attempted. The business men and citizens in general have responded so liberally with contributions for the carnival fund that there is now no longer any doubt about the carnival being held. This does not however, mean that no more funds are needed. The committee who have been soliciting for the carnival though, have met with such success that no doubt exists but that the citizens desire to have the carnival, so that plans will at once be made even if some citizens have not as yet had an opportunity to contribute. They will have a chance as soon as the committee can get around to them. A public meeting will be held at which all the subscribers will be present and at that time definite action will be taken as to just what the chief features of the carnival will be. One this question is settled a vigorous campaign will be inaugurated and by the first of October every thing will be in readiness for one of the biggest carnivals ever held in this section.

It is quite likely that there will be a live stock show in connection with the carnival. The matter of animal industry is assuming more and more importance every day and Polk county even now is raising some of the best herds in the state. Some of the best of these high bred cattle will be brought to Crookston as liberal prizes will be offered.

But the entertainment feature is going to be something that will be especially attractive. Neither money nor time is to be spared in securing the best in this line. Buffalo Bill's Wild West show appears in Fargo early in September and an effort will be made to have this famous exhibition come to Crookston. Vaudeville performances of all kinds will be slated, and athletic sports will be engaged in. A grand parade too will be one of the attractions. The parade which Crookston had last year was artistic to a high degree and with the experience gained then something superfine may be expected this year. And to crown all there will be a grand naval battle on the river or some part of this nature, a spectacle that it will be worth coming some distance to see.

VACATION IS OVER.

The Public Schools will Open up Next Tuesday, Sept. 5.

The summer holidays are a thing of the past, or will be in a day or two and soon will be seen the familiar sight of the "school boy, with his satchel and shining morning face, creeping like snail unwillingly to school." And yet this picture of Shakespeare's is hardly fair, for very many of the boys and girls are not unwilling to go back to school. Indeed many of them are eager and anxious to do so.

Those school rooms which needed fixing are being put in shape. The plasterers have been at work and the cleaning of the rooms is now going on, so that everything will be in order next Tuesday morning, when the familiar sound of the school bell will call to the halls of learning several hundred of the young people of the city.

In addition to Mr. Hitchcock, the superintendent, and Mr. Newberry, the principal of the high school, there are four new grade teachers. Miss Smith, who takes the 8th grade and Misses Jessie Davies, Morgan and Lizzie Crookshanks. Miss Still, who has for several years taught in Sampson's addition will, this coming year, teach in the Central building, taking the Sixth A and B and it is possible that Miss Langford, who also has been in Sampson's addition, may go to the Central building and teach the second grade. If this plan is carried out two of the new teachers will have the Sampson's addition school and the other one will go to the "school in the woods."

THE HESSIAN FLY.

Is Destructive—Burn Stubble and Plow Fields Early.

No small amount of damage is done to wheat fields by the Hessian fly. This was quite unexpected, as it was thought that this insect was "double brooded" and could exist only where winter grain was raised. Dr. Lugger of this state, in the annual report for the year '95, claims that this insect is "single brooded" in Minnesota. With this knowledge of their life history it is easy to see how this fly can winter in the Red River Valley and do its destructive work in our wheat fields. Specimens have been sent to Dr. Lugger. He pronced them the true Hessian fly. He writes that they infest a very large territory in the Red River Valley. He states further that Hessian flies are the greatest pests we have."

There are large numbers of parasites that destroy these insects, but the farmer can not eafely depend on them to protect his grain. The remedies are simple, cheap and effective. As soon as harvest and stacking is over, burn the stubble if possible. Then plow early. The insects in the stem of the wheat will thereby be destroyed. Dr. Lugger agree strongly the plan of burning and plowing. Plow early, whether there are Hessian flies in the fields or not. It will have a good effect on weeds and future crop as well as destroy insects.

VANES & STONE.

IS MACADAM PAVING

City Council Decides to Pave the Streets With Broken and Crushed Rock.

CITIZENS GIVE THEIR VIEWS

To the Council—City Engineer to Make Estimates and Report Tomorrow Afternoon.

At last Crookston is to have what has long been desired and needed. The city council at a special meeting held last night—called by the mayor because no action had been taken on paving at the regular meeting the night before—passed a resolution providing that certain streets in the business portion of the city should be paved with macadam nine inches deep. The vote on the resolution stood, ayes: Aldermen Davis, Thompson, Chesterman, Harris, Ellington and Anderson. nays: Aldermen McKinnon and O'Brien, notnoting Aldermen Bosholt and McGregor of the 5th Ward. This vote was taken because merely the council men had discussed the question but after the citizens who were interested parties had given their views. The majority of those present and speaking on the subject were decidedly in favor of the macadam paving.

The city engineer has been instructed to make a list of the property abutting the streets where it is proposed to put in paving, and a list of the owners of said property; also to estimate the amount to be assessed against said property, thus estimating the total cost of the paving. The council will meet at 2 p. m. tomorrow afternoon to receive this report. The report will then be published in the official paper which will be notice to the parties who are to be taxed for the paving. One week after said publication an assessment will be levied. The reason for the hurry in this matter now is that this assessment must be made before the property can be sold, however, will not begin till next spring.

A SURE WINNER

Is the Polk County Exhibit—Prize on Vegetables Awarded Saturday.

The response of the farmers in the county to the appeal for the produce of the soil has been such that enough material has been collected to make a most creditable exhibit and taken in connection with the fact that the arrangement of the exhibit in the Agricultural building on the fair grounds is in the hands of such an experienced man as Mr. Davis, Polk county is almost sure of being among the first. The specimens and samples sent down to the state fair have been gathered from the four corners of the county. No one person furnishing an exhaustive supply but all contributing something.

During the past week oatmeal grain or grasses has been brought in because the supply in this line was the most conspicuous before that time. The collection of thegame birds, however has been added to and an extensive display of preserved fruit prepared. But what is the most striking feature is chiefly vegetables and though a considerable quantity of this product is now on hand the farmers have until Saturday to bring in their carrots, squash, beets, etc. J. M. Stevens, it is expected, will have some extra fine samples of this kind of farm product. Tuesday among other vegetables from the farm of W. B. Bailey were two pumpkins that it will be hard to beat. Mr. Bailey also sent in a sample of Alsike clover that has been in the ground for fifteen years without reseeding. The green peas secured from the Hazeltine farm are of an unusually large size.

Fertilites Must Obey Law.

Last Tuesday Dr. Nelson and E. L. Johnson, druggists of Northcote, and Knute Knutson and O. E. Holmes of the same place were brought up before Judge McLean charged with selling liquor in Fertile without a license. Johnson and Holmes were each fined $80. Knutson was bound over to the grand jury, while the case against Dr. Nelson was dismissed. Some reform league is evidently back of the arrests as it was a detective from Minneapolis who swore out the warrants.

THE IOWA CAMPAIGN.

Democrats Will Make Anti-Imperialism the Main Issue.

DES MOINES, Ia., Aug. 27.—Chairman George Hoffman announces that the Democratic state committee will meet in this city Aug. 30 to plan the campaign. He favors a short campaign, to open Oct. 1.

"The campaign will be fought on anti-imperialism," said Mr. Hoffman. "The people demand that this be put forward as the principal issue. I am confident the Democratic position will be indorsed by great gains at the polls."

Hurrying Troops Away.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 30.—All haste is being used to dispatch the troops now waiting here to Manila. NEW SIBERIAN TIGER.

First of the Species Received in the United States.

A big male tiger from the Baikal lake region of southern Siberia was added to the collection in the Central park menagerie in New York the other day. The tiger arrived in New York from Hamburg on the steamship Pennsylvania. He is the first Siberian tiger that has come to the United States, says the New York Sun. He was caged alongside Lily, a full grown Bengal tiger, in the lion house. Although only 2 years old, he is now much larger than his neighbor, and he will not attain his full growth until he is 4 years old.

"He will be a monster then," said Director John B. Smith. "He will be as large as a good sized cow. The fibers from that part of the world are the largest of the species. This one, I am told, can stand the most severe cold or the greatest heat. His forepaws are very muscular and as large as a man's thigh. He is the finest tiger in the country and the first that ever was on exhibition here."

The tiger was sent as the last of the animals traded for Cyrus, the young hippopotamus sent to Germany six months ago.

Music Kills a Horse.

Music caused the death of a beautiful 3-year-old filly at Florence, Ala., the other day, says the Roanoke News. A farmer drove his valuable young mare into town, and as he was driving up the principal street a brass band suddenly struck up its blatant music. The mare had never heard any sound like that before, and so startled was she that she dropped dead in the shafts of the trap. A veterinary surgeon who examined the carcass declared that the mare had died of heart failure, due to excitement, caused by the sound of the unaccustomed music of the brass band.

EVAPORATED BANANAS.

A New Delicacy to Be Placed Upon the American Market.

Evaporated bananas are to be a new delicacy in the markets of the United States. Mr. Arthur P. Spawn of Baltimore is said to be the originator of the idea and after a trip to Jamaica several representatives down there to erect a plant for carrying out the plan. As yet the evaporation idea is in its infancy, but there seems to be no doubt but it will be perfected, and bananas that now cannot be shipped from Jamaica in the natural state will reach the markets of the United States in another form.

Mr. Spawn expects to place his first evaporated fruit on the market this fall, says the Baltimore Sun. Whatever may be the state of the weather the prepared banana can reach the market in an attractive state without being affected by the summer heat or winter chill, as is the case with fruit when forwarded in its original bunch from the plant. In a small way the evaporated fruit has been tried in Europe, to which country it is impossible to send it in the natural state. Confectioners like evaporated bananas as a base for candied fruits, and bakers can use them in a variety of ways.

Bananas have been evaporated to some extent in Nicaragua, and, according to authentic information, if the plan proves successful the industry will be introduced into the banana producing districts throughout Central America, the West Indies and probably all other tropical and semitropical regions where the banana is grown.

The general method of evaporation is that pursued with juicy fruits. The thoroughly ripe banana is placed in an oven and subjected to heat for 24 to 48 hours, as may be required. The sugar crystallizes on the outside. The evaporated product is then packed in boxes for the wholesale trade. It takes six pounds of fresh fruit to make one pound evaporated; hence the economy of space in transporting is important, to say nothing of the saving in preventing decay in transit.

WILL FIGHT TO THE END.

Aguinaldo's Secretary, En Route to London, Talks of the War.

MONTREAL, Aug. 30.—Dr. Mariano Ponce, private secretary to Emilio Aguinaldo, president of the Filipino republic, is here en route to London from Manila. In an interview he said:

"My country fights and will fight for her independence, because she is fully convinced that it is a duty imposed by Providence. The ambition of a powerful nation is not enough to make her surrender her destiny. She is ready to make every sacrifice for the defense of the freedom of the land. The last word in the question has been said by my nation. The Philippines will become an American possession only when there are no more Filipinos."

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

By local application, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces. We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

GOV. LIND'S PROTEST

Reply to Pioneer Press Charges —Discrediting of Minnesota Wheat Must Stop.

Routing Out of "Tried, Capable and Honest Inspectors" Indignantly Denied.

A CRUSHING EXPOSURE

"Skin Grade" Iniquities and the Outrages of the "Mixing Houses."

Earnest Reassurance of Reform—Gov. Lind Will "Remember the Grades."

The following is Governor Lind's reply to Republican aspersions, that political appointments are being made in the grain inspection department, which its efficiency, the reply being addressed to the St. Paul Pioneer Press, for its article of the 24th inst., entitled "Political Wheat Inspection":

Editor Pioneer Press:

My attention has been called to the editorial appearing as a leader in your paper of the 24th inst., headed, "Political Wheat Inspection," part of which reads as follows:

"Governor Lind has been routing out very nearly all the whole force of trained, capable and honest wheat inspectors, whose work for many years past has made the Minnesota inspection certificate a thing to be absolutely relied on in the markets of the world. He has filled their places with political appointees who realize that the chief motive for the substitution is not to maintain the heretofore high repute of the Minnesota inspection abroad, but to so carry favor with the farmers as to promote Governor Lind's chances for re-election. * * *

"Gov. Lind probably reasons that it will take about a year for foreign buyers to discover that the heretofore existing business-like inspection in Minnesota has been superceded by political inspection, and that meanwhile some votes may be gained by liberality in fixing grades. If he is re-elected, what matters it to him that Minnesota's honest reputation shall be gone? If he is defeated, upon a Republican governor and not upon Lind will fall the labor of repairing, if possible, the damage done to the permanent interests of the state."

If the effect of such an editorial were simply political, I should not feel called upon to reply, but when a paper of your pretentions deliberately undertakes to discredit in advance the Minnesota wheat crop in the eastern and foreign markets, it behooves me in the interest of the thousands of farmers and business men whose pockets you attack, to make a statement of the facts and to counteract, so far as lies in my power, the baneful effect of such pernicious statements.

Your first statement that "Governor Lind has been routing out very nearly the whole force of trained, capable and honest wheat inspectors, etc.," is absolutely without foundation in fact. The services of only one inspector have been dispensed with by the new chief inspector, so far as I am advised, and the inspectors in the service who have devoted their time to their work, who are efficient and qualified and whose record entitles them to remain, will be retained. The head of the department and the chief assistants have been superceded by men who will direct the work on the lines herein indicated.

The personnel of the Board of Appeals has not been criticised. On the contrary, their appointment was well received. They are all men of integrity and experience in the work for which they were selected, whose appointment has met approval with all interests. They have met pursuant to law and established grades for the ensuing year in harmony with the grades that have been in vogue in the past, the only change being that the inspectors will hereafter be required to determine the dockage in grain classed "rejected" or "no grade," which change experience has demonstrated to be necessary for the protection of the producer. The grades so established will be maintained with integrity throughout the season, not only with regard to the inspection of the farmers' grain sold on the track and inspected into elevators, but with equal strictness as to the grain inspected out of the elevators and mixing houses for the eastern and foreign markets.

In the report of the examinantion before the joint legislative committee of the last legislature, you will find in the house journal of the last session, on page six of the appendix, the following question put to Mr. Clausen, and his answer:

Q. "But that does not explain the original proposition which we started with; that it has always been that the grade was more severe early in the season, and grew more liberal as the season advanced."

A. "Now, we start out conservatively every year; we don't know what we have got to contend with with any crop before we get into it, and we never get into it so as to understand it until about the 1st or 15th of October; we start out as we did the year before, carrying an average grade on each of the grades, what we call an average as far as we have it; now I don't propose to antagonize anybody, but I will challenge anybody to show or demonstrate that the grading of the grain has not been within the rules on this crop as well as on other crops. That is to say, I claim that with the exception of some mistakes that may have been made, no one can justify or confirm the statements that the grades on this crop have not been carried within the line laid down for the different grades. That no wheat has been graded 1 Northern that should have been graded one Hard, nor any graded 2 northern that should have been graded 1 Northern; now that may seem a broad statement, but I am making that on general lines; there may have been cases."

On page 8 you will find the following questions put to Mr. Tunnell, Chief Deputy Inspector at Minneapolis, and his answers:

Q. Do you mean to say that you did not inspect too closely?

A. No, sir; not if the wheat was of the same quality.

Q. You have testified that early in the season you have to inspect closer?

A. Yes, at the very start.

Q. How long do you consider that necessary?

A. I couldn't say exactly.

And likewise the testimony of Mr. Nelson Hoople, State Inspector at Duluth.

Q. Do you or do you not, on the first arrival of the wheat, a new crop, proceed on the theory that the crop is of the same general character and grain as the year previous?

A. Well, no, not exactly, we are generally careful on the starting out of each year, before we determine what the crop is.

The conclusions drawn from this testimony by the Joint Committee are as follows, (to be found on pages 8 and 9):

"From this testimony it appears clearly to your committee that the wheat early in the season is not inspected upon its merits, but from an overanxious desire on the part of the department to keep up what they deem is necessary to keep the standard of the grade. It appears from the testimony partly quoted above that this rule of rigid inspection continues from three to four weeks and if this was the only damage resulting from this system of inspection, the loss would not be so disastrous, but from this very fact, the country buyers become overcautious in buying and in order to protect themselves generally continue the rigid grading from two to three weeks after the inspection department at the terminal points has changed their system of grading, and this results in additional heavy loss to the producer throughout the state. From this it appears that nearly one-third of the crop has been inspected each year before the farmer is enabled to get the grade that his crop merits."

In regard to this abuse which has existed heretofore, I was authorized both by the Board of Appeals, who have the supervision of grades, and by the Chief Inspector and his deputies, who have charge of the administrative work, to state that it will not be permitted to exist hereafter, and that the grades will be maintained with the same integrity and fidelity at all seasons for the protection of the seller and buyer alike.

Another abuse which has grown up and become a menace both to the producers and the legitimate trade is the practice of handling the wheat crop through mixing houses and giving the mixed output, containing not only Minnesota and Dakota wheats, but wheats from Iowa and Nebraska and further south, the certificate of quality of grade which Minnesota inspection implies. I am satisfied from an abundance of creditable evidence that has come to me that this mixed output has frequently been accorded grades that it was not fairly entitled to. This practice has done more to destroy confidence in Minnesota grades and in the integrity of our inspection system and is today depressing prices in a greater degree in the east and abroad than even such articles as your editorial. In Minneapolis there are thirty-six warehouses which avail themselves of state inspection and state weighing. Out of these thirty-six only four are state warehouses, which by law are prohibited from mixing the various grades. The statement was made to me some weeks ago by an apparently reputable man who has been employed for fourteen years in one of these mixing houses, that some three years ago in the house in which he was employed, under the direction of the foreman, he and two others mixed 2,500 bushels of fine flax screenings with the wheat in the warehouse; that 50,000 bushels of that wheat was afterwards purchased by the Pillsbury company. The statement seemed to me so astounding that I could hardly give it credence. I sent for Mr. C. A. Pillsbury and repeated the statement to him, without disclosing the name of either the company operating the elevator or the mill that made the purchase. I simply asked him whether he believed such a statement to be within the range of possibility. His answer was in the affirmative. He stated further that no consumer of wheat in Minneapolis can afford to pay as much for grain inspected out of a mixing elevator as he can for the like grade bought on the track, and this for the reason that under the inspection out of from mixing houses they are compelled to receive the lowest quality within the grade, or as he termed it, the "skin grade." This accounts for the fact that the quotations for future delivery out of warehouses in Minneapolis are invariably below the track quotations. As the prices for future delivery always affect the market, it follows that by this system of mixing, which has been permitted without restraint heretofore, the farmer who raises and markets a good grade of grain on the whole, receives pay for only "skin" quality of that particular grade. Whether the practice of handling grain through mixing houses can or should be prevented entirely is a question that it is not necessary to discuss, but it is the settled and determined policy of the Board of Appeals and the Inspection Department that hereafter grades and inspection will be applied with the same rigidness and with the same care in the inspection out of wheat from the mixing elevators as in the inspection of the producers' grain on the track. This, and this alone will do full justice to the producers and maintain the integrity and good name of Minnesota wheat.

Without further discussing the grain service as heretofore conducted, I will simply call your attention to the fact that if you will take the trouble to send a reporter to the Railroad and Warehouse Commission you will find numerous complaints on file from purchasers in the east and abroad who complain of the grade and quality of shipments out under Minnesota inspection. That such may not occur in the future I am not prepared to say, but I do say that if they occur hereafter, it will be without cause.

In conclusion permit me to assure you that your attacks upon the present executive department are a matter of personal indifference to me. I will only notice them when they evince a fixed motive to injure important interests of our people, as in this instance. There are departments of the administration upon which you can expend partisan zeal without material injury to any interest—say, for instance, that of the Public Examiner, on which you already have your "hand in," but leave our wheat grades alone until you have facts.

JOHN LIND, Governor.

TEA EXPERIMENTS.

Progress of Cultivation in the South Carolina Garden.

Dr. Charles U. Shepard, who is in charge of the experimental tea garden at Summerville, S. C., has made a report to the secretary of agriculture covering the progress made up to date, says the Washington Star. He says there are now about 50 acres of land under tea cultivation and that 3,000 pounds were sold last year at a profit of 25 per cent. It is estimated that when all the plants now growing arrive at maturity they will yield 10,000 pounds annually. Dr. Shepard expresses the opinion that the first crop of the ten pinnits lived through last winter, when the most intensely cold weather in the history of the section was experienced. is a guarantee that the weather conditions will prove satisfactory.

The labor problem, he says, has been solved by establishing a school for the education of negro children in tea picking. The quality of the tea also has proved satisfactory. Of the black tea he says, "It has a distinctly characteristic flavor and, like some of the choicer oriental teas, its liquor has more strength than its color indicates." The green tea, he says, has attracted keen interest in the trade and among consumers, and he adds that oriental teas can hardly furnish the like in the United States.

Native Troops in Negros.

The provisional government established by General Smith is working splendidly, and the natives are being armed with Springfields, are pronounced as excellent militiamen. Major Fiske will remain in the Philippines and recruit a regiment of native soldiers in Negros at once, says the Manila American of July 4. The only fighting to be done in Negros is against the bandits, who have always lived and operated in the mountain fastnesses. Under the leadership of Americans the Filipino or native soldiers in making occasional campaigns against this class and are doing magnificent work, hanging five or six outlaws every so. With insignificant squads of armed soldiers it has been possible to penetrate 40 or 70 miles into the interior of the island.

AN excursion from West Superior ought to be planned for the Street Carnival. Last year the business men from that city went to Grand Forks, and this year, it was understood, they were to make Crookston.

SOLWAY is certainly very fortunate in having John Riesch as the editor of its new paper, the Solway Press. Mr. Riesch is an energetic fellow and will make a success of anything he goes at. We welcome the Press to our exchange table.

STEELE county will hold its annual County Fair at Owatonna on Sept. 18, 19 and 20. Fair premiums and race purses to the amount of $6,000 are offered. We note that C. Chambers is president of the fair association and W. A. Dynes is secretary.

Thief River Falls News: The POLK COUNTY JOURNAL has recently added a new Optimus press to its well equipped office. The JOURNAL is one of the best papers published in the Red River Valley and typographically is in unexcelled in the state.

IN the recent republican state convention of Pennsylvania Matt Quay had things all his own way and even had his appointment, last winter, by Governor Stone as United States Senator endorsed. Evidently Mr. Quay still holds quite a firm grasp upon the Quaker commonwealth.

EDUCATORS throughout the state will be pleased over the fact that Governor Lind has reappointed Geo. D. Alton as state high school inspector, and A. W. Rankin as state inspector of graded schools. This is one case where Mr. Lind did not allow politics to interfere with the welfare of state institutions.

WE always had faith in our new Fosston line, and it has justified our faith by immediately taking front rank. That line carries west-bound, coal, lumber and merchandise." The above is taken from an interview which J. J. Hill recently granted to a New York paper and speaks volumes for the present and future pros-perity of the northern part of Minnesota.

"FOR God and home and every land" is what the W. C. T. U. works for, which is surely unselfish work; hence it cannot but be beneficial to any town to have this band of noble women hold their convention within its borders. The aim of the organization is the betterment of society and the uplifting of humanity, hence wherever its members go they are deserving of a royal welcome.

THE state fair is one of the great educational institutions for the farmers and they should, if it is at all possible, plan to be there and study the exhibits with a view to making improvements on their farms. It is true the entertainment program this year is especially attractive and well worth going a long distance to see, still the farmer's main interest should be in finding out new facts with reference to farm work and life, and he can find these in great abundance at Hamline next week.

THE JOURNAL is in receipt of Bulletin No. 62 published by the Agricultural Experiment station at St. Anthony Park. This bulletin is devoted to the question of wheat, its varieties, breeding and cultivation, and gives a full report of the results of experiments, which results, though experiments are not yet completed, "warrant the statement that the average yield per acre of wheat can be increased 25 to 50 per cent by so rotating the crops and manuring and cultivating the fields best to prepare the soil for this grain." This is an astounding statement and farmers will do well to investigate the matter thoroughly. The bulletins of this station are mailed free to all residents of the state who make application for them.

THE College Journal No. 1 issued by the Crookston College is a very creditable publication. The kind of work done at the college is clearly outlined in the paper and the advantages of a commercial training are set forth in a convincing manner. Twenty-five hundred copies of the College paper have been printed by the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL and will be sent to all parts of this and other counties. The College authorities report that the outlook for the coming year is the brightest, they having already this year received more inquiries about the College from prospective students than during any year of the preceding years combined. It is, indeed, a deserving institution, and deserves patronage.

From Bede's Budget.

President McKinley has eliminated one quantity in his war problem by Algebra, and now is getting at the Root of the matter.

The change of grain inspectors seems to have been a direct benefit to the farmers, as it not only surprised the public but shocked the wheat.

Some foreigners used to say that our country was too level to be picturesque and interesting, but things are different now since we have those three elevations, Jim Hill, Dave Hill and San Juan Hill. And Teddy Roosevelt has climbed two of 'em, but rides on a pass around the other one, the biggest of all.

With such a Scotch strain running through the government as there will be with McKinley in the White House, Jim Wilson regulating the crops and weather, and Dave Henderson making rules for the house, if Maxwelton's brass ain't bonnie it's because the bagpipe has lost its cunning, and some barelegged, plaided and breasted Celt will have to lay bim down and dee—or be kilt.

The average country school teacher is so poorly paid that she has to pick blue berries during vacation when she ought to be attending the training school. Corollaries are all right in their way, but they're not worth a compliment for dessert.

Lest you forget, we may as well admit that the Budget is supporting its editor for congress. And it takes a pretty good fellow to get the support of this paper.

No more money will be paid to Cuban troops. The authorities consider that it would work more harm than good.

Business failures during the second quarter of the present year have been smaller than in the same quarter for twenty-five years.

There seems to be some rivalry between Solway and Shevlin. The latter boast of a new $150 jail, "the finest on the line," the former of a $2500 school house.

Judge Brown, who held court in Crookston last winter, has resigned the district judgeship in the Sixteenth judicial district. Governor Lind has taken effect today and he will take his seat on the supreme bench Jan. 1, 1900.

A complete change was made in the corps of teachers in the Fertile schools this spring, and that the very surprising village is now considering the advisability of giving the new teachers a public reception so as to make them feel at home right along from the start.

Moorhead is to have a flax fibre mill which will be completed this fall. It will utilize about 10,000 tons of flax straw annually and will be located east of Moorhead on the Glyndon road. The flax should be cut as near the ground as possible to be valuable at the mill.

The new Catholic church at Bemidji is nearing completion. It is to be a very fine building situated in a very choice location. Father Murphy, late of Crookston, is the pastor and much credit is due him for the success of the church so far. Recently a supper was given for its benefit, which netted $105.

High water mark on the pension list seems to have been reached. The report of Commissioner of Pensions Evans for the fiscal year ending June 30 last shows total disbursements of $138,253,923. The total number of pensioners on the rollwas 991,-988, a decrease of 2,195. There were 40,991 names added to the roll and 43,186 dropped. The war with Spain brought 16,886 claims, of which but 206 have been allowed.

Those good people who are wasting sympathy on the Boers had better read up a little on the subject of the Kaffirs. The Boers took the Transvaal country by force and oppressed the poor natives. The Boers never wanted the mines opened. They would much prefer to have them closed now. A war would give them the opportunity to inflict enormous loss upon their enemy and, at the same time, gratify their own wishes by undoing the work of foreigners in introducing modern civilization and nineteenth century progress into the midst of the Acadian simplicity.

State Superintendent Lewis has issued certificates to about 200 rural schools in default of payment of the $50 state aid offered, by the law which has been in force up to this time, to the schools employing first grade teachers and complying with other conditions. About 000 schools have applied this year and as the appropriation for the purpose was only $50,000 aid can be given to only 400 schools. The governor will ask the next legislature for a deficiency appropriation, and in case that body sees fit to make one, the default attributable to which the state superintendent is now issuing can be cashed by the districts holding them.

THESE THE GRADES OF WHEAT.

Board of Grain Appeals Adopts Specifications.

The recently appointed joint board of grain appeals held practically its first business session Friday in Minneapolis, when specifications to govern the principal grades were adopted. There is no particular change from former specifications, only certain points being more plainly emphasized for the benefit of inspectors. The board adopted the following report:

No. 1 Hard Spring Wheat—No. 1 hard spring wheat must be sound, bright and well cleaned, and must be composed mostly of hard Scotch Fife and weigh not less than fifty-eight pounds to the measured bushel.

No. 1 Northern Spring Wheat—Must be sound and well cleaned, and must be composed equally of the hard and soft varieties of spring wheat and weigh not less than fifty-seven pounds to the measured bushel.

No. 2 Northern Spring Wheat—Must be sound and reasonably clean. This grade to include all wheat not suitable for the higher grades on account of smut, barley or too much bleachends, cockle and oats, or any defects, and weigh not less than fifty-six pounds to the measured bushel.

No. 3 Spring Wheat—Shall comprise all the inferior shrunken spring wheat, weighing not less than fifty-four pounds to the measured bushel.

Note—Hard, flinty wheat of good color, containing no perceptible admixture of soft wheat, may be admitted into the grades of No. 2 Northern Spring and No. 3 spring wheat, provided the test weight of the same is not more than one pound less than the medium weight and provided further that such wheat is in all other respects qualified for admission into such grades.

Rejected Spring Wheat—Shall include all spring wheat not fit for No. 3 wheat.

Note—Wheat containing a mixture of rice or grocer wheat will in no case grade higher than rejected.

The board desired, also, that the amount of dirt in all wheat should be determined by the inspector. There were present at the meeting all the members of the board—Messrs. F. L. Greenleaf, Alex. McCluncan, C. A. Malmquist, F. W. Eva and H. P. Bjorge.

"What effect will the new rules of the board of appeal have upon Minnesota grades?" was asked Chairman McKinnon.

"The principal effect," replied the Red River valley head of the board, "will be to secure uniformity and reliability of grade. We expect to establish and maintain grades in such a manner that Minnesota and Dakota wheat the world over will be bought by grade and not by sample. Last year most of the No. 1 wheat in the northwest was sold as No. 2. The farmers were robbed of a grade as a rule. This same wheat which graded No. 2 as it came from farmers' hands graded No. 1 when shipped east. The middleman pocketed the difference."

WEDS A FUNSTON HERO.

Winfield Bachelor Girls' Club President Marries Private Davison.

The success of the Girls' Bachelor club of Winfield, near Wichita, Kan., is assured. According to the vow she took when she became a member, Miss May Williams was married the other day to Private Davison of Company H, Twentieth Kansas volunteers.

The rules of this club are that members must wed a Twentieth Kansas hero or no one at all. Miss Williams was the president of the club, and by her perseverance she will win a silver bar service as the first one of the club to marry, says the Chicago Inter Ocean.

This club was organized about two months ago, and there were 50 pretty and aristocratic girls of the little college town. Each decided who she pledged themselves to marry no other men than members of the famous Funston regiment. The one who married first was to be presented a silver tea service by the club. It was on the first day of August that Private Davison came home from the Philippines. He was wounded and had arrived with a shipload of other sick soldiers. The other day he was out in the park and fainted from the heat. May Williams ran to his rescue. That night they were married and the whole town rejoiced. The other club members are now busy securing ground for soldier husbands. Miss Williams and Private Davison were sweethearts in their youth.

Somnambulist Starts on a Squirrel Hunt.

John Williams, a young farmer of West Union, O., is an expert squirrel hunter, and is also afflicted with somnambulism, says the Cincinnati Enquirer. The other day at daybreak he awakened to find himself at the edge of a wood half a mile from home. He was in his night garb, and was carrying his gun. He had evidently started on a squirrel hunt.

HIS LITTLE LADY.

"MY LITTLE LADY," I used to call her, and the diminutive seemed to her greatly. "It is such an absurd name," she would say, "and besides, you know how much I dislike any remarks about my personal appearance. It is quite nonsensitive enough to be so ridiculously small without being reminded of it constantly."

"Ah, but one of these days you will be great," I would say, and she would laugh happily at the prophesy—how that happy child laugh of hers rings in my ears even now—and would accuse me of blind partiality, "which is," she would remind me, quoting a favorite saying of mine, which I have come to swear often in our many literary discussions, "only another form of partial blindness."

How shall I describe her, I wonder; how put on paper all the incongruous charm which made her what she was.

No man could describe her and do her justice. He could not faithfully portray the clearness of the beautiful eyes; the delicate color of her cheeks; the distinct shade of her wavy hair that fell about her shoulders in a mass of half curls; he could not picture in words the subtle form or the attractive grace that made her all the world to me.

To tell you of her appearance is to belie her character, for the outward being and the inner self had an established war between now and again, at some chance word that inspired a noble thought in her, the woman's glorious soul peeped shy out through the little eyes, which grew dark and deep, and the warm glow of her divine intelligence permeated and shone through her clear baby face.

She loved poetry—true poetry—and remembered all she heard in it. Ah! if you could have heard her recite poetry as I have! At such moments she was beautiful—more than that, worshipful.

I have seen young men and eastaleross old women rise spellbound to that bright angel face, and listen breathlessly for the words as they fell from those baby lips.

At such times the beautiful story of the Christ child in the temple has seemed to me to gain strength and reality, and I have pondered wonderingly over the power some mortals have to hold and enthrall others, making them fast to good or evil.

But my pride of her as a child, I suppose, is order that you may see her as she appeared in the physical—was not to be borne and to love her (the terms are synonymous) to see her with the eyes of the mind. Those who knew her—for she was known—see her as a child, but they loved her as a woman.

A woman who is loved fiercely, hotly; a woman to dare for, to work for, to achieve for—if need be, to die for—but to die honorably on life's battlefield, fighting to the last.

A woman of whom the world sees but few, by far too few, a woman that brings out the noblest traits of man. Such a woman was my little lady.

A woman at whose feet a man's successes might be laid, and whose one word of praise would be all sufficient guerdon.

Ah, ye women! Will you never under stand the marvelous powers to make men or to mar them!

You laugh at this "high-flown nonsense about a child," do you not? I forgive you, for you never knew my little lady.

Until my little lady came into my life, I was alone. Do you know what that means? Have you realized it? Can you realize it? To go out into the world, to eat and to drink like other people do, to shake your fellow creatures by the hand while mentally you spurn them under foot and void your rheum upon them; to meet an old man or woman with a lie upon your lips—is it that professes innocence in its very height and to them for whom you care no more than for the starving mongrel which you throw from your carriage that you may kick and curse with muttered through set teeth. To be without any love or any loving thing; may I so hate the whole huge human race because one man and one woman have proved unworthy of my trust and loathe yourself even more than you detest the wheel thing that crawls the earth—that is to be alone. And so was I until my little lady came into my life.

Then all I remember was the first time I met her!

A silly woman who thought-I might perchance become the purchaser of one of her silly daughters, had asked me to "come and help amuse some children." Perhaps, no doubt, that the juvenile setting would enhance in my eyes the value of the jewel she intended for me.

It did just the reverse. I have always loved children, and the sight of their every interesence made me hate the men and women there still more. I sat in a corner and watched the children play, wishing I could be one of them again. My little lady was foremost in the games, but presently she left the others, and came to sit near me.

"Have you a headache?" she asked, in a voice that struck me almost unconsciously as being sweet and full for a young girl.

"No—a heartache," I answered, without thinking what I said, and then, angry with myself for self-betrayal, I refused to joke away my answer and to talk nonsense to the child.

What happened after that I hardly know. I only know that soon we were in deep conversation, and gradually I talked to her as I had never talked to living being since those days devils—but no matter! As I left the house I noticed two stains—tear stains on my coat sleeve. I, the misanthrope to who almost boasted that nothing had power to touch me, had wept!

Oh, my little lady, my little lady!

It was her birthday, her eighteenth birthday, and I had brought her a gift—a volume to put in her hair, which she put up that day for the first time.

It lay unnoticed on the ground at her feet, and I half picked to pieces by her nervous fingers.

Fool to have told her then, and so suddenly!

How could a child of her age love a man of mine?

How could she understand? How could she—I went away and cursed myself.

But in four years more I left my little lady with the pained look in her blue eyes and my wound at her feet, and in left an hour I shall see her again.

She is 22 to-day—and I hold her letter in my hand.

"Come to me," she writes. "I did not know myself, years ago. Now I do, my dear, and I ask you to come to me."

I was in Syria when I got that letter, and I have traveled night and day since then.

How the horse crawls. Oh, my little lady, my little la—?

Why are the blinds down?

Dead! Oh, no, no! It's a lie. No, it's true, and my white rosebud, old and faded now, like my life, lies upon her breast.

I'll—no, I promised her years ago, never to do that, whatever happened.

I would not have me break my word. Would that I could believe that we shall meet again.

DISMEMBERING CORN.

Experiments in This Direction, Conducted in Different Sections, Have Proved Fruitless.

A good many experiments have been made to determine if anything could be gained by cutting off portions of the corn plant during growth. Sometimes it has been the roots, sometimes the part of the plant above the ears, and sometimes only the tassels. A part of the experiments have seemed to give fair results, but others have been decidedly bad results. A third class of experiments has been without result. It is probable that what little good was claimed was a mere accident, for the reason that two plats of corn will never yield exactly the same, even though all conditions are exactly identical. But the trials have proved that at least nothing is gained, and experience would seem to teach that there must be an actual loss. A generation ago it was the practice in some parts of the country to cut off the whole of the corn plant above the ears immediately after the silk and the pollen were supposed to have done their work. The farmer thus got a great deal of fodder for his cattle, and imagined that his corn plant would elaborate the same weight of ears without the top as with it. No notice was taken of the fact that the foliage of a plant is needed for the elaboration of the grain of the plant. It is probable that in most cases the yield of corn was greatly decreased by this practice. The custom without doubt remains to-day, especially in the eastern states, where the fields are so small in area that the practice of thus robbing the corn crop can be carried on naturally and easily.

Root-pruning is another method of dismembering the corn plant that has been proved of advantage. So far as we remember, no experiment at the stations has given results showing an advantage of any kind. In tests at the Illinois station root-pruning reduced the yield about 20 per cent. At the New York station experimenting the corn crop reduced the yield more than nine bushels per acre in grain and more than 1,000 pounds in fodder.—Farmers' Review.

FOR LOADING WAGONS.

A Contrivance Which Makes the Lifting of Heavy Articles a Comparatively Easy Task.

Getting heavy boxes and other heavy articles into wagons and carts is a matter that often requires great effort. Needless lifting should be avoided, as this is the sort of work that makes men on the farm old before their time. The cut shows a simple device for raising heavy articles into the wagons, carts and wagons. Two side pieces are fitted to two cross braces. Small rollers are set in every one or twelve inches, a 20-penny wire nail through holes in the side pieces serving as bearings. A lip of iron, twisted as shown, is fastened to the side at the upper end of each end piece to rest upon the floor of the cart or wagon. The rollers should "play" loosely in the side pieces, but solidly into the rollers. Let the latter project above the side pieces, when the box or other article can easily be rolled up from the ground to the wagon or cart.—N. Y. Tribune.

ALL AROUND THE FARM.

If manures are permitted to remain outdoors in the storm, it is estimated that 60 per cent of their value is leached out.

Have a tight gutter in the cow stables to catch the liquid manure and mix it with leaf mold, cut straw, rond dust, etc.

Cattle destroy more pasture by treading it down than they do by eating the grass. Hence it is advised to divide the pastures into several lots.

When fertilizers are necessary, the wastefulness of letting the home-made manure go to waste and buying artificial fertilizers should not be practiced.

Good pastures are valuable in one direction that is not always thought of, the cow does not need to wear herself out in getting what she wants to eat. She will pretty nearly do this on a thin pasture.—Western Plowman.

Raising Quail on Farms.

A Missouri young man, C. Gross, of Morgan county, says an exchange, has built up a large business in game quail, which he claims are more easily raised than chickens and far more profitable, selling olive at four dollars per dozen for meat, or when tame at five dollars per pair as pets. The eggs hatch well, either under quail or common hens. The care and food are much like that for chickens and the birds prove very hardy and free from disease. The coops are only a foot high, covered over the top and are movable.

Pumpkins in Cornfields.

Pumpkins are usually grown in the cornfield, under the supposition that it is economical to grow them in that manner, but the land does not respond to two crops as favorably as to one. The proper way to grow pumpkins is to prepare a piece of ground for them and grow them as a special crop apart from corn. They can be better cultivated and will produce a greater weight than when grown in the cornfield. As a food in winter in connection with grain pumpkins are excellent, especially for cattle.

The Case Clearly Stated.

The San Francisco Bulletin points out that the county which cannot afford schools and good roads is allowed to pass into the possession of men who want neither.

ITY AND VICINITY.

—Koeppe block has almost reached the third story.

—The Crookston College will open its fall term Sept 11.

—E. A. Nelson, of Hallock, spent Monday night in the city.

—Bert Anderson and wife are visiting in West Superior, Wis.

—Fred Stephens, of Angus, spent last Thursday night in the city.

—N. A. Hoffard took a spin on his wheel to Grand Forks last Sunday.

—John Steenerson, of Climax, has started out with his threshing machine.

—C. T. Lannan, editor of the Mcintosh Times, was in the city Tuesday.

—Robert Walker, of Key West, transacted business in the city on Friday.

—Attorney Fiske was a railway passenger Tuesday morning bound for his home at Preston.

—Next Monday, being Labor Day, the banks will be closed.

—N. J. Simons is special police for the Great Northern yards.

Mrs. Joseph Smith has been entertaining Mrs. Frank E. Hunt, of Red Lake Falls.

—Tom Morris assisted last Friday night in organizing a lodge of Elks at St. Cloud.

—Fred Harris went up to Hallock Tuesday morning to look after some electrical business.

—John Kirsch assisted in the Crookston post office while Postmaster Elken was away.

—George and Charley Dameral of Grand Forks spent last Sunday with friends in Crookston.

—Hawkins & Olds bicycle Victory will speed in the races at the state fair at Hamline next week.

—Wreford Atkins is the new night yard master in the Great Northern yards in South Crookston.

—Assistant County Superintendent Gruber has invested in a house in the southeastern part of the city.

—United States Land Office Inspector Green was in the city last week looking over the local office.

—Dr. Blakeslee, the man who bought up so many saw mills in the country out east of here, was in Crookston last Friday.

—Judge Watts has gone back east to his old home in Canada to spent a short vacation. He will not return till about Sept. 10.

—Rev. J. Fritz, pastor of the new St. Paul's German Lutheran church, has been enjoying a visit from his mother who lives in Manitoba.

—W. N. Graham, who has been visiting for several weeks with his daughter, Mrs. G. O. Riggs, returned last week to his home in Aledo, Ill.

—O. P. Johnson and wife, of Thief River Falls, after visiting for several days in this city at the home of W. Lawrence, left Monday morning for their home.

—W. W. Wooley, Grand Chancellor of the Knights of Pythias and Fred Wheaton, Keeper of Seals, went up to Argyle Tuesday to institute a K. P. lodge there.

—F. W. Murray, of Anoka, has been in Crookston and vicinity for the past week looking over the situation and if he possible that he may locate here and open up a real estate office.

—One of the agents for the McCormick binders who had been on the road between Crookston and St. Vincent, has reported that the cutting of the grain on the farms in that section was about completed last Saturday.

—An unusually large crowd assembled last Friday night at the JOURNAL corner to hear the weekly open air band concert. The evening was an almost ideal one and Prof. Riggs and his musicians captivated the listeners with their harmonious sounds.

—C. C. Knappen after a stay of a few days in the city, returned Friday morning to Turtle River where he has a claim, a townsite, a general store and a newspaper. He says that it is now practically settled that the Brainerd and Northern Railroad will will be built from Bemidji north to Turtle River in the near future.

—From the report of the county assessors it is gleaned that there are now in the county almost 6,000 sheep. There is money in this industry and farmers here have the further advantage of being able to sell the wool right here at home. The Fosston Woolen Mills is a flourishing institution which is buying and manufacturing into goods all the wool raised hereabouts.

—One John Ward, who was serving a 30 days sentence in the county jail, having proved himself tractable was allowed by Jailor Lawrence the privilege of sawing some wood in the yard. The prisoner, however, disliking either the prospect of working or of returning to the jail, skipped. He was caught later, and it is possible that when his present sentence is served he may have to serve several months more on account of this escapade.

—J. P. McDonald of Climax was in the city last Saturday.

—No saloon will be opened within the limits of the 5th ward.

—Mrs. Tower, of Sarnia, Canada, has been the guest of Miss Baggard.

—Robt. Ray, Jr., who has been studying medicine in Minneapolis, is home on a short visit.

—C. W. Palmer went to Warren Tuesday morning to look after his landed property in that section.

—Carl P. Johnson and A. McEachran passed through the city Tuesday morning on their way home to McIntosh.

—Alex. McKinnon, of the state grain board of appeals has been in the city this week looking after his farm in this vicinity.

—Miss Margaret Brown and Miss Jean Woodall left Monday morning for their claims out near Cass Lake where they will spend the entire week.

—Rev. Mr. Poole occupied the pulpit at the Baptist church last Sunday. He had just returned from attending the Baptist assembly at Lake Minnetonka.

—Mr. and Mrs. F. L. Durand left last Friday morning for their claim out in the pine country northwest of Bemidji. Mrs. Durand's brother, also, formed one of the party. They will remain for two weeks anyway.

—John Keenan, late of Crookston, has recently purchased the livery business of L. F. Mason at Larimore. Mr. Keenan has many friends at Larimore and the boys all know him, since he was in the same business at Gilby.

—Bids for McIntosh's new city building were nearly $2,000 higher than had been anticipated, so either the plans of building will have to be altered or the project given up. The latter alternative is not likely to occur.

—H. C. Misner has moved his family in to the city from Euclid and will occupy the front flats in the Adams block. Mr. Misner will continue his business at Euclid except wheat buying, which he will not engage in this fall.

—T. A. Hoverstad, of the experiment station, was the first man in Crookston to buy one of the badges which A. D. Stephens received Monday morning. It reads, "This carries him 100 miles toward home," the "him" referring to any member of the 13th regiment.

—The Great Northern coast train arrived in St. Paul on Thursday afternoon with the front of the engine literally plastered with the remains of debris of grasshoppers. The train crew gave the information that the train ran into an immense swarm of hoppers near Barnesville.

—Yesterday at Fosston occurred the installation of the pastor of the Congregation church at that place. Representatives were present from the Congregational churches at Ada, Fertile, McIntosh, Solway, Bemidji and Crookston, the last named being represented by W. L. Vanner. The services were in charge of Rev. Mr. Stickney, of Fargo, and Rev. Mr. Herrick from Minneapolis.

—Chief Gowyea reports that things have been very quite in police quarters for some time. Comparatively few bobos have put in an appearance and these have been so summarily dealt with that the story they have told to prospective comers evidently deterred the latter from visiting these parts. Then, too, work is so plentiful and wages so high that the idle man nowadays is the exception.

—The horticultural exhibits at the Minnesota state fairs have a reputation for being unusually fine for a northern state. Despite the handicap of poor soil, ill deserved of being an impossible fruit state, Minnesota has been raising some of the finest fruit in the country for many years past. And at the coming fair, which opens at Hamline, on Sept. 4, the exhibit will be more than ever a practical example of the possibilities of the state in this line of husbandry. The display will be luscious and tempting, and will attract a great deal of attention, but there is another side to the display which is not always remembered. This is its educational feature. The farmers of the state might profit much more than they do if they would study the fruit exhibits at the fair with care, and by questioning and observing learn how they themselves might go and do likewise.

—Miss Winnifred Samson is teaching in the town of Lowell.

—Cyrus Sweet of Fisher was a Sunday visitor in Crookston.

Mrs. Susanna Fry will give an address at the M. E. church tonight.

—Miss Mathew of Winnipeg is visiting with her cousin, Mrs. George F. Stone.

—Miss Ida Stone was at home to a number of her friends last Friday evening.

—Oscar Holcomb of Warren went to Iowa Monday night to get a car load of horses.

—H. N. Gjerdingen, Halstad's popular hotel proprietor, quits the business this month.

—James Crookshank has taken charge of the St. Anthony & Dakota Elevator at Mallory.

—Mrs. W. C. Lee, a sister of Mrs. Berg, reached Crookston from Buffalo, N. Y., last Tuesday morning.

—Mr. and Mrs. Hans Melgaard and family spent Saturday and Sunday in the city at the home of Halvor Steenerson.

—J. D. Sheedy, who has been adjusting hail losses for the Austin company in this section, returned home last Sunday night.

—A. G. Andersen sells the Heath & Milligan best Paint, the purest and best House Paint on the market. Call and get a color card.

—Chicken hunting parties galore will wander over the country to the north and east of here. The season opens tomorrow.

—Sam LaDue spent part of Saturday in Crookston. He soon leaves to take up his duties as pedagogue in one of the high schools of the state.

—Miss Wiess of Warren left Monday night for a musical conservatory in the province of Quebec, Canada, where she will spent the next two years in study.

—C. C. Knappen continues to boom the Turtle River region and not without results. Dr. Thomas is the latest to purchase a lodge in that vast wilderness.

—Buffalo Bill's Wild West and Congress of Rough Riders of the World will appear at Fargo on Sept. 8. Among other features the Battle of San Juan Hill will be reproduced.

—Mr. Chas. Kunkel, of Ulen, and Miss Eva Cook, of Fertile, were married last Thursday evening at the home of the bride in Fertile. A large number of friends were present at the ceremony.

—Rev. Ben Iorns, pastor of the Congregational church at Fertile, passed through the city yesterday on his way to Fosston to attend the installation services of the Rev. P. W. Yarrow.

—Tom Shaughnessy, who has for some time been foreman in the JOURNAL office in this city, left yesterday morning for Warren where he has accepted a position on the Warren Register force.

—The editor was at Fosston last Friday and brought back with him a large number of samples of the goods which the Fosston Woolen Mills are turning out. These samples will be used as an exhibit at the state fair.

—Miss Ida Stone, who graduated from the West Superior Normal school last spring, has been elected as teacher of the intermediate department in the South Crookston schools and Miss Nellie McGuire will have the primary department.

—A company of sportsmen from the south passed through Crookston last Saturday on their way to the prairie chicken fields of North Dakota. They had a special car and were apply provided with bird dogs and other necessary hunting equipment.

—Father Thellon informs the JOURNAL that the Gentilly cheese factory will make an exhibit at the state fair. Samples, also, of the excellent cheese made at this manufactory, one of the most prosperous in Polk county, will appear in the county's exhibit which is being arranged by George Purvis.

—When the JOURNAL reporter was over in South Crookston recently he noticed men at work putting in a new culvert on south Main street at the foot of the hill leading north from the saw mill. This was a much needed improvement as the lower part of this hill has been at times almost impassible for heavy loads.

—The eighth state conference of charities and corrections is to be held at Duluth commencing the evening of Sept. 6. The conference is fortunate in being able to present in its list of speakers the names of Dr. W. W. Folwell, Attorney General Douglas, Bishop M. N. Gilbert, Dr. H. H. Hart, Capt. C. E. Faulkner and other speakers of note.

—J. F. Hetler, superintendent of the public schools at Buxton, N. D., reached Crookston Sunday from Grafton, N. D., where he has been teaching in the summer training school. He leaves today and Mrs. Hetler, who has been visiting with friends in the city for some time, leaves tonight for the east. She will be accompanied by her father, Comrade Zarracher, who goes to the National Encampment of the G. A. R. at Philadelphia.

—A full line of Furniture Hard Oil Coach and Varnishes at A. G. Andersen and prices to suit.

—Paul Carpenter, of McIntosh, and Frank Carpenter, of Duluth, were the guests over Sunday of George Carpenter.

—Frank Brown, John Cromb, Jr., and Charley Clements returned Saturday afternoon from a ten days' outing at Wolf and Cass lakes.

—Sylvester Peterson and Boyd Monroe have received from Washington their commissions as members of the Crookston civil service board.

—Will Smith and Archie Hillard are back from their trip to their claims out east. If they did not strike gold they certainly brought back with them some copper color at least.

—The state fair this year will hold a full week—from Monday morning until Saturday night. Every exhibit must be in place and ready for inspection when the gates open Monday morning, and the Saturday evening program will be the most brilliant of the week. As the cities present no special attractions, the fair will be the whole thing and everything will move with a vim that will not keep people waiting and wondering impatiently what will come next. The managers have spent several thousand dollars to make a great all-round fair, with something good in it for everybody, and they propose to keep things humming from Monday morning until Saturday night in order to get in all the good things they promise.

Teachers' Certificates.

On Monday last certificates for Polk county teachers were received by County Superintendent Kaasa from the state department of public instruction, and the number received shows that the standing of the teachers in Polk county is way above the average. Of the 125 who tried the examination 101 received second grade certificates and three first grade. Of the 21 who failed to get the desired certificate only eight had taught and some had not taught long enough so that a certificate could be issued to them in case their scholarship was sufficiently high. To some of those who did not get second grade certificates from the state department third grade certificates will be issued by Supt. Kaasa, these to be good for only a limited time.

New Style of Money Order.

After Sept. 4 a new style domestic money order will be issued by the postoffice department. The new form will be somewhat smaller than the one now in use. Its dimensions will be about those of the ordinary bank draft. The color of the order is blue, with a vignette of very light blue. The time and the intricate lathe work, it is said, will render counterfeiting very difficult, but as an additional safeguard a horizontal water mark composed of the initials U. S. M. O. in broad capital letters, will be wrought into the paper on which the new forms are to be printed. In recognition for the requirement for revenue stamps, there will be on the back of the new order a separate space for the stamp of banks through which it may be passed for collection.

Lieut. Decker Off for the Presidio.

Sunday last Lieutenant Decker, on his way to the Presidio, California, where he will join his regiment, stopped off in Crookston to say a last goodbye to his numerous friends here. His regiment, the 34th, it is expected will be the first of the three new regiments that have been recruited to suit for the Philippines. This regiment is more or less a home regiment. It was recruited in the states comprising the Dakotas and Colorado, and Lieut. Decker, on his way to the Presidio, will be one-quarter of the recruits are from Minnesota, thanks to the energetic work of Lieut. Decker. At the Presidio the time spent will be used for target practice, it being the desire of the war department to teach the men to shoot rather than the fine points of the drill.

Minnesota State University.

The University of Minnesota will open Sept. 4; registration will begin on Sept. 5, and close Sept. 12. At 8:30 a. m. Sept. 12, all classes will be called and regular work begin. This does not include the Medical Department which opens Sept. 19.

For the accommodation of new students the University Young Men's Christian Association opens its building to them.

At their building they will conduct an information bureau: will have a complete list of suitable rooms and boarding places for students: will conduct an employment bureau for deserving students who want work. They will do everything in their power to start the new student in college life. Upon arriving at the University the student should go directly to the Y. M. C. A. building. No charge whatever is made for their services.

They also publish a Students' Handbook of the University which will be mailed free to all who are coming as students if they will apply to L. T. Savage, General Secretary, Y. M. C. A., University of Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minn.

Forget not the Beautiful.

Archbishop Ireland recently said: "I am most certainly in favor of a forest reservation inthe Northern part of the state. Nature there is so beautiful, with its forests, its lakes and its rivers, that to change its whole aspect by turning it over to industry would seem almost a profanation.

"Industry has, of course, its exactions, but let here and there be some few spots of primeval America wrenched from its domain and so preserved as to show to future generations in miniature what this land once was like. The danger in America is that everything is apt to be made subservient to material progress, but little attention being given to the aesthetic, and yet upon this even more than upon matter does man feed and thrive. We have too few parks in our cities, too few boulevards in our cities, too few forest reserves in the country at large.

"Returning recently from Europe, where so much is being done for the beautiful, I cannot but perceive our own deficiencies in this matter. Let us have the useful, but let us not forget the beautiful."

NEW INVENTIONS.

Novel and Queer Devices Sent to the Patent Office.

A Washington dispatch to the St. Louis Republic states that the latest patent office guests contains a number of interesting inventions. A man in Illinois solves the problem of applying a poultice to a horse's foot by constructing what he terms a "veterinary poultice boot." The idea is to provide an effective means for applying a poultice or other medicament to a horse's hoof and keeping it in place while the horse is moving about. The boot is quite simple, easily attached, and when applied it is impossible for the animal to remove it by stamping.

One of the most novel devices in the way of a railway appliance is an invention proposed to an Englishman. By a simple clockwork arrangement it is possible to record the movements of railway trains, carriages, sleeps, motors of all kinds, and, further, it records the time a train is in motion and when it stops. Its most practical use is in determining uneven portions of the road bed, making it possible for repair men to go at once to the uneven surface and make it smooth.

A man in Pennsylvania, who has had unpleasant experiences, has patented a device by means of which a teakettle is automatically lifted from a stove. To accomplish this he uses two springs, one controlling a lever, which automatically rises as the contents of the teakettle diminish. By the use of this attachment a kettle filled with preserves may be left on the stove, and when it has boiled sufficiently it automatically rises from the fire and prevents boiling over.

A combination of a couch and bathtub is the invention of a man from Texas. He says that his object in making this invention is to provide an ornamental, strong and serviceable couch which may be transformed at a moment's notice into a bathtub. A man may perform his ablutions with ease and comfort and then pull down the covers, stretch out and take a nap. One of the strangest patents was that recently granted to a man from Michigan for burial purposes. The dead lungs are quite ghoulish and show appropriateness for lowering coffins into a grave without the assistance of the gravediggers in their mournful black jackets and long ropes.

A young lady from England has obtained a patent for a cycling shirt, and the young ladies who have seen it declare it is one of the best they have seen. The object of the invention is to prevent the dress from slipping, and the rear of the side portions of the shirt from being strained about the hips. Successfully to the action of the bicycle on the fore part of the skirt which portion, or from below the knees down by the wind. This object is accomplished by means of plates or skirts of the same which are attached to the shirt in such a manner that they project outward and downward, the other side of the dress [illegible] back wheel of the machine, [illegible] means of the [illegible] the [illegible] of the wind.

AN ULTIMATUM NEXT

EVENTS IN TRANSVAAL TAKE A TURN FOR THE WORSE.

Advice of Cecil Rhodes to Force Matters Is to Be Carried Out—Many Fleeing From Danger—Fifteen Thousand More Left the Transvaal Since the Crisis Began—Trade Is Practically at a Standstill and Much Distress Exists.

LONDON, Aug. 30.—The Pretoria correspondent of The Daily Chronicle says: "Events have taken an alarming turn. Great Britain, at the request of the Uitlanders' commission, has enlarged the original demands of Sir Alfred Milner, the British high commissioner, and is adopting the view of Cecil Rhodes that President Kruger will never withstand an ultimatum.

"I have, however, high authority for asserting that President Kruger, the volksraad and the nation will unitedly resist an unconditional demand for giving effect to the Milner programme, but will concede reforms on the conditions already reported."

GROWS MORE SERIOUS.

English Press Takes a Dark View of the Transvaal Situation.

LONDON, Aug. 30.—Commenting on the declaration of President Kruger of the Transvaal government, to the effect that the South African republic adheres to its latest offer and would not make any further concessions, the afternoon papers draw attention to the increased seriousness of the Transvaal crisis, but at the same time they express uncertainty regarding the nature of the concessions beyond which President Kruger says he will not go.

No official announcement has been made of these, though they are generally understood to be a five-year franchise and an increased outlander representation.

"If this is correct," The Globe says, "it cannot be long before diplomacy has to stand aside, as of no further service."

The Pall Mall Gazette says: "President Kruger's adherence to these would mean interference to impossible conditions, and if so, the situation has come to an ugly head."

QUITTING THE TRANSVAAL.

Fifteen Thousand People Have Left Since the Crisis Began.

LONDON, Aug. 30.—The Cape Town correspondent of The Daily Mail says:

A pitiable scene was witnessed at the railway station on the arrival from Johannesburg of 130 children whose parents are too poor to count them selves. It is estimated that 15,000 people have left the Transvaal since the crisis began.

In the house of the assembly the government announced that it was considering a proposal to afford good facilities for women and children to leave Johannesburg.

Bechuanaland is in a state of ferment, owing to the fears of a Boer raid. Colonel Baden-Powell's forces are now wholly inadequate to protect such an extended frontier and the Boers appear to be quietly concentrating in the western part of the Transvaal.

GREAT DISTRESS PREVAILS.

Trade Practically at a Standstill in South Africa.

CAPE TOWN, Aug. 30.—Owing to the continued tension and warlike conditions, trade in many places is practically at a standstill, and great distress prevails among the poorer classes both at Johannesburg and here.

It is reported that 300 horses which were shipped at Durban, Natal, previously for the Transvaal, have been held, pending instructions on the subject.

Must Be Prepared for War.

JOHANNESBURG, Aug. 30.—The Standard and Diggers' News credits General Joubert, the commander-in-chief of the Transvaal forces and vice president of the republic, with the statement that although he is personally desirous to do everything to preserve peace, the situation is such that the republic must be prepared for war.

CUBA SELF-SUSTAINING.

Excess of Receipts Over Expenditures for the First Six Months of '99.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 28.—The war department has given out for publication an interesting statement of the financial condition of the island of Cuba. It shows that under the management of the United States government the receipts of the island from Jan. 1 1899, to June 30 of the current year, exceed the expenditures by the very handsome sum of $1,489,021. This statement probably will be a surprise to many persons who had thought that Cuba under the military occupation of the United States was not self-sustaining. During the period named the receipts from all sources were $6,982,010; disbursements, $5,501,988. Of the money disbursed $1,712,014 was expended in construction.

FRENCH SENATE MAY MEET

Will Sit as a High Court and Try Paul Deroulede.

PARIS, Aug. 29.—The cabinet has almost determined to summon the senate to sit as a high court for the trial of M. Paul Deroulede, member of the chamber of deputies and president of the League of Patriots, and the other prisoners arrested recently on the charge of conspiring against the government. It is believed that the decree summoning the senate to meet for this purpose will be signed at an early meeting of the council.

Ambushed at Cebu.

MANILA, Aug. 28.—3:40 p. m.—Four men of the Twenty-third regiment, stationed at Cebu, were ambushed by natives in the hills and three of them killed. The fourth man succeeded in making his escape. Details of the affair are lacking.

RUSSIA TAKING A HAND.

Would Prevent Settlement of Differences Between England and America.

LONDON, Aug. 28.—Upon authority of undoubted reliability, a reporter of the Associated Press has ascertained that into the Alaska dispute there has crept the craftiness of Russian diplomacy. Russia, it can be stated, will do everything, at every possible moment, to prevent the practical cohesion of the two great English-speaking nations. In all European chancelleries instructions have been received to thwart the American understanding.

A prominent diplomat who is intimately acquainted with the details of the negotiations for the past two years said to the reporter of the Associated Press:

"In any arrangement looking to a working agreement between England and the United States, Russia sees the defeat of her dearest projects. I believe her intense activity in China is to no small extent due to her fear that Anglo-Saxon power, once centralized, will sweep all before it in the far East. Lending regal realization of this nightmare she is making hay while the sun shines, and in the unenviable intricacies to the utmost to tie the hands of those who are working to materialize Anglo-American sentiment. The latest evidence of this is in the Alaska affair. Though, strictly speaking, it is a matter of international politics and would have been settled long ago if left a duty to Great Britain and the United States, Russia has managed to assume interests never dreamed of by America, by distorting facts. It has been impossible for me to divulge exactly how up to what extent Russia out her paws into the dispute. But the attitude of her press, official [illegible] core, is quite sufficient to show [illegible] esives."

FAVORABL... O DREYFUS.

Majority of the Day's Witnesses Testify for Him.

RENNES, Aug. 29.—The most of the evidence of the day in the Dreyfus trial, for a change, was in favor of the prisoner. Five witnesses were for him and two against him.

The most interesting testimony was Chief Handwriting Expert Charuyer, who said that since the brochure he had changed his opinion, which is fatal to against and is now in favor of Dreyfus. He believes Henry was not the author of the bordereau. His candid confession of error was received with murmurs of satisfaction in court, which brought forth discreet applause in spite of Colonel Jouaust's disapproval, when he solemnly ordered silence.

"I declare here on my soul and conscience that the bordereau was written by Esterhazy."

Paty du Clam's Deposition.

The most important incident, however, was Colonel Jouaust's reference to Major Carriere's request that a rogatory commission be instructed to take Colonel du Paty de Clam's deposition. The initiative came purely from the government witnesses. Matthieu Dreyfus's deposition, because it allows Du Clam to escape cross-examination, which is the only thing worth having under the present circumstances. Du Paty de Clam being a witness for the prosecution Major Carriere will simply prepare a list of questions which an examining magistrate will put to Du Paty de Clam at his residence, and nobody supposes that the witness will be very much embarrassed by the interrogatories.

FRENCH WILL NOT BELIEVE

Germany Thinks the Case of Dreyfus Hopeless.

BERLIN, Aug. 30.—The Cologne Gazette, in an inspired article replying to the foreign press says:

After the failure of Major Panizzarch and Colonel Schneider to convince the French people, Colonel Picquart Esterhazy's intervention in behalf of one innocently sentenced would be futile, since German sympathy cannot be more than can be expected by Count von Buelow's solemn declaration, which were given as representing the sentiments of the emperor, and Colonel Schwarzkoppen's proof of both of his declarations in November, 1897, that he had never had any relations with Dreyfus.

The Tageblatt says the government might name the real spy.

IN THEIR HOME STATE.

Continuous Ovation for the Returning Nebraska Volunteers.

OMAHA, Neb., Aug. 30.—The progress of the trains hearing the First Nebraska through the state is one continuous ovation. At every station where a stop is made the people are present in great crowds to cheer the returning soldiers, and where the trains do not stop the depot platforms are crowded with enthusiastic eager to catch even a fleeting glimpse of the returning heroes. A cheer and a waving of flag, answered in like manner from men on the train and it is over until the next town is reached. Even in the country fields are flying from houses by the main road and the people on the farms wave a glad greeting to the soldiers, who are the idols of all Nebraska.

NEARLY ALL DISBURSED.

Cuban Soldiers Have Received $9,520,000 So Far.

HAVANA, Aug. 30.—The commission which has been engaged in distributing the $9,000,000 appropriated for the purpose of paying off Cuban soldiers who surrender their arms to the American officials has returned to Havana. It reports that 19,000 persons have received their share of the gratuity and that the total amount of money distributed is $9,520,000.

The Thirty-first En Route.

CINCINNATI, Aug. 28.—The Thirty-first regiment, U. S. V., is now en route to San Francisco by the Pennsylvania railroad via St. Louis. The troops left in four sections, followed by a baggage train. They expect to arrive at San Francisco by Sept. 2. Only four men were left in the hospital.

PROVES A FAILURE

POLICY OF CONCILIATION HAS DISCOURAGING RESULTS.

Two Majors Elected by Popular Vote in the Philippines Now in Power—Treachery—Rebel Sympathy Stirs Majority Favors Revolution at Once—Elected Officials of the Same Opinion. Trend of Affairs Tends to Make Lopez Disliked by the Americans.

MANILA, Aug. 22, via Hong Kong, Aug. 28.—Recent events have proved somewhat discouraging to officials who are trying to encourage war with a policy of conciliation. Two new municipal governments have collapsed through the treachery of the mayors. Today the mayor of San Pedro Macati, who was elected by the people under the direction of Professor Dean Worcester of the United States military commission for the Philippines, was brought to Manila and lodged in jail. The United States officers at San Pedro Macati found that he was using his office in securing information for the Filipino army. Disguised insurgents were helping him. The mayor of Balinag was also arrested and confined in the same prison. The Americans caught him passing between the line of the two armies with an incriminating document, which the authorities secured. Another prominent native mayor is under surveillance.

In Prison When Elected.

When the election at Imus, which General Lawton and Professor Worcester engineered, was announced, the Americans inquired as to the whereabouts of the people's choice and were informed that he was in prison at Bilibid, where the authorities had placed him on suspicion of being a revolutionist. He was released and installed as mayor.

Such events and conditions tend to give color to the assertions of foreign residents acquainted with the native character, who insist that a great majority of the natives sympathize with the insurgents and elect officials whom they know to be revolutionists.

For two weeks Manila has been perfected at night with unusual vigilance. Apparently the authorities are expecting trouble.

The trend of affairs tends to make the policy of leniency unpopular among the Americans. When they abandoned Morong they burned the village town.

FILIPINO ANARCHY.

According to Reports It Prevails to an Indescribable Extent.

LONDON, Aug. 29.—The Lisbon correspondent of the Reuter Telegram company cables that reliable news received there states that Senor Buzeta says that an indescribable state of anarchy prevails. The Americans, according to these advices, occupy a region of 50 miles there; around the town of Iloilo they occupy a radius of nine miles, and around Cebu they occupy a small radius. The rest of the country, it is added, is in the hands of Filipinos.

The correspondent says it is reported the Filipinos have murdered the crew of the steamer Saturnus.

The steamer Saturnus of the Compania Marituma, cruising under the American flag, was boarded recently by insurgent trenches at San Fernando and burned Aug. 2.

POLICY FOR PHILIPPINES.

President Briefly Outlines It in a Speech at Ocean Grove.

OCEAN GROVE, N. J., Aug. 28.—President McKinley in an address here during the afternoon said:

"I believe there is more love for our country, and that more people love the flag than ever before. Wherever the flag is raised, it stands not for despotism and oppression, but for liberty, opportunity and humanity, and what that flag has done for us we want it to do for all people and for the territories and the fortunes of war, have come within its jurisdiction. That flag does not mean one thing in the United States and another in Porto Rico and the Philippines.

"There has been some doubt in some quarters respecting the policy of the government in the Philippines. I see no harm in stating it in this presence. Force first, and then with charity for all, establish a government of law and order, protecting life and property and conducive to the well-being of the people, who will participate in it under the Stars and Stripes."

WHEELER AT THE FRONT.

Will Be Given Command of General Funston's Brigade.

MANILA, Aug. 30.—6:10 p. m.—General Wheeler has been ordered to report to General Lawton at once. He will be given command of General Funston's brigade, which Colonel Liscum has commanded temporarily. General Wheeler will proceed to San Fernando in the morning after having spent a week in comfortably visiting the front.

General Wheeler said to a representative of the Associated Press:

"I am much pleased with the situation. I think that when Major General Otis gets more troops we will be in still rapid progress. The country is very favorable for military operations as I supposed. The insurgents can't tax country's immunity as [illegible]

The railroad to Angeles will be restored within a week or ten days. General Arthur will advance his [illegible] to that place.

NEW USE FOR A BICYCLE

Street Cleaner Tried It on a Paper Chasing Tour.

EXPERIMENT MADE IN NEW YORK.

Work Was Done Into the Mail of Time Required by the Old Method of Trundling a Dag Carrier About. Test Likely to Result in Adoption of Bicycles.

The street cleaning department in New York made its first experiment the other day with the bicycle as an adjunct to the work of gathering waste paper and other light material with which the roadways and sidewalks may be littered on Sunday. Hitherto all the service has been performed by men equipped with the two wheeled contrivance called a hag carrier. This is a small iron vehicle supporting the open canvas sack with the "white wings" trundles along. Anywhere there is anything to be picked up one may usually see him on the beats that constitute a working day to cover his ground. By means of the bicycle it is expected that each section may be gone over once here before the day is spent and twice if that be needful to keep the streets in good Sunday trim.

The experiment was made in that part of the city known in the department as section 15, which is in charge of Acting Foreman Michael Foley, says the New York Sun. This section is bounded by Fifth and Thirteenth avenues, Seventeenth and Twenty-second streets. When the matter of devising some speedier way of collecting the accumulations on Sunday was discussed, the tricycle was suggested—a tricycle of tax type used by bakers, laundrymen and other small tradesmen as delivery wagons. Nothing more was regarded as rather expensive and altogether not a great improvement, and some one inquired if there was anything the matter with the bicycle. Surely no objection could be urged on the ground of speed, but could a man carry a sack of paper and rags on such a skittish rig? Section 15's foreman was of the opinion that it could be done, for he had seen Brooklyn fathers carrying large baskets full of children on the front of their wheels. Permission was given him to go ahead and make the experiment, but it must be done with men already in the department and familiar with the work in other respects. A further condition set Foley to guessing.

Patrick Long a volunteer, presented himself in the person of Dominick Alfano, young and agile, but a veteran in New York. He had a wheel and could ride it not only in ordinary style but with speed and various tricks that led von him a prize in the contests of a society to which he belongs. And to was intrusted the responsibility of testing the proposed innovation. It was told that he could have something to do with the wheel to hold the bag, but he said he did not need it, that he had often thought of it before and knew just how to fix the handle bars so that the bag could be carried and lifted off as often as necessary without trouble. In fact he had often thought of making the same suggestion to the foreman, but was afraid of being laughed at.

Bright and early the other morning Alfano was out with his wheel gathering up the paper with an air and dispatch that fully justified the venture and those of possible rehearsals had before clearing a public appearance. He had turned the handle bars to a position almost vertical and this was the only unusual thing about his wheel. As he sped along he held the ends of the bag against the bars and kept sharp eye to right and left for his game. Now and then he would dismount, wheel over a paper or a cigar stump and, carrying his bag along, fall to gathering up the paper all around and stuff it into the sack then hurry to the wheel, mount, keeping a hold on the ends of the bag as he grasped the handle bars and away a flue pace.

At last he rolled the top of the bag down so that its bottom was far from the tire of the front wheel, but as the bag filled he would let out a reef at the top, and so continue until it would hold no more. Of course the bottom was somewhat nearer the wheel and the task of keeping free seemingly greater. Apparently it gave Alfano no trouble at all. Even if it did touch now and then he did not mind and kept up his established pace. "It brushes once in awhile," he said, "but that's nothing. See the time I'm making. This amuses all paper gathering records."

He covered his proposed beat, which included the entire fifteenth section, in less than half the time consumed with the new automatic bag carrier. Wherever he appeared people stopped to watch him at his work, and particularly were they interested when the bag got nearly full and he mounted and pedaled off without the slightest difficulty. When the bag reached the regulation fullness, he would ride to a side street because it is dewey.—Atchison Globe.

SYNOPSIS.

Chapter I—Tom Scott, a New England farmhand, decides to go to Klondike to search for gold. In Boston he requests a Mr. Avery from footpads, and, as his new acquaintance has gone to Europe, he asks Tom to accompany him, and this invitation is accepted. They take passage on the Seabird, a sailing vessel bound for Pylaea.

Chapter II—They board the vessel and meet Music, Good Rider, whom the captain has shanghaied. Rider tells them of an old enemy of Tom's and tells how he has driven of deserting the ship of which the captain and sailor with him several thousand dollars of the owner's gold. Tom's father had not been home since the prosecution had been made, but Tom, then a boy, refused to believe it, and attempted to whip Rider. In the fight he broke the mate's nose. He left the vessel and went aboard the vessel, vowing to avenge the broken nose.

Chapter III—Seeing the passage Mr. Avery is knocked overboard accidentally and Tom gains entrance to the hold by jumping into the ocean after him. The man is injured internally and about to die. He calls Tom to him and tells him all his money, $1,000, is in his grip, and tells him where he goes which his partners have discovered and where he was going to join them. He gives Tom a letter from one of them which gives direction for finding the territory, the possession of which and Avery's will will serve as an identification when he gets there.

Chapter IV—Rider hears the man's confession with Tom and threatens to expose the papers and Tom said which they entitle the holder to. In San Francisco Tom is waylaid and robbed by Rider of the papers and what money he had with him, but the majority of his cash was on board the Seabird. Tom is found by the second mate in the Seabird's hold, and he left it before it was to be sold, and takes his letter belongings. Rider escapes and starts for Dyea.

Chapter V—At Dyea Rider meets Tom's friend, Music, who tells him of Tom's loss and is returning home with a fortune. He asks for his son and his brother, and is told that both are dead, saying that Tom died in Pierce and was buried by the captain of the Seabird. After giving Rider gold enough to help him reach the gold fields, Tom starts for Dawson City to find Avery's partners, and from him learns that his son is dead. He then starts northward for the gold fields ten days before.

CHAPTER VI.

GREEN TURNS DETECTIVE.

When Tom Scott opened his eyes to an understanding of what was passing around him he gazed curiously around his poorly furnished room. Then as his eyes fell upon the second mate of the Seabird reading by the window he said in a faint whisper:

"Mr. Green!"

Down went the paper and the boot-ler sailor hastened to his side, exclaiming:

"He's come to at last! You mustn't ask any questions, Mr. Scott! The doctor gave me my orders just now. You'll be all right in a day or two."

"But where am—"

"Belay!" was the firm response, as the watcher placed his broad hand gently on Tom's mouth. "I ain't going against orders. Lay right still and don't talk. Here, take this and you'll be as well as soon as you got your reckoning."

As he spoke he held a glass to Tom's lips with one hand, raising the patient tenderly with the other with a gentleness that told of considerable practice.

Tom was too weak to resist, and swallowed the contents of the glass, but before he was about to try to speak again, when his nurse raised his hand warningly. Tom would have made another effort, but he felt an overpowering sense of drowsiness, and a moment later he was forced to yield. His head fell back and he dropped into a restful slumber.

When he again awoke the second mate was dozing in his chair. Tom's head was clear now and he felt stronger. As he watched the sleeping man the events of the fateful night began to come back to him, and, as he remembered his loss, he could not help muttering an exclamation of despair.

"Aye, aye, sir!"

It was the watcher who replied, and as he spoke he came quickly to the bedside, saying:

"I must have dropped off a minute. How do you feel now?"

"Pretty weak," was the faint response, "and I'm hungry."

"Good! You'll do! You'll be all right in a week if I'm any judge."

As he spoke a purdy man entered the room, and the sailor added:

"Here's the doctor now. I'll leave him to see you while I run down to the vessel and tell Cap'n Coffin you're all right aloft."

When the doctor left Tom he said, cheerfully:

"You are all right now, young man. Eat all you want and you'll be able to travel in a week or two. It's only weakness now, and that is soon mended."

He proved a reliable prophet, and Tom felt his strength return each day. In a day or two he was out, and at the expiration of the week he felt perfectly well, with the exception of a slight languor which still remained.

He said nothing about the loss of the papers at first, but when he learned from Capt. Coffin how the second mate had offered to spend his hard-earned savings and give up his cherished plan of going to the mines, he determined to make him his confidant, and offer to share with him if they could find the parties to whom he had been directed.

After carefully turning the matter over he was convinced that the robber would probably place no reliance on the rude will, even if he took the trouble to read it. It was more than probable that he had thrown both papers away when he rifled the belt, paying attention only to the tidy sum he had secured by his crime.

In this case it would only be necessary to find the old miner's friends and tell the truth, to which the second mate could certify. There was another precaution, too, which might be taken, and that was to obtain a sworn statement from the captain of the Seabird as to the identity of both Tom and the second officer, together with the fact that John Avery was the former's roommate and had died at sea.

Tom easily obtained this in writing and he then told his secret to Green, who listened in open-mouthed amazement, but with a kindling face that showed he had no doubt of the absolute truth of what he heard.

"Now," concluded Tom, "that's the whole story, and we're going for a wild goose chase, but there it is. Will you go in with me and share and share alike? I know the papers by heart, and they are probably lost, so we will be all right. What do you say?"

"Say? Why, what would any man say? I'm with you as long as I have a drop of blood left. Of course I'll go, but I have hanged little money."

"Don't talk money to me!" interrupted Tom, quickly. "I know what you did for me before you knew I had a cent. I have $4,000 left, and the first thing is for you to take half of it. I'll feel safer then."

"Don't you think anyone knew you had them papers?" asked the second mate after awhile. "Sure you never mentioned them or showed them?"

"Why," replied Tom, "I did not mention them to a single person, and they were never out of the belt except when I was looking at them alone by myself."

"Was the money you lost in the belt, too?"

"Yes—no, come to think of it, I had it in my pocket-book. It was handy and I put the most of it in the safe that very day."

"What made you do that?"

"Capt. Coffin advised me to," replied Tom, a little surprised at the persistency of his friend's questioning. "Why do you ask?"

"Blemme," was the thoughtful reply. "I'm figuring up how many folks could possibly have seen those papers."

"I tell you—"

"Belay a bit!" broke in Green. "Let me finish my calculation. Two heads are better'n one. The old man gave the papers to you aboard ship, in your stateroom?"

Tom nodded, and the other went on:

"Now, who could have seen them when they was in your room? Let's count up. The cap'n, the mate and we is the only ones that had any chance, 'cause no one else is allowed in the cabin beside the cook. The cook went to sea long ago, which he wouldn't done if he hadn't money to buy rum nor any such papers as them in his pocket. We know Cap'n Coffin didn't slug you, for he ain't that kind, and if he was he wouldn't have told you to put your money in the safe and felt so bad over your hurt."

"What are you driving at?" asked Tom, rather amused at the businesslike way in which the sailor was checking off his points on the ends of his fingers.

"Then there's the mate!"

Green paused and looked triumphantly at Tom.

"The mate's room was next to yours. He might have seen them. He was in his room when you came out and said the old man was dying. He skipped out the same day you was hurt and give no notice. He never come nigh you at all. Blee—"

"What do you mean?" demanded Tom, starting to his feet, as for the first time the other's meaning began to dawn upon him.

"He hated you like poison, and—"

"Yes! Yes! I see it all!" cried Tom, clenching his fists. "I see why he left so suddenly. I had a ticket in my pocket-by an excursion train for Seattle! It was only good that day! He is the robber. I could swear to it! How did you come to know of his going?"

"'Cause the chap that did it would have taken your money out of your pocket, and left it out. He wouldn't have took no chances hunting for a belt unless he knew there was one there. I see you must be some one that knew of the papers, and then the rest was easy. Now come down aboard and we'll see if we can't pump it."

Tom followed him to the Seabird, and they soon stood in the mate's stateroom.

"See here!"

The second officer pointed as he spoke to a narrow crack in the partition which separated it from Tom's room. It needed but a glance to show that it had been recently enlarged.

"That's what did the business," he continued, "and he's off too with a gold mine. He's got a big start, and what's to prevent his passing himself off as Mr. Tom Scott on those people?"

"He couldn't do that!" exclaimed Tom.

"Why not? Was there any description of you in the paper the old man gave you? How are they to know?"

"But I've got a statement in my pocket from Capt. Coffin, telling who we are, and all about it!" insisted Tom.

"What good is that when the mate is on the spot, perhaps, with his documents, and how can you make anyone believe you are the right chap? Look here, Scott, there's only one thing to do. We've got to go after that son of a sea cook, and take the law in our own hands. Soldering will turn up to help us out. After all I don't know but that there is something in what you say. All he could tell about Avery was what he saw on board the vessel. He never talked any with him, and don't know anything about his family or business. Now, I dare say the old chap told you a good many things about himself, didn't he?"

"Yes," replied Tom, eagerly, "he told me all about his family, and I can soon convince anyone that the mate is lying if he claims to be me. I've got the captain's statement, you know, sworn to before a justice of the peace, and all witnessed. The mate will have a hard time to get round that."

"Belike so," was the doubtful reply, "but it's a wild country where we're going, and I don't believe papers will be of much account there. We're two to one, anyhow, and if we overhaul the rascal we shall find some way to get square with him."

"The sooner we start the better, then," decided Tom. "Come on, let's be off, and—see about it at once."

It did not take the two friends long to make their simple preparations. The money remaining in the captain's safe was equally divided between them and worn in belts. Tickets to Seattle were procured, and the following day, after a hearty farewell to the big-hearted skipper, the two young men started on their adventurous trip.

At Seattle there was no steamer ready to sail for Dyea and they decided to continue to Victoria, where they learned they would arrive in time to purchase their outfit and embark on the steamer Islander, which sailed on the 15th of the month, and was due in Dyea five days later.

At Victoria they found the streets thronged with men, each with an earnest look on his face as he hustled about. They were from all walks in life, but all animated by the same purpose. Some were buying horses, others were going to secure picks with the famous "diamond hitch" which alone will answer the purpose. Others were purchasing heavy woolens, belts to wear about the waist with flaps that buttoned down over the compartments.

Exposed for sale on every hand were buckskin bags to hold gold, heavy rubshod shoes, moccasins of moose hide, with socks as thick as a man's hand and reaching to the knee. mittens, hats, coats. flour, beans, saddles, coffee, sacks—and everything was for the Klondike!

Men talked and thought of nothing else. All were interested. Many of them were to sail on the Islander with our friends, who were fortunately in time to secure passage. Some were going by one route and some by another after reaching Skaguay, but no one seemed to mention the Dalton trail. a fact which both Tom and his friend marked with satisfaction.

The purchase of an outfit would have been a serious stumbling block but for the advice of the storekeepers, who, however, were not only very honest, but very well posted as to the requirements of a miner. Tom's knowledge of horses came in very handy, and he soon found six good animals which promised to serve his purpose. To get these and the other purchases on board the steamer in time kept both men very busy, but it was safely accomplished at last, and they saw Victoria fade about four inches in diameter, and earth in the middle of the size of ordinary blotting paper. The inner part of the ring comprises a mechanism for registering impressions and rejected coins may not be widely different from the usual tabulating stamp. Just inside the door one finds what looks like a small iron brace, one side screwed to the box, the free end having the letters of the route and the number of the box, as, for example, "CC 1."

When the carrier opens the box, he simply inserts the free end of the brace within a slot in the device, which he carries in his letter pouch and readily adjusts at each box. The impressions of the letters of the route and number of the box are thus registered on the face of the paper, and the device automatically passes up one number for the next box ("CC 2," for instance). On returning to the postoffice the carrier deposits the bit of paper, which faithfully records the route he has taken.

The device has been on trial for a few days by order of the postoffice department and has worked most satisfactorily, says the Washington Post. It is intended not solely for the detection of carriers who may shirk their work, but also for the protection of those who are faithful. Recently the failure of carriers to collect an important letter on Fourteenth street was noticed, but it was impossible to discover into which one of two men was dealt out in violation of certain mail law. Then occasionally new carriers who are unfamiliar with their route miss certain boxes for days. The invention removes any possibility of such an occurrence, as it is said to be impossible for a carrier to beat the device, which is both cheap and simple in mechanism.

AMERICAN HORSES ABROAD.

American horses as well as manufactures are making inroads upon the German markets and are giving the agents of Emperor William some concern, says the Washington correspondent of the Chicago Tribune. "Importations from America have caused the horse raisers of Holstein to suffer much of late. A stock company has just been formed in Berlin for the express purpose of importing horses from the United States. The Americans have succeeded in breeding a horse which compares favorably in every way with the Holstein animal, especially in those points so highly prized in a work horse—namely, broad hips and large build generally.

"The best markets for Holstein horses have always been the provinces of Saxony, Thuringia and Brunswick. The demand is created by the large sugar factories. These markets have been decreasing of late, owing to American horses being purchased in Berlin. A few days ago this Berlin company shipped a drove of 80 through Hamburg en route for Milan, Italy, where they are to be used on the tramways.

"Almost every week a long freight train filled with American horses leaves the Berliner Bahnhof for various parts of Germany. In spite of expensive freight and a tariff of $7 per head the Americans have built up a respectable competition in the German market."

Dog That Carries Mail.

There was a quiet little sensation at the postoffice in Kansas City the other afternoon. It was created by a most out of the ordinary letter carrier. Instead of the regulation outer gray he wore a suit of hair spotted brown and white. He entered the postoffice at shortly before 2:30. He carried several letters in his mouth. Paying no attention to anybody, he trotted over to the window where the foreign mail is received, stood upon his hind legs, with his fore paws on the partition, and whined. The clerk inside, who was busily engaged in distributing mail, looked up in surprise. Once, twice, he looked at the dog. Then he said:

—Barrack Room Ballad.

My friend Private Mulvaney told me this, sitting on the parapet of the road to Dagshai, when we were handing lunterfies together. He had theories about the army and colored clay pipes perfectly. He said that the young soldier is the best to work with, "on account av the sarpassin innocince av the child."

"Now, listen!" said Mulvaney, throwing himself full length on the wall in the sun. "I'm a born scutt av the barrick room! The army's mate an drink to me, bekaze I'm wan av the few that can't spoil it. I've past in sivinteen years, an the pipeclay's in the marrow av me. If I cud have kept out av wan big dhrink a month, I wud have been a low'ry lift'nint by this time—a unisuxeo to my betthers, a laughin shtock to my equils an a cerso to mesilf. Bein fwhat I am, I'm Privit Mulvaney, wid no good conduc' pay an a devourin thirst. Always barrin mo little fri'nd Bobs Bahadur, I know as much about the army as most men."

I said something here.

"Wolseley he shot! Betuno you an me an that butterfly net, he's a rannklin, incrastin sort av a divil, wid wan oi on the quane an the coort an the other on his blessed silf—everlastin'ly playin Sayour an Alexandrier rowled into a lump. Now, Bobs is a sinsible little man Wid Bobs an a few 3-year olds, I'd swape any army av the earth into a jhairnun an throw nt away afterward. Faith, I'm not jokin! 'Tis the hedmin—the new blayce—that don't know fwhat a ballet manes, an wudn't save if they did—that do the work. They're crammed wid ball mate till they fairly reups wid good livin, an thin, if they don't fight, they blow each other's hids off. 'Tis the trut' I'm tellin you. They should be kept on dalbhat an bigri in the hot weather, hat there'd be a mut'ny if 'twas done.

"Did you iver hear how Privit Mulvaney tuk the town av Lungtungpen? I thought not. 'Twas the lift'nint got the credit, but 'twas me planned the schame. A little before I was invidded from Burma we an four an twenty young wans under a Lift'nint Brazenose was rinnin our dijbshins theyin to catch dacoits. An such double ended divils I niver knew! 'Tis only a dah an a Snider that makes a dacoit. Widout thim he's a paceful cultivator an felony for to shoot. We hunted an we hunted an tuk fever an elephints now an again, but no dacoits. Evenshually we pucknowed wan man. "Taste him tinderly," sez the lift'nint. So I tuk him away into the jungle, wid the Burmese interpr't in my cl'anin rod. Sez I to the man, 'My p'aceful squireen,' sez I, 'you've dacoit on your hunkers an dimonstrate to my fri'nd, here where your fri'nds are when they're at home?' Wid that I interpreted him to the cl'anin rod, an he comminst to jabber, the interpr't' interrupin in betwnes on me helpin the intilligince departmint wid me cl'anin rod when the man misremimbered.

"Pristinly I learned that acrost the river, about nine miles away, was a town just dhrippin wid daha an bobs an arrows an dacoits an elephints an jingles 'Good,' sez I. 'This office will now close.'

"That night I went to the lift'nint an communicates my information. I never thought much av Lift'nint Brazenose till that night. He was shtiff wid books an the-ories an all manner av thrimmin's no manner av use. 'Town, did you say?' sez he. 'According to the the-ories av war, we shud wait for re-enforcements.' 'Faith,' thinks I, 'we'd better dig our graves, thin, for the nearest throops was up to their ahfocks in the marshes out Mimbin way. 'But,' says the lift'nint, 'since 'tis a speshil case I'll make au excepshin. We'll visit this Lungtungpen tonight.

"The bhoys was fairly wudd wid delaight when I tould 'em, an, by this an that, they wint through the jungle like buck rabbits. About midnight we come to the shtrame which I had clane forgot to minshin to my officer. I was on ahead, wid four bhoys, an I thought that the lift'nint might want to the-orize. 'Shtrip, bhoys!' sez I. 'Shtrip to tha huff an shwim in where glory waits! 'Bus I can't shwim!' sez two av thim. 'To think I should live to hear that from a bhoy wid a board school education!' sez I. 'Take a turn av thimber, an me an Conolly here will ferry you over, you young ladies!'

"We got an cold tree trunk an pushed off wid the kits an the rifles on ut. The night was chokin dhark, an just as we was fairly embarked I heard the lift'nint behind av me callin out. 'There's a bit av a nullah here, sorr,' sez I, 'but I can feel the bottom already.' So I ced. for I was not a yard from the bank.

"'Bit av a nullah! Bit av an estuary!' sez the lift'nint. 'Go on, you mad Irishman! Shtrip, bhoys!' I heard him laugh, an the bhoys begun shtrippin an rollin a log into the water to put their kits on. So me an Conolly shtruck out through the warm wather wid our log, an the rest come on behind.

"That shtrama was miles wolde! Orth'ris, on our rank log, whispers we had got into the Thames below Sheerness by mistake. 'Kape on shwimmin, you little blayguard,' sez I, 'an don't go pokin your dirty jokes at the Irawadi.' 'Silince, men!' sings out the lift'nint. So we shwum on into the black dhark, wid our chests on the logs, trustin in the saints an the luck av the British army.

"Evenshually we hit ground—a bit av sand—an a man. I put my heel on the back av him. He shtrook out an—it

" 'Now we've done ut!' sez Lift'nint

Brazenose. 'Where the divil is Lungtungpen?' There was about a minute an a half to wait. The bhoys laid a hould av their rifles, an some unried to put their belts on. We was marchin wid fixed baynits, av coorse. This we knew where Lungtungpen was, for we had hit the river wall av ut in the dhark, an the bhoys town blazed wid thim messin jingles an Sniders like a cat's back on a frosty night. They was dhrunk all ways a mount, but cver on hids into the shtraus.

"'Have you got your rifles?' sez Brazenose. 'God 'mi!' sez Orth'ris. 'I've got that thief Mulvaney's for all my beck pay, an she'll kick my heart sick wid that blundering long shtock av hers.' 'Go on!' yells Brazenose, whippin his sword out. 'Go on an take the town! An the Lord have mercy on our sowls!'

"Thin the bhoys gave wan divastat-in howl an pranced into the dhark, feelin for the town, an blindin an stiffin like cavalry ridin manœuvres on the grass pricked their baro legs I hunmered wid the butt at some bamboo things that got in me way, an the rest come an hummered contagious, while the jingles was jinglin an feroshus yells from inside was shpittin our ears. We was too close under the wall for them to hurt us.

"Evenshually, tho thing, whatever ut was, brak, an tho six and twinty av us tumbled, wan after the other, naked as we was borrun. Into the town av Luntungpen. There was a melly av a mangled hose kind av nebula, but whether they tuk us, all white an vet, for a new breed av divil or a new kind av dacoit I don't know. They ran as though we was both, an we wint into thim, boynit an lintt, shriekin wid laughin. There was terrohes in the etherets, an I saw little Orth'ris rubbin his showlther wid tyre time he loosed my long shtock at Martini, an Brazenose walkin into the gang wid his sword, like Diarmid av the Golden Collar, barrin he hadn't a stitch av clothin on him. We disk'ivered elephints wid dacoits under their bellies, an, what wid wan thing an another, we was busy till mornin takin possession av the town av Lungtungpen.

"This we halted an formed up, an Brazenose howlin in the houses an Lift'nint Brazenose blushin pink in the light av the marnin sun 'Twas the most ondasint p'rade I iver tuk a hand in. Foive and twenty privits an a orficer av the line in review ordher, an not as much as wud dust a fife betune 'em all in the way av clothin! Elight av us had their belts an pouches on, but tho rest had gone in wid a handful av ammunishin an the divil. God gave him. They was ca nakid as Venus.

"'Number off from the right,' sez I, whin I could spake. 'Odd numbers fall out to dress; even numbers pthrol the town till relieved by the dressin party.' Let me tell you, pathrolin a town wid nothin on is an expayrience. I pathrolled for tin minutes, an begad before 'twas over I blushed. The women laughed so. I niver blushed before or since, but I blushed all over my curkiss thin. Orth'ris did pthrol. He saw nothin only, 'Forthsmith barricks an the 'ard av Dagshai.' This he lay down an rowled anywan wid laughin.

"When we was all thressed, we counted the dead—sivinty-foive dacoits besides wounded. We tuk five elephints, a bunder an sivinty Sniders, two hundher dah an a lot av other burglerious thruck. Not a man av us was hurt, except maybe the lift'nint, an he from the shock to his dacincy.

"The headman av Lungtungpen, who surrindered himself, asked the interpr't, 'If the English fight like that will their cle-osell, what in the wurruld do they do wid their clo'es on?' Orth'ris began rowlin big eyes an crackin his fingers an dancin a step dance for to impress the headman. He ran to his home, an we spint the rest av the day carryin the lift'nint on our showlthers round the town an playin wid the Burmese ladies—fat little, brown little divils, an pretty as pictures.

"Orth'ris I was invidded for the dysentry to India. I sez to the lift'nint, 'Sorr,' sez I, 'you've the mekin's in the army av a great man; but, if you'll be an odd sodger spake, you're too fond av the-orizin.' He shuk hands wid me an sez: 'Bit high, bit sure, there's no pl'asin you, Mulvaney. You've veseen me waltzin through Lungtungpen like a red lajin widout the warpaint, an you say I'm too fond av the-orizin! Sorr,' sez I, for I loved the bhoy, 'I wud waltz wid you in that condishin through hell, an so wud the rest av the men. Thin I wint down submarine in the flat an left him my blessin. May the saints carry at where at shud go, for he was a fine upstandin young orficer.

"To reshume! Fwhat I've said just shows the man av 3-year olds is. Wid 400 seasoned sodgers have taken Lungtungpen in the dark that way? No! They'd know the risk av fever an chill, let alone the shootin. Two hunder might have done ut. But the 3-year olds know little an care less, an where there's no fear there's no danger. Catch them young, feed them high, an, by the honor av that great little man Bobs, behind a good orficer 'tis'n only dacoits they'd massacre in their chrowers! Begad, they wud that!

"Here's your pipe, sorr! Shmoke her tinderly wid honey dew after lettin the reek av the canteen plug dis away. But 'tis no good, thanks to you all the same, for my ponch is at your shopped bhoosa. Cantem baccy's like the army. Ut shpoils a man's taste for moldier things.

So saying, Mulvaney took np his butterfly net and returned to barracks.

SHEEP EATING WEEDS.

They Are Fine Better Scavengers in the Orchard in Early Summer Than the Hogs.

The American Sheep Breeder points out the fact that many plants usually classed as weeds are in possession eaten by sheep, either to give variety to their diet or for the tonic effect on their systems. It mentions the sassafras, dandelion, parsley, yarrow, and even thoroughwort, as desirable for this use. In England sheep growers purposely sow yarrow when laying down pastures for sheep, and also the narrow-leafed plantain. Most of these are somewhat bitter to the taste, and the liking for what is bitter seems to be a peculiarity of the sheep, which often leads it to eat leaves that are poisonous rather than medicinal. It is possible that all these plants have medicinal qualities, but the sheep does not know enough to doctor itself with them, as sheep are often poisoned by eating leaves of laurel when allowed to run where that poisonous plant grows. We have known sheep to get poisoned when an overdose of cherry leaves was probably the cause. The leaves of the cherry, peach, almond, and of the common oleander all contain prussic acid, and all are poisonous when eaten in any quantity.

It is chiefly, we think, when pastures are dried up, and the sheep's appetites are clamorous for some green thing, that these fresh leaves are most attractive to them. Let us here to leave even dried leaves of the cherry, almond or peach where sheep could eat all they liked of them. The craving for something bitter probably explains why sheep will eat the tender shoots of nearly all deciduous trees, while we almost invariably bitter to the palate. With regard to anything unsicnly as regards animal excrement or blood, the taste of the sheep is more refined and sensitive than that of any other farm animal. But it unquestionably does have a liking for what is bitter to the taste, and will eat the small, wormy apples that a hog will turn up his nose at, while the hog will pick its favorite food among filth that no sheep could be brought near enough to touch. In the early summer, when the small, bitter, wormy apples are falling, the sheep is, therefore, a much better scavenger in the orchard than is the hog.

FOR THE HORSE BARN.

How to Build a Box Stall That is Arranged for Comfort as Well as Convenience.

A well arranged box stall for horses is shown herewith. The upper portion consists of iron rods extending from the top of the side to a rolling two feet above the floor. The rods are provided with screen doors. The stall is 9 by 4½ feet, and the manger is 21 inches from front to back. An iron feed trough for grain occupies one end of the manger, indicated by dotted lines at g. Its rear mainder is taken up by the hay box at h, the bottom of which is shown by the dotted lines. A door in front allows for cleaning out the feed box and opens to a closet. The box stalls are also provided with the rods for a hay rack, but this, so that a person can easily see into them without entering. The interior exposed wood work is varnished, making a neat and substantial finish.—Farm and Home.

PLAIN HORSE TALK.

Every boy and girl should learn to ride a horse gracefully and well.

The record of fourteen miles made by the saddle bred horses during the last campaign is of the greatest interest.

There is an increased interest in saddle horse breeding, and we hope soon to see fewer misfits under the saddle.

A big rolling door made of farming strips and mounted on rollers is much, and is a great preserver of horse flesh.

Too much care cannot be taken of the feet. It is much easier to keep the feet sound than to cure them after they have become injured by neglect or carelessness.

Do not let the hot weather come and find your stables badly ventilated. Horses cannot be kept healthy and in the best condition if their quarters are close and full of foul odors.

If your horse's feet have become hard, soak them in warm water or apply a poultice of flax seed. A pad made of a piece of old blanket or some woolen cloth thoroughly wet and fastened around the hoof will allay fever and help to soften the feet in good condition.—Farm Journal.

Hogs Killed by Soap Suds.

A recent bulletin from the Cornell Experiment station shows the wastes from hotels caused deaths in a series herds, and that the cause of death was the soap powder used in dish washing. This powder contained 50 per cent. carbonate of soda. When fed to pigs in quantities ranging from one-half of one ounce to five ounces daily, sickness and death followed with some of the symptoms which are sometimes seen in hog cholera.

CONVENTION CLOSED

After Four Days of Successful and Enthusiastic Meetings. Delegates Pleased With Entertainment.

SPECIAL GOLD MEDAL CONTEST

Crookston Makes Largest Gain in Membership—Next Convention to be at Mankato.

The State W. C. T. U. Convention was brought to a close last Friday evening with the matrons' gold medal contest and a special program of oratory and music, and the trains of that night and the Saturday morning trains bore away from the city close to a hundred women who had spent the week in the city. The visiting delegates expressed themselves as highly pleased with the entertainment they received while here. The holding of the convention in the northwestern corner of the state was something of an experiment. Never has the state meeting been held so far north, but in justice to unions in this part of the state, who have during many years past gone south, the women came north this year. And though the attendance of delegates was not any larger than usual the enthusiasm aroused and the work accomplished was at least equal to that of any other convention.

Dainty and delicious lunches were served each noon in the G. A. R. hall, and many were the compliments which the Crookston ladies received upon their excellent cooking. Drives around the city and through the surrounding country were planned for the delegates and carried out. Bouquets of flowers were daily furnished the visitors, indeed the oldest of the delegates said that never before had the convention hall been such a bower of beauty as was the M. E. church here. Great credit is due to the members of the local union for the magnificent way in which arrangements were made for the entertaining of the W. C. T. U. women and thanks are due the citizens for the hospitality which was freely extended. The delegates have gone to the different parts of the state carrying with them very pleasant memories of Crookston and her citizens.

The convention has been of great benefit. A knowledge of what the W. C. T. U. as an organization is doing has become more widespread and this in itself is of great importance. For four days the Methodist church was a scene of great activity.

Here women of talent and culture and large experience were engaged in forming plans for the amelioration of society. The one thought that occupied their minds was how may we best help to lift up humanity, and it was evident that they were bent on getting at the root of the evil of intemperance. They are now striking at the cause rather than at the effect. Their objective point is the eradication of the liquor traffic, but to accomplish this they are not directly attacking the saloon but are striving to have the young trained to temperate habits and thus they will cause the saloon to go out of business because it wont pay.

In speaking of the decorations in the church mention was made of the flowers, but these were not all. Banners of white silk adorned the walls behind the platform. They were indeed emblems of purity, a spirit of which was prevalent at all the meetings. But no meeting of W. C. T. U. women would be complete without some visible sign of the presence of their beloved president Miss Francis Willard, so a large picture of Miss Willard was one of the prominent features of the decorations.

The "Y" branch presented a very interesting program on the second evening of the convention, Miss Williams, of Argyle, gave a recitation "A voice from the Poor House," Miss Anna McAskill sang a solo, Miss Simonson, of Tracy, read a paper on the theme "Woman, her Brother's Keeper," Miss Jessie Davies read an article telling about "The Somerset Y in the high school" and Miss Florence Lytle, of this city, recited a selection entitled "Drunk."

This also was the evening when the banners were presented, but just before this took place the state officers, remembering that it was the birthday of Miss Hollister, the secretary of the "Y," presented her with a beautiful bouquet of flowers. The prize banner for the largest gain in membership was awarded to the Fulda "Y." A second banner was given to the Northfield "Y" for contributing the largest amount of money to the Clara Parish fund. Miss Hollister spoke of Clara Parish, the world's organizer for this "Y's" who has gained 1,000 young women for the "Y's" in Japan.

Mrs. Scovell presented the county prize banner to Hennepin county. Mrs. Francis Neal, county president, received the banner and responded in a happy manner. The Crookston union, made the largest gain in membership.

Thursday morning the report from the Fourteenth district brought out the bravery and faithfulness of the four women at Euclid who have a band of mercy with thirty members and a mothers' club with seven members.

Mrs. Chapin, Grand Vice Templar of the I. O. G. T., brought fraternal greetings from the grand lodge of that organization.

Mrs. Fry, national corresponding secretary, was introduced and said no other state could have induced her to leave her work at Chicago. The national superintendent to abolish everything relating to districts was presented by Mrs. Neal, of Hennepin, who spoke for in. Thirty-six states have this plan. The amendment was lost.

Mrs. Scovell, the state president, reported that as organizer she had visited 19 counties, traveled, 3,526 miles, made 117 public addresses, held 18 mothers' meetings, 25 parlor meetings, three meetings for men only, four for children, six for girls, visited 19 schools, organized 13 W. C. T. Us and three Y unions. Members gained were 331 active and 84 honorary. Seattle society has 21 unions and one Y. The membership is 325 with superintendents of 16 departments.

In the afternoon the feature was a department symposium with recommendations from superintendents, each being given three minutes for this purpose. Among the subjects discussed were evangelistic work, penal and reformatory work, work among railroad employes and firemen, Sabbath observance, etc. Among the speakers were Mrs. S. E. Morgan, Mrs. McCurdy, Mrs. Lyon, Mrs. Leonard, Mrs. Holliday and Mrs. Clark.

Thursday evening Mrs. Susanna D. M. Fry, of Chicago, spoke to a crowded audience upon the theme "Twenty-five Glorious Years." She said that the W. C. T. U. of the present was laying the foundations upon which the future workers would build. Reports were read showing the kind of work done in different states.

Minnesota made the first organized effort to carry the gospel to prisons and jails, secured the separation of men and women in prisons, and established the first free kindergarten. We have ten thousand unions in the national. Before all this was done, imagine the state of society, before women discovered herself and realized her obligations. The victory at Santiago taught us a great lesson. Mary Hunt's son brought back every man that went to war with him because they totally abstained from liquor and took care of their bodies. We failed to get an anticanteen law. Mr. Crofts said our Mr. Ellis was called the third house in congress. We are said to be the largest law-making body in the world. Roberts being seated in congress means the overthrow of all we have done against polygamy. Shall we be idle while a body of men are trying to get around these questions? The women can all be counted as patriots. Look at the appeals that have been made to the president to put the canteen out. The W. C. T. U. will never give up till we accomplish what we were organized to do. and we want every man, woman and child to help us.

Mrs. Fry, Hennepin, presented both Mrs. Fry and Mrs. Scovell with certificates of life membership of the national W. C. T. U. Mrs. Scovell said she was glad that she and Mrs. Fry stood alike and that the money will help to organize more and more the women of our country into the W. C. T. U.

The election of officers on Friday resulted: President, Mrs. Bessie Leythe Scovell; vice-President, Louise E. Hollister: corresponding secretary, Mrs. A. C. McCurdy; recording secretary, Belle M. Welch, all of Minneapolis: treasurer, Mrs. C. S. Soule, of St. Paul.

The delegates elected to the National Convention which meets in Seattle, Wash., next summer: Mrs. Ayres, St. Paul, Mrs. B. I. Ferguson, Minneapolis, Mrs. Thompson, Windom, Mrs. C. W. Kaley, Hamline, Mrs. Bayrell, Argyle, Miss Hollister, St. Paul, Mrs. Rice, of Tracy, and Mrs. Woodbury, St. Paul. Those elected to go to the World's Convention at Edinburgh, Scotland, in June 1900 were: Mrs. Bonlwell, of Blue Earth City, Mrs. Stella B. Irvine, of St. Paul, and Mrs. Mullen, of Cannon Falls.

Mrs. Bayrell presented the name of Miss Emma Mack, of Argyle, as sustaining member. Mrs. T. A. Hoverstad gave a very interesting address upon "Food Values" and the "Art of Cookery." Miss Bolsta, of this city give a very helpful paper upon "The Child's Physical Nature," and Mrs. S. Crain, of Euclid, one on "The Child's Moral Nature. Mrs. Nelson of Halhock union told how their president had interested the young women in W. C. T. U. work, forming them into a flower mission band. They also have a White Ribbon choir. Miss Hollister said they have "grace, grit and gumption."

The special contest for gold medals Friday evening brought the convention to a close. Those who spoke in the declamatory contest were Mrs. Roberts, of Crookston, Mrs. Bayrell, of Argyle, Mrs. Hillard, of Crookston, Mrs. Merritt, of West Duluth and Mrs. Watson, of Brainerd. Mrs. Merritt received the gold medal. In the singing contest Mrs. Parks, of Ada, won first place, receiving a gold medal in the shape of a lyre. Mrs. Bayrell and Mrs. Rice who won second places respectively in the two contests each received a year's subscription to a paper which is devoted to one of the lines of work in which the W. C. T. U. is engaged.

As the meetings progressed the interest in them become more general and large audiences filled the convention hall. The chorus music furnished by the White Ribboned choir, under the leadership of Mrs. G. O. Riggs, the quartet music by Messrs. Carpenter, Lenton, Mix and Hood, and the solos by Mrs. Parks, of Ada, Mr. Lieck, Misses Martha Munch and Gertie Gleason was greatly appreciated and added much to the success of the assembly. It was indeed, an interesting helpful and instructive convention.

The next state convention will be held at Mankato.

THE CROOKSTON CARNIVAL.

Dates Changed to Sept. 27, 28 and 29—Elaborate Preparations.

The Crookston Carnival will be held on September 27, 28 and 29, instead of on October 3, 4, and 5, as announced in the JOURNAL last week. This change was thought advisable as Moorhead had first arranged to hold its Street Fair the first week in October. As the officers of the Crookston Carnival and live stock show, John McKinnon has been elected president, W. E. McKenzie, secretary, and A. D. Stephens treasurer. Arrangements are being made to have some great attractions here and for these three days the Queen City of the Northwest will be en fete.

THE FREE DELIVERY.

Certain Requirements That Must be Complied With.

To The Citizens of Crookston:

As the time for free delivery is close at hand, I desire to call the public attention to a few requirements, which ought to be attended to before October 1st.

First. When a carrier arrives at your home or place of business with your mail, he is supposed to know where to go to get it. You may also be at home or may be otherwise engaged so that it is not convenient to go to the door. He cannot wait for you, nor leave the mail on the doorstep. It would therefore be advisable to provide yourself with a suitable place in which carriers can leave your mail with the assurance that it is safe for this purpose.

Letter boxes provided with locks are for sale about town and something of this kind should either be placed on your doorsteps or openings should be made in the doors to receive the mail.

Second. When writing to your friends be sure not to forget to give them the street on which you live and the number of your house.

Third. There are several portions of the city in which sidewalks have never been laid. The department wishes every one to receive the benefit of the service, but the carriers are not supposed to leave the sidewalks. For this reason I hope that some kind of walks will be laid in those portions of the city where this improvement has not yet been made, as parts of Sampson's, Jerome's and McDonald's additions, and Carman will not be in position to enjoy the benefits of free delivery, unless walks are laid.

I make this mention here in regard to sidewalks in order that you may know my orders from the department, and at the same time know the reason why, if your mail is not delivered to you.

Respectfully,

A. EKKEN, P. M.

CROOKSTON COLLEGE.

Will Open Its Doors to Students Next Monday Morning, September 11.

A MOST DESERVING INSTITUTION

Shorthand and Typewriting—Commercial and Teachers' Training Department.

The Crookston College will open its fall term Sept. 11, and the coming year will be the fifth during which the faculty of this institution will have labored among hundreds of the students of this section. Professors Malm and Sathre have been to a large extent instrumental in making Crookston the educational center in the northwestern part of Minnesota.

The success of this institution of learning since it was founded in October, 1896, has been phenomenal. The institution opened under very unfavorable circumstances which are best known to the friends of the school. But two students made their appearance on the first day and the outlook was anything but favorable. Having been assisted in the past they would not again pay their tuition in advance but requested that it be collected at the end of the term.

The stanuch men at the helm of the institution, P. V. Malm, bore patiently with the students and such a confidence established as only interest and hope can only can build and maintain. The attendance increased very rapidly and the books show that 180 students frequented the school during the year.

In the spring of '99, Mr. Malm, finding the work too hard for one man, sold out a half interest to J. C. Sathre, of Minneapolis. With a determination to succeed, they set to work to build up a school. Finding that their present quarters were too small they secured a large hall and partitioned it off into rooms suitable for class work. These quarters were retained for two years, when they also became too small, as the school had now an enrollment of over 200 students. It was now apparent that a permanent location must be secured and with this object in view Messrs. Malm & Sathre set about to see what could be done. It was finally decided that the old St. Louis hotel would be an excellent building for a school of this kind, and so, on the 8th day of August, 1898, the transaction was made whereby Malm & Sathre became owners of said property and at once began plans of remodeling the building, making it modern and up-to-date in every respect.

They have now a very large and commodious building, conveniently situated, lighted by electricity and well ventilated.

The school has grown from a small beginning until today it stands as one of the foremost independent schools in the northwest. Its graduates are holding excellent work as teachers, bookkeepers, stenographers, clerks, collectors, farmers and housekeepers. The people of this section should feel a pride in their home institution, and should patronize it in preference to going to distant schools of less proficiency and greater expense.

The Crookston College has the following departments in constant operation: Preparatory, Teachers', Commercial, Stenography and Typewriting, Elocution and Oratory, Instrumental and Vocal Music, Piano and Ornamental Penmanship. The coming year promises to see these various departments well filled with students and as a result of the year's work many young people will be better prepared for life's work.

EXTENSIVE HOTEL BUSINESS.

Scandia Hotel Enlarged—Landlord Westerberg Celebrates.

The business of the Scandia Hotel of which Chas. Westerberg is the genial landlord, has increased to such an extend that he was compelled, if he were to be prepared to take care of his guests, to build a large addition. This addition was completed last Thursday and the event was celebrated by Landlord and Mrs. Westerberg inviting a number of their friends to spend the evening with them. An elegant dinner was spread and was so enjoyed by the guests that they could not but regret that they were not permanent boarders at this famous hostelry.

E. J. Little, who has been assistant superintendent of telegraphs and electrical equipments of the Baltimore & Ohio at Baltimore, has been appointed superintendent of telegraph of the Great Northern railroad, to succeed C. P. Adams, resigned.

POLK COUNTY GETS THIRD PLACE

In the Agricultural Display at the State Fair.

Le Sueur county wins the first prize in the competition grading of county agricultural exhibits at the state fair, which was made Tuesday afternoon by Prof. Atkinson, of the Iowa state school of agriculture. The grading was done this year by one judge. When Supt. Gordon, says the Pioneer Press, took hold of the agricultural department he decided that it would be fairer to all concerned to have the awards made by one judge—a nonresident of the state. Heretofore the grading has been done by two men residing in Minnesota, uninterested in counties exhibiting, and one non-resident. The present plan, it is believed, does away with any possibility of the judge being biased in favor of a certain county or part of the state. Anoka county got second prize and Polk and Stevens counties tied for third place. The grading of the ten counties that got their exhibits in shape in time resulted as follows:

Counties—	Points.
Le Sueur	99
Anoka	94
Stevens	91
Polk	91
Olmsted	91
Houston	90

Beltrami county made a brave fight for place, with only an agricultural display. The county was unable to get its exhibits to the grounds until Monday evening, and those in charge worked hard all night getting it in place for today. The county made a good showing, however, and will make some of the older counties hustle another year. Because it was not placed in time it could not be entered for competition, but it had sufficient merit to call for high praise from Prof. Atkinson.

HOME WEEK IN NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Rev. H. P. Fisher Returns From his Annual Trip to New England.

Rev. Herman P. Fisher returned Saturday afternoon from his annual vacation trip and occupied his pulpit at the Congregational church last Sunday. His trip was made by rail all the way from Worcester, Massachusetts and was via Montreal, Sault Ste Marie, Marquette and Duluth. During his absence he preached several times and spent some time visiting friends. In special study at the Boston Public library. He reports the season in New England as being very dry, and in consequence the crops are rather light. The business prospects are generally hopeful more so than for the past two years. One feature of New England life which has attracted considerable attention, was the celebration of the "Home Week" in New Hampshire. Much enthusiam was manifested when Gov. Rollins suggested the idea. The result was that quite a number of people in the old Granite state came home from all parts of the country to spend a few days among their native mountains.

BIDS FOR PAVING.

City Engineer's Report Received—Paving Will Cost About $40,000.

Pursuant to adjournment the city council met in the city hall last Friday afternoon to receive the city engineer's report upon the probable cost of paving the streets in the business portion of town with Macadam paving. The estimated cost of this paving is close to $40,000. The report of the engineer was accepted and he was instructed to advertise for bids.

Big Attendance at Fair.

Each day sees a record smashed at the State Fair. Monday's attendance put past Monday's quite in the lead, while Tuesday the number of paid admissions was a full 3,000 above the corresponding day last year. The receipts on Tuesday, in round numbers, were $4,300. This is for admissions alone. The figures for last year were $2,500, which shows a pretty substantial increase. The revenues from the grand stand during the day alone were fully 50 per cent greater than last year, while nearly $1,000 was added to the amount in the evening.

Tackles a Giant.

The police met a giant on Main street last Saturday but notwithstanding the fact that the giant did a good deal of mob but regret that they were not permanent boarders at this famous hostelry.

E. J. Little, who has been assistant superintendent of telegraphs and electrical equipments of the Baltimore & Ohio at Baltimore, has been appointed superintendent of telegraph of the Great Northern railroad, to succeed C. P. Adams, resigned.

A BREAK FOR FREEDOM

Prisoner Escapes From Polk County Jail by Cutting a Hole in the Wall.

HE IS CAUGHT NEAR FISHER

After Exciting Chase—Jailer Lawrence Will Ask For Steel Plating.

Martin Morand who under charge for stealing money from the office of the Minneapolis Brewing Company had been in the Polk County jail for some shirty days awaiting the action of the next grand jury, succeeded in escaping from the hastile late Wednesday Aug. 30th but before the night was over he was recaptured and again placed behind the bars.

In the left wing of the jail building the iron cells are placed in the center of the room and between these cells and the outer walls of the building is a vacant space of about four feet running almost entirely around the cells. There are two rows of cells and between them is a corridor, the cells forming two sides of the corridor, one end being made of iron bars and the other end of an iron gate. The top of the corridor, made of iron bars, is about a foot higher then the top of the cells between which and the roof of the room there is about three feet. The space, then, between the top of the cells on the inner side next the corridor, and the roof, so to speak, of the corridor, was filled in with a brick wall about fourteen inches thick.

About four o'clock on the day in question Morund was allowed in the corridor for the purpose of taking exercise. Jailor Lawrence came down town on business and the other occupants of the residence portion of the jail also were away. The prisoner with an iron part of the waterworks fixtures succeeded in cutting a small hole through the brick wall, mentioned above, crawled through this out on to the top of the cells and thence dropped to the floor.

He was still in the jail but outside the iron cells. Between the room in which he now found himself and the kitchen there was a small space in the wall through which food was passed from the kitchen. This aperture was closed with a small iron door and padlocked. Morand broke the lock and crawled through this opening into the kitchen. No one being here, he appropriated to himself some clothing that was in the room and escaped thence into the open air.

Jailer Lawrence returning to the jail about supper time found Morand gone. At once Chief Gonyea was notified and officers were sent in different directions. Mr. Lawrence himself and W. Olds started on the road to Fisher on their bicycles. Mr. Lawrence having concluded for various reasons that the prisoner would go in that direction. Within a few miles of Fisher they halted and sat down by the road side. Thinking that their man might possibly at this point come out of the woods onto the highway. Soon Morand appeared and when he was opposite the two men, who were in waiting, they arose and arrested him. A buggy was soon procured and the prisoner was soon behind the iron grates again.

The hole in the wall made by Morand has been bricked up again and at the next meeting of the county commissioners Jailer Lawrence will ask that this weak spot in the prison be made strong. This brick wall will probably be encased in iron or steel plate.

KILLED BY LIGHTNING

J. B. Barneau, 13 Years old, Working in Harvest Field Near Gentilly.

Lightning struck and instantly killed John Baptiste Berneau, last Friday afternoon as he was following the binder in the harvest field of Francis Labonte about two and one half miles southeast of Gentilly. The bolt tore part of the clothing from the lad. The man driving the binder was knocked from his seat on the machine but not seriously hurt. Young Berneau's mother and brother lived in Gentilly. The funeral occurred at Gentilly on Sunday.

The rumor that J. N. Hill, vice-president of the Eastern Minnesota, will become general manager of the Great Northern is confirmed. L. W. Hill, who has been assistant to his father, President J. J. Hill, will become vice-president of the Eastern Minnesota, with headquarters at Duluth.

BOTH MAKE CONCESSIONS.

United States and England Agree on a Temporary Alaskan Boundary.

NEW YORK, Sept. 6.—A special to The Herald from Washington says:

Great Britain and the United States have practically agreed upon a temporary line defining the boundary between Alaska and Canada. Negotiations are in progress relate only to minor points growing out of the definition of the line. One of the unsettled questions relates to the status of mines owned by Americans which may lap over into territory which has been under the control of Canada. Representatives of American mine owners say that it would be unfair to American miners if no provision should be made for them in case their property should be half on the the American and half on the Canadian side of the line. The prospective settlement of the boundary question is due to concessions made not only by Great Britain, but by this government also. Secretary Hay has won in the matter of excluding Canada from the Lynn canal, but a port of entry on the canal will be given should the final settlement fail to give Canada a permanent harbor. The secretary has also been successful in keeping the British to the north of the village of Kinkwan, though, it is said, he has agreed to the placing of the line just above the village, instead of four miles beyond as originally demanded.

REPULSED BY AMERICANS.

Two Unsuccessful Assaults Made by the Filipinos.

MANILA, Sept. 4.—The insurgents made an unsuccessful attempt to drive Colonel Smith out of Angeles with artillery—the first time they tried to use this method for two months. They brought two Krupp guns up and fired eight shrapnel shells at the town at dawn. Only two shells exploded and the gunnery did no damage. Lieutenant Kenzley's guns of the First artillery were brought into action immediately and soon drove the enemy from their position.

Another party of rebels fired into Calumpa, which is held by two companies of the Ninth regiment of infantry, supported by the gunboat Laguna de Bay. One native resident was wounded. The enemy was driven off by infantry firing and the guns of the gunboat.

HIS POLICY OUTLINED.

The New York Herold's Guess at McKinley's Ideas.

NEW YORK, Sept. 5.—A special to The Herald from Washington says: There is good authority for the statement that the president has returned to Washington with these general ideas uppermost in his mind as to his future course in relation to the new dependencies:

The Philippines—Civil government by three commissioners to supplant military rule immediately after the rebellion is crushed.

Cuba—Continued military control until it is determined by means of a general election whether the inhabitants want independence or annexation. If independence, the new government elected will be recognized by the United States and he given encouragement and every opportunity to establish its stability. If annexation, the president will be governed by the sentiment of Americans citizens as it may then exist.

Porto Rico—Civil government of the territorial form, similar to that which prevails in Arizona.

Hawaii—Territorial form of government, as recommended by the Hawaiian commission and as provided for in a measure now pending in congress.

MACABEBE SCOUTS.

Lieutenant Hotson Organizes a Company for General Lawton.

MANILA, Sept. 6.—3:20 p. m.—Lieutenant Batson of the Fourth cavalry, has organized a band of 100 Macabebe scouts, who will operate under the direction of Major General Lawton. All of them were former Spanish volunteers. They will be uniformed and will be armed with Krag-Jorgenson rifles. The Macabebes will have a flag raising and barbecue on Friday next.

Fell From a Logging Train.

WEST SUPERIOR, Wis., Sept. 6.—Tom Jordan and Lawrence Gavin, two workmen employed at the Cooper & Little lumber camp, were killed by falling from a logging train near the Northern Pacific bridge over the Pokegama river. The train became divided and as the sections came together again the momentum threw the men to their death.

Strikers Issued Still Out.

HAVANA, Sept. 6.—The strike of masons still continues. The strikers say they hope to win and have the support of other trades unions. The number of men on strike is 4,500. NEARING THE END

IF LABORI'S PLAN WORKS, ACQUITTAL OF DREYFUS

Is Considered Almost Certain—He Is Given Permission to Summon Schwartzkoppen and Panizzardi—Kaiser and King Humbert Requested to Aid in Humouth's Name—Appearance of the Foreigners Would Be the Feature of the Trial.

RENNES, Sept. 6.—M. Lahori has telegraphed personal appeals to Emperor William and King Humbert to grant permission to Colonel Schwartzkoppen and Colonel Panizzardi, German and Italian military attaches in Paris in 1894, to come to Rennes to testify in the trial of Captain Dreyfus. This is the news of the day and the chief topic of conversation in the cafes and resorts of the journalists. The appeals were couched in eloquent terms, invoking the assistance of their majesties in the name of justice and humanity. They are quite supplementary to the formal application that will be made by the government commissary, Major Carrerier.

The demand by M. Lahori that the contumacial should come process, subject to the approval of the two sovereigns, came like a thunderbolt at the day's session. The step is fraught with momentous consequences, as it affords Emperor William an opportunity again to assume his favorite role of Arbiter of the Destinies of the World.

No one will be surprised if Colonel Schwartzkoppen, in the name of the kaiser, makes a declaration that will practically decide the result of the trial. Both Schwarzkoppen and Panizzardi must consult their respective sovereigns before starting, but the counsel for Dreyfus fully expect them to arrive here, if they come at all, in time to give their testimony Thursday, in which case the trial would probably conclude this week and the verdict be delivered on Friday or Saturday. This is the view that obtains now, differing somewhat from the feeling earlier in the day. Colonel Jouaust told M. Demange at the conclusion of the session that if he received official notification that Colonels Schwartzkopen and Panizzardi were coming to depose, he would be prepared to adjourn the trial pending their arrival.

The appearance of Colonels Schwarzkopen and Panizzardi would be the most sensational as well as the

of the whole trial. Their depositions would be a formal and emphatic declaration that they never had any relation with the accused, and they would make such a statement that the court must order an acquittal. Those who are in the confidence of the counsel entrusted with the defense express a firm conviction that Dreyfus will now be acquitted. Nevertheless, one of the most prominent generals with whom the correspondent of the Associated Press conversed declared himself "quite pleased with the progress of the trial thus far," and confident of a conclusion "eminently satisfactory to the prosecution."

Senator Trieux, who testified during the day, will probably be confronted by Generals Mercier, Gonse, De Boisdeffre and Roget. After that it is understood that the deposition of Colonel Du Paty de Clam will be read, Major Tavernier, who examined him, having arrived at Rennes. This practically completes the list of depositions, unless, as is probable, Du Paty de Clam's testimony leads the defense to summon witnesses

To Controvert His Statement.

It is reported that the minister of war, General de Gallifet, has sent orders to the generals and other military witnesses to leave Rennes and return to their respective posts within two hours after the conclusion of the depositions and not to be present during the judges' rags. They will thus be absent when the verdict is delivered. General Mercier, being on the retired list, is not affected by this order, but Generals Roget, Gonse and De Boisdeffre must go. These orders are intended not only to avert a demonstration in favor of the generals, accompanied probably by serious disorders, but also to prevent the moral effect of their presence in the courtroom while the judges are deliberating as to their verdict and perhaps to prevent something worse than moral influence.

The courtroom was crowded during the day and numerous applicants were refused admission. Public interest is heightening intensely as the trial draws to a close.

GETS HER SHARE.

Decision of Considerable Importance by the Wisconsin Supreme Court.

MILWAUKEE, Sept. 5.—By a decision of the state supreme court at Madison Emma Blessing Ludington, widow of Harrison Ludington, Jr., is given a onesixth interest in the estate of Harrison Ludington, former governor of Wisconsin, valued at $1,200,000. The decree reverses the decision of Judge Gilbert of Milwaukee county, who ruled that Harrison Ludington, Jr., had a fifteen per interest in his father's estate, on which ruling the wife of the junior Ludington would have no interest in the estate.

PLAGUE AND FAMINE.

Lord Sandhurst, Governor of Bombay, Paints a Gloomy Picture.

BOMBAY, Sept. 6.—Lord Sandhurst, governor of Bombay, in the course of a speech at Poonah, said the plague was spreading, and that owing to the failure of the monsoon, not only the plague was in the midst of the people, but grim famine was staring at them. He expressed the hope that the September rains would come to their relief and stated that in the meantime arrangements would be made to open relief routes.

VISITED WARSHIPS

VESSELS OF THE NORTH ATLANTIC FLEET BELCH FORTH SALUTES

In Honor of the President—Incident One of the Features of the Day at the G. A. R. Encampment—Great Parade of Veterans—Thirty-five Thousand Survivors of the War Join in the Loud Acclaim—President Leads the Column Until Its Arrival at the Reviewing Stand.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 6.—The visit to the North Atlantic squadron by President McKinley was the day's great feature of the Grand Army encampment, second not even to the parade of veterans, which was the leading event of the encampment proper.

The visit proved to be the greatest marine spectacle ever seen here. It was the intention to have Mr. McKinley visit only the New York, but he grew so enthusiastic over the great fighters that he suddenly made up his mind to inspect all of them. Accordingly he visited the flagship New York, cruiser Brooklyn and the battleships Indiana, Massachusetts and Texas. It was his intention to also visit the Detroit, but, much to his regret, he was unable to do so on account of lack of time. There was almost a continuous roar of guns during the one and three-quarters hours that it took to inspect the vessels. In all 462 guns were fired by the squadron in president's salutes.

Received by Admiral Sampson.

On arriving at the flagship the president was received at the gangway by Rear Admiral Sampson and the staff officers of the ship, who were in full dress uniform. The tall was manned by the men during the formal greeting. The hail to quarters was then sounded and every man on board ship sprang to his place just as though an engagement was about to start. The sight greatly pleased the president.

Mr. McKinley was shown over the ship, beginning at the 13-inch guns. Standing within the small enclosure of which were eight men, naked to the waist, who were going through the operation of loading, sighting and firing the guns. The president watched the proceeding with much interest. It took half an hour to go over the vessel and as he left the New York the entire fleet fired the president's salute.

The programme carried out on the other vessels was similar to that of the New York and it was 6:20 when the party reached their hotel.

VETERANS IN LINE.

Grand Army Parade at Philadelphia Reviewed by the President.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 6.—This was the big day of the Grand Army encampment, and the city was astir at an early hour. The presence in the city of President McKinley and his drive over the route of the parade, aroused the greatest enthusiasm among the throngs. Admiral Sampson and the captains of the fleet made a formal call upon the president before 9 o'clock, Mr. McKinley receiving them in the executive chamber apart for him at the hotel.

The official party drove past the historic state house. As he passed, the president took off his hat. The party reached the reviewing stand at 10:30 o'clock, and the president waited in the rooms of the director of public works until the head of the procession reached the stand when he again made his appearance.

Line of March Was Five Miles.

The head of the procession moved at 10 o'clock and marched five miles. Independence hall was passed during the march and caps were lifted and colors dipped. There was a chorus of 2,500 school children assembled at the city hall and sang patriotic airs as the line passed.

Disabled veterans rode in carriages following the department of Pennsylvania at the end of the line. To come the departments of Illinois, Wisconsin, Ohio, New York, Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Maine, Rhode Island, New Hampshire, Vermont, Potomac, Virginia, North Carolina, Maryland, Nebraska, Michigan, Kansas, Minnesota, Missouri, Kentucky, West Virginia, Washington, South Dakota and Alaska. Thirty-five thousand men were in line.

At the Avenue of Fame, with its snow-white columns and festoons of bunting and laurel, was the favorite view point.

DAKOTA MEN PAID.

Given the Money Due Them for Their Services in Cuba.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 6.—The payment of the troops who served in North Dakota regiment during the day and paid the men for July. The men had expected that they would be paid for both July and August, but will have to be content for the present with one month. The total amount of the payment occurs each man will receive four months' pay and clothing and clothing allowances, which will bring the aggregate in the neighborhood of $175. All officers of the regiment are working like beavers on the rolls. Word has gone out from headquarters that everything must be in readiness for the ordnance officer, who will receive all arms and accoutrements on Friday and Saturday. For this reason no leaves of absence are granted except for imperative reasons.

Philippine Receipts for August.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6.—The war department has received by cable the receipts from all sources at the three principal ports in the Philippines in the month of August. The total receipts amounted to $697,018. The customs receipts were $618,903.

England Concentrating Troops While Conducting Peaceful Negotiations.

PRETORIA, Sept. 6.—The volksraad has accepted Mr. Coester's motion to fix the debates to grow out of the interpellation of the government as to the assembling of British troops along the Transvaal borders for Thursday next.

In proposing his motion Mr. Coester referred to "the Jameson raid and other outrages and murders committed by England's troops" as leading him to distrust the present concentration. He said the convention of 1884 did not contain the necessary provisions and proclaimed that Mr. Chamberlain had broken the convention by interfering with internal affairs of the Transvaal.

Other speakers followed Mr. Coester, pointing out that all the British colonies were offering armed assistance to the imperial government.

"And must the Transvaal remain silent," exclaimed a burgher. "It is opposed to Christianity to conduct friendly negotiations and to mobilize troops. We must believe the British troops have their orders."

SYNOPSIR.

Chapter I.—Tom Scott, a New England farmhand, decides to go to Klondike to search for gold. In Boston he receives a letter from an old shipmate, and as his new acquaintance is about to sail for Alaska Tom accompanies him, and the invitation is accepted. They take passage on the Seabird, a sailing vessel bound for Prince.

Chapter II.—They board the vessel and a new mate, Dyea Rider, and the captain had just secured, proves to be an old enemy of Tom's, who had accused his father of deserting the ship of which he was captain and made off with him several thousand dollars of the owner's gold. Tom's father had been home since the accusation, but was mad, but Tom, then a boy, did not believe it. He had a fight with Rider. In the fight he broke the mate's nose. When the mate finds Tom aboard the vessel he vows to be avenged for the broken nose.

Chapter III.—During the passage Mr. Avery is knocked overboard accidentally by a squall and saved by Tom by jumping into the water with him. Mr. Avery is pried internally and about to die. He calls Tom to him and tells him all his money, $5,000, and also his share in a rich gold region which his partners have discovered and where he was going to join them. He gives Tom a letter from one of them which gives direction for finding the territory. The captain tells Tom that he will see that will serve as an identification when he gets there.

Chapter IV.—Rider hears the man's conversation with Tom and determines to get the papers and the gold which they settle the holder to. In San Francisco Tom is waylaid and robbed by Rider of the papers and almost stoney to death. He is put in the dungeon of the sailing vessel Seabird. Tom is found by the second mate of the Seabird, Green, who has left the sea to search for gold, and takes to his lodgings. Rider escapes and starts for Dyea.

Chapter V.—At Dyea Rider meets Tom's father, who has been in the gold fields and is returning home with a fortune. He asks for his son and his brother, and is told that Tom is dead, having died of fever while in Prince and been buried in the mountains of the Seabird. After giving Rider gold enough to help him reach the gold fields, Tom's father starts for Prince to find the sea captain, and from him learns that his son is not dead, but had started for the gold fields six days before.

Chapter VI.—Green believes Rider has stolen Tom's paper and money, and they try to find him.

CHAPTER VII.
RIDER GETS A SHOCK.

"And you expect me to believe all this yarn?"

"I tell you it's all straight. There's the letter. It's a chance that comes only once in a lifetime. I give you the chance because you have lent a hand while I was used up. It will make us both rich men."

With their foreheads nearly touching, Obed Rider and a stranger were conversing in low tones in the former's tent. They were not a handsome pair. The seaman's weather-stained, brutal countenance was a fitting mate for its companion, where the deep-set, color-less eyes, protruding cheek bones and shapeless mouth, together with a vulpine chin and fiendish eyebrows, descending to the nose in sharp arches, were nature's warning to his fellows.

Obed Rider's brute face was made more serious than he had at first imagined. The broken ribs pained him whenever he moved, and he was almost helpless. This man, who was known as Hank Bowers, was a desperate character who had lost his last cent at the gaming table. He attached himself to the mate with a view to robbing him at the first opportunity, but the latter, finding him to be utterly unscrupulous, had decided to enlist his services in his own schemes.

On the very night Tom landed at Dyea he was making the offer. He first informed his new friend that his name was Avery, then showed the letter from the old miner's partner, also the will drawn up on shipboard.

The other laughed insolently in his face as he went on and sneered:

"Come off! Do yer take me for a fool? If you was digging gold in '49 you was at it blusted young!"

Rider shook before his look, and he continued:

"See here, old man. Give us a straight deal. Them papers ain't none of yourn. You've pinched 'em somewhar. Of course that's your business, an' yer nin't obliged ter split on yerself. I ain't a man ter stick at trifles, but I don't go in with yer blind. Now, in the fust place, what's yer right name?"

Having obtained this information, he continued:

"All right. Now, the next thing is, how did yer git them papers?"

Rider dared not refuse to tell, but he said, sullenly:

"I took them from a young fellow in 'Frisco."

"Oh, you did! Now we are coming down to biz. He give 'em up fer the askin', I dare say."

"No," growled Rider, "I knocked him over and took 'em."

"Good! And did yer make a clean job of it? Did yer kill him?"

"I don't know. He was alive the next morning."

"Know who his kin is?"

"No."

"Then you're all right, and I'll join yer. Now, see here, Rider, if that is your name, there's one more to this than yer think. You say there is one man up to the place now besides the one that was to come in after grub in the spring. Now, why can't we run across this chap on his way, and—well, he must be taken care of. Then we can go to the place where the gold is and look after your other friend. We shall have the whole shootin' match to ourselves then. There's no proof as to stakin' out claims and layin' round loose, then sellin' out for big money when the rush comes? It's worth a million apiece to us, man!"

"But what about these men?" whispered Rider.

"Bah! Yer chicken! They'll never be missed!"

"You mean to murder them?"

"See here," said Bovers, "don't you be a fool. This thing has got to be managed right, an' it's lucky yer took me in. You'd spoiled the whole racket. I'd like ter see yer work it alone."

Rider's heart failed him for an instant, then a pull at the whisky bottle revived his courage, and for another hour the two conspirators continued to plot against the lives and wealth of their fellows.

They had decided to start at once on their villainous work, and the following morning they were astir before daylight. They wished to avoid observation as much as possible, and but few people saw them as they loaded their horses.

Bowers was attending to this, when Obed Rider, who had been bringing the goods to him, remembered that he had left some whisky to dry on a small bush not far away, and hurried after them.

By this time it was broad daylight, and fires were being started in the stoves here and there. He was passing close behind one of these when suddenly his heart seemed to leap into his throat, for at once he could not mistake sounded clearly:

"Hello, Green! You're up early! My! Ain't it hyar?"

It was Tom Scott's voice, and the mate stopped as though he had been shot. Glancing furtively over his shoulder he saw the second mate in the act of kindling a fire.

Even in the guilty man looked his shipmate turned suddenly toward him and started toward the entrance of the tent, while Rider turned his head away, but could not lift his feet from the spot.

"Hold on! Where's Rider?"

Rider dared not look up. He had been taken so completely by surprise that he could do nothing but stand still. Each second he expected to feel Green's hand on his shoulder, and he was too confused to think of any plausible story.

"Do they suspect me?"

This was the one thought that flashed through his brain as he waited.

"Hold on!" repeated Green, thrusting his head into the tent. "Take it easy until I get the fire going. Doesn't need but one of us."

With a gasp of relief the mate slouched his head over his eyes and hurried away from the spot as though a ghost were pursuing him. He did not stop until he had joined those who at once noticed his disordered appearance, and exclaimed:

"What's up, pard? You look like you was scared ter death."

"He's here! I saw them just now—"

"Who's that? Spaw who?"

"Scott! And Green is with him!"

"And who the devil is Scott and Green? Can't yer talk plain an' not stan' thar spluttrin' like yer was goin' ter flop? What's the row, that's what I want ter know?"

By this time the mate had found his tongue, and he said, hurriedly:

"Scott is the young chap I got the papers from, and the other was second mate of the vessel with me. We must get out of this quick!"

"Right ye are. They must hev come over from Shagway on the boat yesterday. T'wouldn't do for them ter see yer roun' here. They'd be on ter yer racket. Chuck them clothes on that hoss, an' let's light out. We've got ter git a big start on 'em, anyhow. 'Fair's likely they'll start to-day."

"I don't see how they got here," said Rider, as they started off through the tents, leading their horses. "I took every cent he had, and I don't believe the second mate had much."

"Well, they're here," replied his companion, philosophically, "an' of course they're bound for that mine. He's raised the stuff somehow. We've got ter git there first."

Half an hour later they had left Pyramid harbor behind them, and were riding along the trail as fast as they could urge the pack horses, while Tom and Green were discussing their rude breakfast, in blissful ignorance of how enormously they had missed the man who they fully believed to have already reached the writer of the lost letter.

Although they were eager to be off at once, it was impossible to start till the packs had fully recovered from the last voyage. They were too valuable to take any chances with and one of them was slightly lame from a fall in his cramped quarters on the steamer. To replace an animal was also impossible, for fabulous prices were being offered for anything that could by any possibility bear a burden.

Then again, it was necessary to make a careful search about the camp to see if the man Tarbox, mentioned in the letter, had arrived yet. If they could find him all would be plain sailing, and he could assist them back. There was also a chance that the dead miner's brother might be even then on the spot.

But they found it a difficult task to get any information. The population of the camp was changing daily. No one paused longer than was absolutely necessary, and each was too busy with his own affairs to take notice of others.

Besides this, they were obliged to avoid giving away details which might perhaps have helped them, and at the close of the second day Tom said, as they sat in front of their tent, smoking:

"It's no use, Green. We might as well be off and start in luck. We can't ask what we want to know without arousing suspicion and we'd better give it up. The horses seem to be in pretty good shape now and I move we start off in the morning."

Before his friend had time to reply a woman's voice sounded clear and distinct through the darkness:

"Help! Help!"

The two men sprung to their feet, Tom was a little in advance as they dashed off in the direction of the cries and soon first to arrive at a little opening, where a red-shirted figure was holding a struggling form in his arms. As he was nearly exhausting distance the female managed to free herself, but instead of running away she dealt the man a resounding slap on the cheek and panted:

"You big brute! You—you—"

This she could not have added was lost, for the ruffian, maddened by the stinging blow, raised his hand to strike her He was too late, however, for just as his fist was raised Tom dealt him a straight, right-hander that stretched him on the ground at full length.

He made an effort and scrambled to his feet, but it was apparent that he was half dazed by the blow and the liquor he had been drinking. He attempted to draw a revolver from his belt, but by this time he was surrounded by angry men who had been attracted to the spot by the noise.

He was seized by a dozen pairs of hands and his weapons removed. At first he attempted to struggle, but the muzzle of a revolver pressed close to his temple and a few cries of "Lynch him!" completely sobered him, and he now looked fearfully about him at the stern faces which beset him on every side.

"What?! we do with him, boys?" shouted a broad-shouldered giant who appeared to be a leading spirit.

"Hang the scamp!" cried a voice near by.

"Nonsense!" returned the big fellow. "What tenderfoot is talking now! It's no hanging matter to kiss a girl. Let's duck him in the salt water!"

A wild yell of delight greeted this proposition, and the trembling wretch was dragged off toward the beach without ceremony.

Tom and his friend were about to return to their tent when a hand was laid timidly on his arm, and a girl began to find himself confronted by the innocent cause of the trouble, who said, hurriedly:

"I thank you, sir, for your help. The man seized me from behind so suddenly that I screamed before I knew what I was doing. My father's tent is close by, and I just came out after some water."

Tom gazed with admiration at the girl before him. Some one had thrown an armful of wood on a fire a short distance away, and by the flickering light he could see her distinctly. She was apparently about 18 years old, with a low, broad forehead, large blue eyes, which met his freely, cheeks flushed with the excitement and a mass of hair, which, in too large perhaps for classic beauty, looked none the less bewitching. She was dressed in a tight-fitting waist and short skirt, her ankles protected by leggings, while a pair of stout shoes covered her feet.

The young man took all this in at a glance as he replied:

"That's nothing. I happened to get here first. Would you like to have me see you safe to your tent?"

The girl laughed and said, quickly:

"Oh, there's no danger! I was careless. I've got a revolver, and I know how to use it. I shall look out after this. The man was drunk, anyway. I'm safe here."

As she spoke she nodded brightly at Tom and turned to go, but at that instant a disfigured man hurried forward and exclaimed:

"Claral What is this I hear? Who hm—"

"It's all right, father," interrupted the young girl, laying her hand affectionately on his arm. "There's nothing the matter at all. A man had been drinking and tried to intrude himself, but this gentleman knocked him down. Then the rest came and took the rascal off to duck him; that's all."

"That's enough, I should say," was the reply, and turning to Tom, the man extended his hand, saying:

"I thank you, young man. It's the first time I've known a woman to be insulted here, and I'm glad you came to my girl's aid so promptly. I'm obliged to you. Perhaps I can do you a good turn some day. I'm an old miner, and you ore probably new at this sort of life. Where are you from?"

"I'm from New Hampshire," replied Tom, who could not keep his eyes from the girl's face. "My name is Scott, and this is my partner, Mr. Green."

"My name is Avery," said the stranger, "and I'm from the east, too. Drop in and see me to-morrow. That's my tent over there. Good night. Come, Clara."

There had been something strangely familiar in the man's tones to Tom, and when he announced his name the truth burst upon the young man all at once.

"Wait!" he cried. "Avery! Surely you must be John Avery's brother!"

The elder man turned with an exclamation of amazement, while the girl cried:

"O, father! He knows Uncle John!"

"What do you know of John Avery?" said he at length, looking Tom full in the face as if he doubted the evidence of his own ears.

"I sailed with him from Boston last winter," was the prompt reply. "Mr. Green, there, was the second mate of the vessel. We came round Cape Horn."

"And where is he now?"

"Tom paused. He knew not how to tell the sad news, and looked helplessly at his partner, who dropped his eyes.

"Why don't you speak? Has anything happened to him?"

The man's voice was husky, and he took a step forward.

"We buried him at sea," said Tom, in a broken voice in which the other could but feel the ring of deep sorrow.

"John dead!"

For a moment the stricken man struggled for composure, the big tears coursing down his cheeks the while, his daughter burying her face on his breast and sobbing aloud. When he could speak the former said:

"Thisis and news, gentlemen, to come so sudden. Come to my tent. I must know the particulars. Poor John! I'll think liist he should be taken away in the prime of his life!"

CHAPTER VIII.
ON THE DALTON TRAIL.

The two young men followed him in silence. When they reached the tent Tom repeated the story of his sequaintance with the old miner, touching as lightly as possible on the two occasions in which he had risked his own life, but a pair of blue eyes were fixed upon him all the while, and the girl's face showed that she fully appreciated and admired his derring.

Her father made but few interruptions while Tom described the deathbed scene, and then he said:

"Have you the papers now?"

"Yes, sir," was the reply, but I know them by heart. I was waylaid and robbed in San Francisco. See, here is the scar."

As he spoke he beat his head, and then went on:

"We have reason to believe the mate of the vessel, a man named Rider, found what your brother said to me when he was dying and that he was the rascal who waylaid me, and took the papers. He disappeared, and we think he came here and started up the trail to pass himself off as the rightful owner of the will. He has had a long start, and may be there before this."

Avery was silent for a moment, and then he said, frankly:

"I don't want to doubt your word, Scott, but I must take every precaution. Before I admit anything, tell me what the letter to John said, and what it was signed."

Tom promptly complied, and apparently satisfied the latter, for he extended his hand, exclaiming:

"That's right, and you shall have John's share if I can get it. Shall we go on together? I have been waiting here to look in here on account of the box. He was coming down after supplies this month."

"You'd better start at once," said Tom. "We may meet him, and besides I feel sure the mate is there somewhere."

"Would you know this man Tarbox if you saw him?" added Tom.

"Yes," was the reply. "He's a new partner Taylor has picked up out here."

"Do you know Taylor?"

"Yes. He left here out together to the California mines in the '50s. Poor John was one of us. Dick Taylor loved him as though he had been a brother too. It'll be sad news for him to hear your story."

It was late that night when Tom and Green returned to their tent. It had been decided to make sure that the man had not arrived from the mine, and, should they be unable to hear of him, they were to start on the day following.

The sailor threw himself down on his bed of boughs and was asleep almost instantly, but Tom Scott could see a pair of blue eyes when his own were tightly shut. He dreamt that their glance was a sad jumble of gold mines and fair damsels in distress, and he awoke but little refreshed.

The day was spent in quiet but fruitless inquiries for the man they sought, and the following morning a little caravan filed away from the harbor, Avery and his daughter leading, Tom led the way on his horse, the pack horses came next, Avery and his daughter followed and Green brought up the rear.

The Dalton trail is over an undulating country all the way to Fort Selkirk, and can easily be traveled on horseback the entire distance of some 375 miles. Tom had relieved one member of the partnership attendant upon the other trails, and it was with a lively heart that Tom looked down the well-defined path.

The pack horses had come lame, and they were obliged to abandon it or go into camp. They chose the former, and left Green to burden among the others as best they could.

The second night found them many miles on their journey, but as night came on the weary beasts could hardly be forced ahead, and Hank Bowers cursed the delay roundly.

"We might as well stop here," he growled at last, after helping one of the horses to regain its feet after stumbling. "Get them packs off, will yer, while I see about the fire. I'm as hungry as a shark."

The tent was soon set up, and after supper was disposed of and pipes lighted he said:

"See here, Rider, let's have a sort o' understanding 'bout this job. 'Spose we meet this man Tarbox, then what? We've got ter have our yarns so they'll agree. I guess now is a good time ter fix it up. You don't want ter forget that yer name is Scott. I'll call you Tom all right enuff. You and the young chap jump overboard and save the old feller, an' you can tell that yarn all right. Any darned fool can see you are a salt water chap, an' he'll swallow that part of it."

Rider nodded, and the other went on:

"I've been thinkin' this out an' I've come ter the conclusion that we must pump him about how we get over the place where the gold is an' let him go on ter Dyea after his grub. He won't hev enough stuff with him to make it worth our while to stop him. See?"

After a pause he continued:

"We'll keep on sud find this other feller what sent the letter. They've got a big start all day by this time, and we must hev it. He'll drop out o' sight."

Rider's face showed that he did not understand the other's meaning, and the miner repeated:

"He'll git off the earth! Understand? Then when we hev the place all to ourselves, Mr. Tarbox will come back with a lot of grub. We'll tell him his pard got starved out afore we reached the place an' took their stuff with him. He'll never know the odds, and if he does make any trouble, there's a mighty quick way of stopping his mouth."

As he spoke he dropped his hand significantly to the butt of the heavy revolver at his hip and his face took on such an evil look that the caste's blood ran cold in his veins. He began to feel decidedly uneasy in this man's company. What assurance had he that this unscrupulous ruffian would not treat him in the same manner after his ends were served?

As if reading his thoughts Bowers laughed loudly and exclaimed:

"What's the matter, Rider? 'Fraid I'll go back on yer? Don't worry as long as you use me on the square. I'll stick ter yer, but yer too chicken hearted for a job like this."

The day had been very warm and sunny, for summer comes all at once in this part of the country. They had built a small fire to make their coffee, and were lying in their tent where they could command quite a view of the trail ahead. It was still light, and as the speaker glanced carelessly over the valley in which they had halted he uttered a sharp exclamation and sprung to his feet.

"That's something movin' over thar!" he said quickly, shading his eyes with his hand as if to aid his vision. "It's a man an' he's afoot, headin' for our fire, jest as sure's yer born! Ten dollars ter one it's our mail Remember you're Walter Tom Scott, and don't make a mess of it!"

Rider soon saw a dark figure drawing near them, and when it was but a few rods away a man's voice shouted:

"Hello, there!"

"Hello!" responded Bowers, stepping from the tent.

The stranger came rapidly toward him, and there was light enough to reveal a powerfully-built man of middle age, who wore a small pack on his back and carried a serviceable looking revolver at his belt. His beard was long and unkempt, but he walked with a long, swinging step, which told of unimpaired vigor.

When he reached the tent he looked sharply at he two men. As his eyes rested upon Rider's companion a puzzled look came over them for an instant, but he said, heartily:

"Hello, mates, which way are you bound?"

"Up this way," replied Bowers, jerking his thumb in the direction from which the stranger had appeared.

"Going up the Yukon way?"

"Not quite."

The man looked a bit uneasy, but Bowers, who had been watching his face closely, now said:

"Dump your load, pardner, an' camp along with us. We've got some prime coffee an' bacon, an' them ossals is jest right ter cook on. We've had luck yer welcome. If yer jest in from a long tramp I dare say as yer kinder low on grub."

Without waiting for a reply he seized the coffee pot and set to work in a way which showed he was no novice.

The stranger laid aside his pack, and was soon eating with a relish, which did justice to his host's appetites. When he could ent no more Bowers said:

"Got any tobacco?"

"Haven't had a smoke for a month," was the reply.

"That's tough! Here's a pipe. Join us."

His manner was so sordial and frank that Rider looked at him in wonder. The stranger eagerly accepted the pipe, and for a few moments sat in silence, drawing huge puffs of the fragrant weed with an enjoyment which fairly spoke for itself.

Suddenly Rider's companion slapped his thigh as though he had just thought of something wonderful, and, turning to the mate with a look of cunning, exclaimed:

"By thunder, Scott, you don't suppose this is—"

He stopped in the middle of the sentence and looked searchingly at the stranger, then continued:

"It would be funny, wouldn't it, Scott, if we had met him out here! You know the letter said he was comin' down this month fer grub."

The stranger looked wonderingly at the two men and Bowers hastened to say:

"Excuse me, stranger, but might your name be Tarbox?"

The man took his pipe from his lips and stared at the speaker for full a second before replying, then he replied:

"It might be and it is. How did you know?"

"An' yer pardner's name is Taylor?"

This time the man was too astonished to reply, and Bowers went on:

"You're goin' ter Dyea after grub, an' he's back in the hills. Ain't that all straight?"

Joe Tarbox rose to his feet and laid his hand on his weapon, saying in a quiet tone:

"That is correct, but it's my turn to ask questions now. How did you find all this out?"

Bowers turned to the mate and said, promptly:

"Tom, old man, you tell him our yarn an' let him see the documents. That'll soon put things straight."

"My name is Scott, sir," said Rider. "I was an officer on the ship where a man named John Avery died. He was coming out here on account of a letter from an old chum of his named Dick Taylor. The old chap fell overboard and I pulled him aboard after a hard rassle. We come nigh going to Davy Jones, both of us, and he never got over it. We buried him out to sea and he drawed up a writing to make me his heir. He give me a letter he got from this Taylor, telling how to get to a gold mine he'd been working.

"He told me to take what money was in his bels and I did. He said he'd no family. The letter said for him to bring some one with him if he needed any help, and as I didn't know nothing about horses and shore diging, I brought Bowers here along with me. That's the whole yarn as well as a rough sailor man can spin it."

Bowers' face showed his approval of the mate's efforts and Tarbox was apparently convinced, for he shook hands warmly with the speaker and exclaimed:

"It's a lucky thing I met you. Dick told me he had written to both the Averys. They were old friends of his. He told me to look out for them in Dyea. Have you got the papers with you?"

"That's what I have. Here they are, all shipshape and above board," replied Rider as he produced a roll of parchment from his belt.

Tarbox's Dick Taylor's fist the world over," assented Tarbox as he examined the letter. "I remember the day he wrote that to our tent. We had just found the first big nug—"

He coughed to hide his confusion and then added:

"It's all right, of course, but a man has to be careful. Once let the mob know where we are and we're found and we'd be overrun in no time."

As luck would have it Hank Bowers chose this instant, when Tarbox was examining the papers, to throw a look of ferocious triumph in the mate. Although neither of them noticed the fact, Joe Tarbox raised his eyes just then, and in a man of his training nothing more was needed to put him on his guard.

He cast a keen look at Bowers, and as if his scrutiny had been satisfactory, he dropped his eyes again, but there was a little hardening of the muscles about his jaw, and with a careless twist of his body he brought his weapon nearer his hand.

He was too old a hand, however, to betray outward sign of alarm, and said, coolly:

"It's a pity you didn't pick up the other letter, sir, and Dyea. He ought to be there by this time."

"And how can we find your pardner?" asked Bowers.

"Do just as the letter says," replied Tarbox. "Build a fire and he'll see the smoke and come. The route is too crooked to describe."

"How long afore you'll be back with the grub? We've got good lot here, but you can't hev too much."

"It'll take me three days to get in and two or three more to get what I want. If I can't find horses I shall have to go to Skaguay. I shan't be back under a fortnight or three weeks at the best."

After finding hispipe, Tarbox pleaded fatigue, and rolled himself up in his blanket. But there was no sleep for him that night. The sinister look on Bowers' face had given him the clew he wanted, and as he waited patiently for daylight he muttered to himself:

"That was a close shave! There is something wrong shout that sailor, if his company is anything to go by. If this Bowers isn't the man I saw driven out of Joe Ladue's station for stealing, then I'm mistaken. Dick will be all right. They may make all the fires they want to, and that's all the good they'll do them. I'll just bring back two or three men of the right sort with me. There's no other way."

At the first sign of daylight he was astir. A hasty meal was soon eaten, while shaking hands cordially with both men, he said:

"Tell Diek I'll be back as soon as I can! Don't touch the mail!"

Then he struck out manfully on the back track to Dyea, leaving the plotters standing in front of their tent, exulting.

PRESIDENT MCKINLEY has issued a proclamation to the people of Cuba calling upon them to assist the officials in the taking of the census in that island. His object in ordering this census, he says, is that he may thereby succeed the more intelligently to the establishment of an effective form of self-government. Here again is Mc-Kinley's wisdom shown and furthermore it is evident that he intends to grant to the Cubans as soon as practical such form of self-government as their situation and condition may demand.

THUS indirectly does the Aitkin Age give the names of some of the candidates for the position of postmaster in that town: There are others who think they can Tinker up this appointment so it will fall to some old soldier, but Haugeu they do it. That's the question. Morris, of course, hopes there won't be too many Harrison' him for places, so it will have to go to Probate Judge for yourselves, however, who the lucky chap will be. And whoop'er up, boys, for you may all be in you political Graves before another postoffice fight comes around.

IT is becoming the custom in many states to endorse the candidacy of certain men for the United States senatorship. This was done in the case of Senator Davis and the friends of Senator Nelson are urging that the next republican state convention place Senator Nelson in nomination. This custom seems to he a step in the direction of taking away from the state legislature the full power to elect as United States senator whomsoever they choose, and will, if carried to its ultimate conclusion result in the election of these senators hy direct vote of the people.

THE North Dakota regiment just returned from Manila received an ovation at San Francisco and the next regiment to reach home from the far east will the 13th of Minnesota and when our boys reach Minneapplis, then, if ever, there will be a demonstration. All this is done in recognition of the fact that these men sacrificed themselves for the sake of their native laud and humanity. It is a tribute that is well deserved.

THE action of the city council in definitely deciding to pave the streets in the business portion of the city will meet with the approval of the vast majority if not all of the citizens of Crookston and the only regret that we have about the matter is that the action was not taken sooner. However, this blot on the escutcheon of the city, namely the muddy streets, will soon be removed, and in place thereof we will have hard macadamized roads. Such a state of affairs will be of inestimable value to the city. Huudreds of people, in the past, who have come to Crookston with the intention of remaining here have turned away when they saw the condition of our business streets in spring, but all this will now be remedied and Crookseon will thrive and prosper more in the future than in the past.

MUCH capital was made during the last campaign out of the alleged mismanagement of the grain inspection of the state and great promises of reform in this department were made by Lind and his followers. Well, some changes have been made. The head inspectors, the men who really control the grading of the wheat, have been superseded by political appointees. The result is that eastern buyers are as yet purchasing but little grain, as they are in doubt as to the reliability of the Minnesota grades this year. They fear that the wheat is to be graded too liberally. Some mistakes in grain grading were undoubtedly made in the past—where is there a perfect system in anything? but the present uncertainty that exists with regard to what may be the character of wheat of a certain grade is even now having its effect upon the market. Lind is trying to gain the good will of the farmer but the latter may find this reform business quite costly to him.

PRESIDENT MCKINLEY has recently made two able and telling speeches, one at Ocean Grove, N. J. and the other at Pittsburg, on the return of the Tenth Pennsylvania from Manila. In these he openly announced his policy in the Philippines. "Peacefirst, then, with charity for all, establish a government of law and order, protecting life and property and occupation, for the well-heing of the people who will participate in it under the stars and stripes. More men and ammunition will be sent if required for the speedy suppression of the rebellion, the establishment of peace and tranquility and a government under the undisputed sovereignty of the United States—a government which will do justice to all and encourage the efforts and aspiration of these distant people, and the highest development of their rich and fertile lands." No one save a partisan can doubt that this is the best course to pursue hoth for the Filipinos and for the United States. The man speaking the above quoted words makes it evident that he is a friend of the Filipinos but that he recognizes that peace must precede good government.

THE platforms of the democratic state conventions, several of which have met recently, are indicative of the issues upon which the democrats will go before the people next year, hence these platforms are interesting reading. The democats of Ohio last week declared for the Chicago platform, demanded Bryan's renomination in 1900, attacked the goverement's policy in the Philippines, scored the trusts, and denounced the secret and vicious alliance now in evidence between England and the republicrn administration whereby this nation may become involved in war with foreign nations." This is virtually the same as the other democratic platforms and shows that Bryan still has a tolerably firm grip upon the democrats. The appeal to the prejudice against England—no alliance of any kind exists—which prejudice gradually dying out, evinces a narrow spirit.

A bicycle license must now be taken out in Grand Forks.

Rural mail delivery on the two routes leading out from Red Wing will commence on Tuesday, Sept. 5.

The income from the war revenue taxes for the last fiscal year was $102,317,163; over $17,000,000 was obtained from stamp taxes.

The village of Walker on Leech Lake is to have a system of electric works, and has bonded the village for $6,000 for that purpose.

No large sales of stumpage will be held this year, probably none at all. That has been decided by the state timber board, Gov. Lind, Auditor Dunn and Treasurer Koerner.

F. J. Steidl, of Wheaton, Traverse county, has been appointed by Gov. Lind to succeed Judge C. L. Brown of the Sixteenth judicial district, who takes his place on the supreme bench Jan. 1.

Minnesota this year raises 93,000,000 bushels of wheat, and other crops in proportion. There have been no droughts, no chinch bugs, no grasshoppers, and the farmers have all been blessed with fairly good crops. You'll have to hunt a long while for say better locality to dwell in.

It is feared that over-indulgence in tobacco may have a prejudicial effect upon the Latin-American peoples, especially those in South America. According to Prometheus, not only do children of two or three years smoke all day long, but mothers have been seen trying to quiet their babies by putting cigars in their mouths.

The state railway and warehouse commission decided to increase the inspection fee for weighing and inspecting grain to 20 cents a car for each service. It is estimated that this fee will cover the expenses of the weighmer department, including the additional expenses of maintaining the board of appeals, $20,000 a year. The fee has herestofore been 15 cents per car.

The binder twine factory at the prison in Stillwater turned out 5,370,485 pounds of twine during the year ending Aug. 1, which was manufactured at a cost of $360,210.31. The twine produced sold for $421,720.16, leaving a profit of $98,153.01. The sum of $194,311.33 was received in cash for twine, 9225,624.23 in notes, and $1,804.20 on account.

Twelve steel arches, each weighing thirty-three tons, which were required in the construction of the Coliseum building in course of erection on Wabash avenue, Chicago, fell to the ground on Monday, killing nine workmen. Nearly all of the men were at work on the top of the arches, forty feet from the ground. Most of them were killed outright. The cause of the accident has not yet been determined.

Although the wheat crop of the United States is put down at 535,000,000 bushels as compared with 675,000,000 bushels in 1898, yet this year's crop has never been exceeded except in 1891 and 1898. There is no shortage of wheat in this country, as considerable has been left over from last season. But there is a shortage of about 100,000,000 bushels in the Russian crop, which has been one chief competitor, and this is the shortage which will probahly keep prices above the level of last season.

Notes From Exchanges.

Cass Lake Times: To be or not to be—that is the burning question.

Warren Register:—If Congressman McCleary could be induced to make the run for governor, he would, in our opinion, be the strongest man the republicans could put up against Lind. It is not likely, however, that the people of his district will permit him to close his congressional career yet.

Red Lake Falls Gazette:—Under the management of Kirsch & Montague the Grand opera house has assumed its right station. The enterprising young men in charge are showing what can be done by up-to-date methods and a little American push. The list of attractions has included some of the best things going.

Herman Enterprise:—A lady who took the examination for a teacher's first grade certificate says that if she wanted to find out whether a child was short sighted, she would draw a line on the blackboard and ask the child to tell how long it was. If the estimate fell before the reality, she would know he was short sighted. Talk about mummery!

Halstad Reporter:—Abraham Hoil and commenced threshing on his place last Friday, and threshed out 1,500 bushels of wheat on a little over 25 acres, averaging about 20 bushels per acre and over 1,000 a day. Monday he left his many acres standing and commenced to thresh for his neighbors, to give them a chance to begin plowing. He expects about 5,000 bushels of wheat on his place.

Ada Index:—It is the first time in forty years that we have a Democrat governor, and it is also the first time in forty years that a governor of Minnesota has presumed to dictate to the state boards with regard to the appointment of subordinates. It is the governor's business to appoint members of the boards for the various state institutions, but it is distinctively the duty of these hoards and not the governor's to fill the positions in those institutions.

Sigourney News: We always feel sorry for a girl who is struck on a fellow who will spend a dollar for ice cream and chocolates and three for a Sunday buggy ride for her, on a six dollar a week salary. Somehow we see visions of barefooted children, a frowsy headed woman over a wash tub, tin cans for dishes on the table and a combination of corn cob pipe and a man in the kitchen corner. The young man who lives within his means while single usually has means after he is married.

Fergus Tribune Tows:—Well well! At last Crookston citizens have decided to improve their streets. They will be macadamized—that is, the main business streets. We have ever been in Crookston during the spring of the year or after a rain but what they have felt more or less unkindly towards the country on account of its unfathomable and clinging mud. But now that awful mud will soon be a thing of the past and it will be a pleasure always to visit Polk county's fairest city.

Ada Herald:—That clover can be successfully raised in Norman county is beyond dispute. It is a settled fact that it did not take longer to find out after the first experiments were made than it took in new localities far to the south of us where clover now claims its most congenial home. A condition for successful clover growing on our level lands is that the meadow be not closely cropped or cut in the fall in order that it may gather the early snow and go into the winter quarters with an overcoat on.

Alexandria Post-News: Langum has friends. Personally he is one of those wholly selfish fellows who seem to get there every time, no matter how everything from them. He is a fighter, for himself; we never heard of his hurting himself for anyone else. He is always going, not crawling, has a big stick and has most of the qualities of a "good fellow," though he is a poor loser. He has lost a few hundreds on a defaulting hank and talked of it for months and demanded the secretaryship of the senate to make his loss good. His other record is that while he had done for Minneapolis whose senators were urged to vote for him because he had, in plain words, thrown Vanhant for Eustis.

HER BIT OF WISDOM.

"WOMEN—fools?" said this turbaned degenerate between the puffs of the pipe from his hookah. "No, sir; she more wise than two serpents, and when 'she love more geatle than Alahamed's own dove. Bismillah! listen." He signal house; but ze ship gone, and no one believe his tale. One rear and half afore then he find Joyce and Alphonse at Port Said, but him could prove nothing."

True Farm Philosophy.

If you have a little farm and are out of debt, don't fret and work yourself and good wife into premature graves for the sake of getting more land and making more money. You have but one life to live, and it is a very brief one at the best. Take a little comfort as you go along day by day, and try to do a little good to others. A mortal, insatiate desire to possess the earth, to grab everything in sight, lies at the foundation of more unhappiness in this world than any other one thing. After you are gone the world will not long remember you by the size of the estate you have left behind you, but a good life well lived will long keep your memory green.

Trouble in East Grand Forks Schools.

The East Grand Forks people are in the midst of a school fight of the biggest proportions. Prof H. C. Crippen and a corps of teachers, all save two Normal school graduates, were hired last spring to teach during the coming school year. The new school board met last Tuesday night and decided to elect an entirely new corps of teachers, the idea, it seems, being to hire teachers whose homes are in East Grand Forks. Prof. Crippen will take the matter into the courts. It is reported that it is the intention of the school board to employ Prof. Casey of the Fisher Schools as principal in place of Mr. Crippen.

Prof. Green, who has charge of the department of horticulture and forestry at the Agricultural college at St. Anthony Park, spent last Friday with Supt. Hoverstad.

—Will Lycan of Crookston, E. B. Swygard of St. Paul and Howard Beal of Indianapolis composed a hunting party that went after the prairie chickens the first of the month.

—Mrs. E. V. Brockaw of Litchfield spent last Saturday in Crookston, the guest of friends. She was on her way to Grand Forks where she will visit with her son, the city editor of the Plaindealer.

—Among others of our townspeople who shouldered their guns and started out the first of the month to hunt the prairie chickens were J. A. Sargeant, Gal Dunlavs, James E. O'Brien, Charles Brennan, Joe Koenel, W. E. Howe, Bert Anderson and Al Vanstrum.

—The record in the register of deeds office shows that during the month of August 238 instruments were filed, of which 44 were mortgages, 77 satisfactions, 75 deeds, 21 assignment of mortgages, 5 patents and 26 miscellaneous. The total receipts for the month were $245.70, which is $83.40 more than for the month of August, 1898.

—Billy Munch, of Crookston, was in town the first of the week. By the way, Billy has become an ardent supporter of the good road movement since riding over that now road down to Freeman's camp and doing a turn at high and lofty tumbling when the wagon struck an unusually large stump in the road. A snap shot at Billy just as he went up in the air would have made an intensely interesting picture.—Turtle River Pine Tree.

Billy's version of the case is that the editor of the Pine Tree was driving and the next time he goes out for a pleasure trip through the woods no newspaper man need apply for the responsible particularly so out there-position of coachman.

High School Notes.

The classes are now fully organized and the work will proceed regularly from now on.

There are only a few empty seats in the high school now and it is expected that they will be filled shortly by early scholars.

A new course has been formed which will be known as the scientific course. It differs from the Latin scientific in that the pupil may take two years of German and two years of French or two years of Latin and two of French or German, instead of four years of Latin. It is apparently quite popular as most of the freshmen have chosen it in preference to the other courses. In classes will begin next The French year.

Many of the pupils were pleased to learn that civics has been again taken up. It was dropped several years ago.

THE DRUMS OF THE FORE AND AFT.

By RUDYARD KIPLING.

And a little child shall lead them

In the army list they still stand as "The Fore and Fit Prince of Bohemia's own Sigma-Stargrave-Jassin's Merther-Tydfilshire Own Royal Loyal Light Infantry, Regimental District 203A," but the army through all its barracks and canteens knows them now as the "Fore and Aft." They sang in time do something that shall make their new title honorable but at present they are bitterly ashamed, and the man who calls them Fore and Aft does so at the risk of the head which is on his shoulders.

Two words breathed into the stables of a certain cavalry regiment will bring the nose out into the streets with bolts and mops and bad language, but a whisper of Fore and Aft will bring out this regiment with rifles.

Their one excuse is that they came again and did their best to finish the job in style. But for a time all their world knows that they were openly hexted, whipped, dumb cowed, shaking and afraid. The men know it; their officers know it; the Horse Guards know it, and when the next war comes the enemy will know it also. There are two or three regiments of the line that have a black mark against their names which they will then wipe out, and it will be excessively incanvenient for the troops upon whom they do their wiping.

The courage of the British soldier is officially supposed to be above proof, and, as a general rule, it is so. The exceptions are decently shoveled out of sight, only to be referred to in the freshet of ungarnished talk that occasionally drowns mess table or midnight. Then onn hears strange and horrible stories of man not following their officers, of orders being given to those who had no right to give them, and of disgrace that, but for standing lack of the British army, might have ended in brilliant disaster. These are unpleasant stories to listen to, and the messes tell them under their breath sitting by the big wood fires, and the young officer bows his head and thinks to himself, please God, his men shall never behave unhandily.

The British soldier is not altogether to be blamed for occasional lapses, but this verdict he should not know. A moderately intelligent general will waste six months in mastering the craft of the particular war that he may be waging, a colonel may nitely understand the capacity of his regiment for three months after it has taken the field, and even a company commander may err and be deceived as to the temper and temperament of his own handful. wherefore the soldier, and the soldier of to-day more particularly, should not be blamed for failing him. He should be shot or hanged afterward—poor encouragor les antres—but he should not be vilified in the newspapers that is want of tact and waste of space

He has, let us say, been in the service of the empress for perhaps three years. He will leave in another two years He has no inherited morals and four years are not sufficient to drive toughness into his fiber, or to teach him how holy a thing is his regiment. He has learned to drink, he wants to enjoy himself—in India he wants to save money—and he does not in the least like getting hurt. He has received just sufficient education to make him understand half the purport of the orders he receives and to speculate on the nature of clean, incised and shattering wounds. Thus, if he is told to deploy under fire preparatory to an attack, he knows that he runs a very great risk of being killed while he is deploying, and suspects that he is being thrown away to gain ten minutes time. He may object to deploy with desperate swiftness, or he may shuffle or bunch or break, according to the discipline under which he has lain for fourteen years.

Armed with imperfect knowledge, cursed with the rudiments of an imagination, hampered by the intense selfishness of the lower classes and unsupported by any regimental associations, this young man is suddenly introduced to an enemy who in eastern lands is always ugly, generally tall and hairy and frequently noisy. If he looks to the right and the left and sees old soldiers —men of 12 years' service, who, he knows, know what they are about—taking a charge, rush or demonstration without embarrassment, he is consoled and applies his shoulder to the butt of his rifle with a stout heart. His peace is the greater if he hears a senior, who has taught him his soldiering and broken his head on occasion, whispering: "They'll shoot and carry on like this for five minutes. Then they'll rush in, and then we've got 'em by the short hairs!

But, on the other hand, if he sees only men of his own term of service turning white and playing with their triggers and saying: "What the hell's up now?" while the company commanders are sweating into their sword hilts and shouting, "Front rank fix bayonets! Steady there—steady! Sight for 300—no, for 500! Lie down, all! Steady! Front rank, kneel!" and so forth, he becomes unhappy and grows acutely miserable when he hears a comrade turn over with the rattle of fire irons falling into the fender and the grunt of a poleaxed ox. If he can be moved about a little and allowed to watch the effect of his own fire on the enemy, he feels merciful and may be then worked up to the blind passion of fighting, which is, contrary to general belief, controlled by a chilly devil and shakes men like ague. If he is not moved about and begins to feel cold at the pit of the stomach and in that crisis is badly-mauled and hears orders that were never given, he will break, and he will break badly, and of all things under the sight of the sun there is nothing more terrible than a broken British regiment. When the worst comes to the worst and the panic is really epidemic, the men must be e'en let go, and the company commanders had better escape to the enemy and stay there for safety's sake. If they can be made to come again, they are not pleasant men to meet, because they will not break down.

A powerfully prayerful highland regiment, officered by rank Presbyterians, is perhaps one degree more terrible in action than a hard bitten thousand of irresponsible Irish rifmans led by unest inspurper young subalterers.

Which bomily brings me directly to a brace of the most finished little fiends that ever banged drums or tootled fife in the band of a British regiment. They exuded their sinful career by open and flagrant instinct, and were shot for it. Their names were Jakin and Law—Piggy Law—and they were bold. bad drummer boys, both of them, frequently hirched by the drum major of the Fore and Aft.

Jakin was a stunted child of 14, and Law was about the same age. When not locked up either they smoked and drank They swore habitually after the manner of the barrack room, which is a dull weeping and comes from between clinched teeth. and they fonght religiously once a week. Jakin had sprung from some London gutter and may or may not have passed through Dr. Barnado's hands ere he arrived at the dignity of drummer boy Law could remember nothing except the regiment and the delight of listening to the band from his earliest years. He hid somewhere in his grimy little soul a genuine love for music and was most mistakenly furnished with the head of a cherubinsonnch that beautiful ladies who watched the regiment in church were wont to speak of him as a "darling." They never heard his vitriolic comments on their dress and morals as he walked back to barracks with the band and matured fresh canses of offense against Jakin.

The other drummer boys hated both lads on account of their illogical conduct. Jakin might be pounding Law or Law might be rubbing Jakin's head in the dirt, but directly either of aggression on the part of an outsider was met by the combined forces of Law and Jakin, and the instances were many painful. The boys were the lishmeals of the corps, but wealthy lishmeals, for they sold battles in alternate weeks for the sport of the barracks when they were not united against other boys. and thus they amassed money

On this particular day there was dissension in the camp. They had just been convicted afresh of smoking, which is bad for little boys who use plug tobacco, and Law's conscience was that Jakin had "stunk so 'orrid bad from keepin the pipa in pocket" that he and he alone was responsible for the birching they were both tingling under.

"I tell you I 'id the pipe back o' barricks," said Jakin with much warmth.

"You're a bloomin liar!" said Law without heat.

"You 'rit a bloomin little harstard!" said Jakin, strong in the knowledge that some words may be unknown.

Now there is one word in the extended vocabulary of barrack room abuse that cannot be without deep comment. You may call a man a thief and risk nothing. You may even call him a liar without finding more than a hot word whix past your ear. but you must not call a man a bastard unless you are prepared to prove it on the front teeth.

"You might ha' kep' that till I wasn't so sore," said Law sorrowfully dodging round Jakin's guard.

"I'll make you sorer," said Jakin genially and got home on Law's allunter forehead. All would have gone well, and this story, as the books say, would never have been written, had not his evil fate prompted the bazaar regiment's son, a long. emplovless man of five and twenty, to put in his appearance after the first round. He was certainly in need of money and knew that the boys had silver.

"Fighting again," said he. "I'll report you to my father, and he'll report you to the color sergeant."

"What's that to you?" said Jakin with an unpleasant dilation of the nostrils.

"Oh, nothing to me. You'll get into trouble, and you've been up too often to afford that."

"What the hell do you know about what we've done?" said Law the Scab. "You aren't in the army, you lonsy, caglin civilian."

He stood in on the man's left flank.

"Jes' 'cause you find two gentlemen settlin their diff'rences with their fistes you stick in your ugly mug unless you aren't wanted. Run 'ome to your 'arf caste sist of a ma—or we'll give you what for," said Jakin.

The man attempted reprisals by knocking the boys' heads together. The bazaar woman would have succeeded had not Jakin punched him vehemently in the stomach, or had Law confined himself to kicking his shins. They fought together, bleeding and breathless, for half an hour, and, after many punishment, triumphantly pulled down their opponent as terriers pull down a jackal.

"Now," gasped Jakin, "I'll give you what for." Ha proceeded to pound the man's features while Law stamped on the dangling portions of his anatomy. Chivalry is not a strong point in the composition of the average drummer boy The fight was to his betters, to make his mark.

Ghastly was the ruin that escaped, and awful was the wrath of the bazaar sergeant. Awful, too, was the scene in orderly room when the two reprobates appeared to answer the charge of half murdering a "civilian." The bazaar sergeant thirsted for a criminal action, and his son lied. The boys stood to attention while the black cloaks of evidence accumulated.

"You little devils are more troubles than the rest of the regiment put together," said the colonel angrily. "One night as well admonish thistle down, and I can't well put you in cells or order stoppages You must be flogged again."

"Beg your pardon, sir. Can't we say nothin in our own defense, sir?" shrilled Jakin.

"Hey! What! Are you going to argue with me?" said the colonel.

"No, sir," said Law. "But if a man comes to you, sir, an said he was goin to report you, sir, for 'avin a bit of a turn up with a friend, sir, an wanted to get money out o' you, sir"—

The orderly room exploded in a roar of laughter. "Well?" said the colonel.

"That was what that measly jarrwar there did, sir, an 'e'd 'a' done it, sir, if we 'adn't prevented 'im. We didn't 'it 'im much, sir. 'E 'adn't no manner o' right to interfere with us, sir. I don't mind bein flogged by the drum major, sir, nor yet reported by any corp'ral, but I'm—but I don't think it's fair, sir, for a civilian to come an talk over a man in the army."

A second shont of laughter shook the orderly room, but the colonel was grave

"What sort of characters have these boys?" he asked of the regimental sergeant major.

"Accordin to the bandmaster, sir,' returned that reverend official—the only word in the regiment whom the boys feared—"they do everything but fly, sir."

"Is it like we'd go for that man for fan, sir?" said Law, pointing to the plaintiff

"Oh, admonished—admonished!" said the colonel testily, and when the boys had gone he read the bazaar sergeant's son a lecture on the sin of unprofitable meddling and gave orders that the bandmaster should keep the drums in better discipline.

"If either of you comes to practice again with so much as a scratch on your two ugly little faces," thundered the bandmaster, "I'll tell the drum major to take the skin off your backs. Understand that, you young devils."

Then he repented of his speech for just the length of time that Law, looking like a seraph in red worsted embellishments, took the place of one of the trumpets—in bandmaster-and drummer the echo of a battle piece. Law certainly was a musician and had often in his more exalted moments expressed a yearning to master avery instrument of the band.

"There's nothing to prevent your becoming a bandmaster, Law," said the bandmaster, who had composed waltzes of his own and worked day and night in the interests of the band.

"What did he say?" demanded Jakin after practice.

"Said I might be a bloomin bandmaster an be asked in to 'ave a glass o' sherry wine on mess nights."

"Ho! Said you might be a bloomin noncombatant, did 'e? That's just about wot 'e would say. When I've put in my boy's service—it's a bloomin shame that don't count for pension I'll take on a privit. Then I'll be a lance in a year—knows what I know about tha ins an outs o' things. In four years I'll be a bloomin sergeant. I won't marry then, not I. I'll 'old on an learn the orf'cers' ways an apply for exchange into a reg'ment that doesn't know all about me. Then I'll be a bloomin orf'cer Then I'll ask you to 'ave a glass o' sherry wine. Mr. Law, an you'll bloomin well 'ave to drink it, an you'll bloomin well 'ave to call me 'Jakin' to my face, or I'll know the reason why. There's nothin like a man an stickin to it, the schoolmaster says. The reg'ment don't go 'ome for another seven years. I'll be a lance then or near te."

Thus the boys discussed their futures and conducted themselves with exemplary piety for a week. That is to say, Law started a flirtation with the color sergeant's daughter, aged 18—for reasons he explained to Jakin, "with any intention o' matrimony, hut by way o' keepin my 'and in." And the black haired Cris Deligban enjoyed that flirtation more than previous ones, and the other drummer boys raged furiously together, and Jakin preached sermons on the dangers of "hein tangled along o' petticoats."

But neither love nor virtus would have held Law long in the paths of propriety had not the rumor gone abroad that the regiment was to be sent on active service to take part in a war which for the sake of brevity we will call "the war of the lost tribes."

The barracks had the rumor almost before the messroom, and of all the 800 men in barracks not 10 had seen a shot fired in anger. The colonel had 20 years ago assisted at a frontier expedition, one of the majors had seen service at the Cape, a confirmed deserter in the company had helped to clear streets in Ireland, but that was all. The regiment had been put by for many years. The overwhelming mass of its rank and file had from three to four years' service, the noncommissioned officers were under 80 years old, and men and sergeants alike had forgotten or scouted the stories written in brief upon the colors—the new colors that had been formally blessed by an archbishop in England ere the regiment came away.

They wanted to go to the front—they were enthusiastically anxious to go—but they had no knowledge of what war meant, and there was none to tell them. Wherefore they cheered lustily when the rumor ran, and the shrewd, clarkly noncommissioned officers speculated on the chances of batta and of saving their pay At headquarters men said: "The Fore and Fit have never been under fire within the last generation. Let us, therefore, break them in easily by setting them to guard lines of communication." And this would have been done but for the fact that British regiments were wanted—badly wanted—at the front, and there were doubtful natives whispers that could fill the minor duties. "Brigade 'em with the strong regiments," said headquarters. "They may be knocked about a bit, but they'll learn their business before they come through. Nothing like a night alarm and a little cutting up of stragglers to make a regiment smart in the field. Wait till they've had half a dozen sentries' throats cut."

The colonel wrote with delight that the temper of his men was excellent that the regiment was all that could be wished and as sound as a bell. The majors smiled with somber joy, and the subalterns waltzed in pairs down the messroom after dinner and nearly shot themselves at revolver practice. But there was consternation in the hearts of Jakin and Law. What was to be done with the drums? Would the bungo to the front? How many of the drums would accompany the regiment?

They took counsel together, sitting in a tree and smoking

"It's more than a bloomin toss up, they'll leave us be'ind at the depot with the women. You'll like that," said Jakin sarcastically

"Cause o' Cris, you mean? Wot's woman, or a 'ole bloomin depot of women, longside o' the chance o' field service? You know I'm as keen on goin in as you," said Law.

"Wish I was a bloomin bagler,' said Jakin sadly. "They'll take Tom Kidd along, 'cause Tom can plaster a wall with, an like as not they won't take us.

"Then let's go an make Tom Kidd so bloomin sick 'e can't bugle no more You 'old 'is 'ands an I'll kick him,' said Law, wriggling on the branch.

"That ain't no good, neither. We don't the sort o' characters to presson on orf'cers' feelin's. They're bad. If they have the hand at the depot, we don't 'ave an orf'cer there. If they take the band, we may get one. Set for medical unfitness. Are you medical fit, Piggy?' said Jakin. digging Law in the ribs with force

"Yes," said Law, with an oath. "The doctor passed me 'isself 'e can't weak through smokin on an empty stummick. Throw a chest. an I'll try 'ard."

"I will do," said Law. "I've 'eard o' men dyin when you 'it 'em fair on the breastbone."

"Don't bring us no nearer goin, though," said Jakin. "Do you know how we're ordered?"

"Gawd knows, an 'e won't split on a pal. Somewheres up to the front to join Parthenopæa with the beggars that turn you inside out if they get 'old o' you They say their women are good fighters."

"Any loot?' asked the abandoned Jakin.

Quite a bloomin anna, they say, unless you dip up the ground an see what the niggers 'ave 'id. They're a poor lot Parthenopæans, they say, and speak to a colonel wus—

The dark had slid down the trunk and doubled in the direction of the colonel. That officer was walking, wrapped in thought and tobacco smoke, in front even K. C. B., for had he sot at command one of the best regiments of the line—the Fore and Fit—he was well aware of two small boys charging down hill and. Once before it had been solemnly reported to him that "them drummers were in a state of huntiny," Jakin and Law being the offenders. This looked like an organized conspiracy.

The boys halted at 20 yards, walked to the regulation four paces and saluted together, each as well set up as a ramrod and little taller.

The colonel was in a genial mood, the boys appeared very forlorn and unprotected on the desolate plain, and one of them was Christmas

"Well!" said the colonel, recognizing them. "Are you going to pull me down in the open? I'm sure I never interfere with you, even though"—he sniffed suspiciously—"you have been smoking."

It was time to strike while the iron was hot. Their hearts beat tumultuously

"Beg your pardon, sir," began Jakin. "The regiment's ordered on active service, sir—"

"So I believe," said the colonel contentedly.

"Is the band goin, sir?" said both together. Then, without pause, "We're goin, sir, ain't we?"

"You!" said the colonel, stepping back the more fully to take in the two small figures. "You! You'd din in the first march."

"No, we wouldn't, sir. We can march with the smartest an prove it—I'm'ade an anywhere else," said Jakin.

"If Tom Kidd goes, 'e'll shut up like a cheap concertina," said Law, "an very close veins in both 'is legs, sir."

"Very how much?"

"Very close, sir. That's why they swells after long p'rade, sir. If 'e can go, we can go, sir."

Again the colonel nodded at them long and intently.

"Yes, the band is going," he said as gravely as though he had been address ing a brother officer. "Have you any parents, either of you two?"

"No, sir," rejoicingly from Law and Jakin.

"We're both orphans, sir. There's no one to be considered of on one account, sir."

"You poor little sprats. And you want to go up to the front with the regiment do you? Why?"

"I've worn the queen's uniform for two years," said Jakin. "It's very 'ard, sir, that a man don't get nurecompenses for doin 'is duty, sir."

"An—en if I don't go, sir," interrupted Law, "the bandmaster 's says a'l catch an make a blue-arsed, bleeded mnuclan 'o me, sir Before I've seen any service, sir

The colonel made no answer for a TO BE CONTINUED.

WHEN DEWEY RETURNS

Elaborate Preparations For the Admiral's Home Coming.

NEW YORK'S GREATEST RECEPTION

Welcome For Hero of Manila Day by the Metropolis Will Far Eclipse Anything of the Kind Ever Before Seen—Costly Decorations on the Buildings.

Whether considered from a patriotic or commercial standpoint or both, the coming Dewey celebration will be the greatest event of the kind in New York city, if not in the country. Before it even the great triumphal home comings of the Roman conquerors of historic times will pale into insignificance, says the New York Herald. While Scipio and Caesar and Augustus and the rest of that group dazzled their countrymen on their return from victorious wars with long retinues of hostages, slaves and captured leaders of the so called barbarians whose colors they had lowered, and Rome held games and feasts in honor of such proud achievements, yet the old timers had little conception of the splendor and brilliance which mark in modern times the ovations a great nation gives its heroes. In the case of Admiral Dewey, judging from the elaborate preparations now being rushed to completion in New York city especially, even the great Washington centennial inauguration celebration of a decade ago will be, in point of brilliance and splendor, as the flickering light of a candle to the dazzling effulgence of incandescent lamps.

The Washington centennial, which has hitherto held the palm for celebrations of this kind, was estimated to have cost about $2,000,000 in round numbers. A decorator who has been actively engaged in business in New York for a quarter of a century said the other day that, in his opinion, the expenditures in New York alone for decorations by day, illuminations by night and festivities in general in honor of the hero of Manila bay will easily be three times as much, or $6,000,000.

"No such enthusiasm in this respect," he said, "has ever been aroused. The $150,000 that the city will spend officially is a mere bit in comparison with the aggregate that private citizens and corporations will lay out in honor of the admiral. Every decorating establishment in the city is simply overwhelmed with orders for work for the occasion. The unusual feature this year is that the decorations of private houses, office buildings, hotels, clubs and even churches will be practically unlimited. Hitherto it has been customary to decorate only such dwellings and places of business as were on the line of parade. There will be no such limitation this year, and not only will buildings be decorated all over the city proper, but all the boroughs are making preparations that would have been the case if each one of them, and not Manhattan, was to be the special theater of the great event.

"Orders for decorating stores, offices and dwellings, moreover, are being given with unheard of prodigality. The prosperity which everybody seems to be enjoying is apparently a great factor in the patriotic desires of the people generally to show their pride in the achievements of Dewey and his men and ships. It looks to us in the business of decorating as if the event will create a high water mark that will stand for many generations."

The largest sums will probably be spent by the big insurance companies, hotels and clubs. Some of these will expend $10,000 for dressing their buildings from roof to basement in such gala garb as they have never before worn. The range will extend down to probably about $25 for decorating doorways, but the great bulk of the $6,000,000 estimate will undoubtedly be spent in even smaller sums for draping in the national colors and other ornamentation of private dwellings.

Such a great demand has had a stiffling effect already on the prices of materials used for decorative purposes. Bunting and turkey red and blue, for instance, have already gone up about 20 per cent, and are advancing daily, until, it is expected, the present prices will perhaps be doubled. As yet the price of flags, small, medium and large, has not risen quite so fast, but the demand has not yet set in, except on the part of the foresighted, who, however, are always the smallest portion of the great body of citizens. The majority will wait until the last few weeks to supply themselves, and the rush will then be so great that makers of emblems will have to keep their factories running day and night, paying double wages for overtime labor, and thus being compelled to advance their prices accordingly.

As to bunting and turkey red and blue, which are the materials most largely used among woven or other textile goods, it is estimated that at least 20,000,000 yards will be used, at an average cost of 20 cents a yard, the total valuation therefore reaching the startling amount of $4,000,000. Dealers, of course, have already stocked up largely, but the bunting houses in the dry goods district are still rushed with orders, many storekeepers in various parts of the greater city having decided, for the time being at least, to add these wares to their stock.

Orders are now being placed for these goods in rolls and pieces by stores that never before handled them —grocery, crockery, hardware, toy and other such retail establishments in Staten Island, Brooklyn, the Bronx, Westchester, Jersey City, Hoboken, Newark and Long Island, not to mention Manhattan. Thus the mills down east are being kept unusually busy, every loom being at work. Forty yard rolls of 18 inch bunting that sold before the war with Spain for $4 are now bringing $6. Early in the war the price rose to $12, and the trade would not be surprised if that figure should be reached on this occasion. During the war many persons who had never made a flag in their life went into the business. A large portion of them made money, so great was the demand for flags, but many found themselves with big stocks of bunting on their hands after the extraordinary demand ceased for which there was practically no market. These had to be closed out at job lot prices, and dealers and decorators who have constant use for bunting gobbled them up at figures which mean a rich harvest for them now.

"Of course," explained the decorator quoted, "I do not mean that the 20,000,000 yards that will be used in the Dewey celebration will be all new bunting and turkey red and blue, for a great part of the decorations will be treated by decorators out of stock. However, the new material will be of enormous quantity, and all of domestic manufacture at that. The demand is such that many yards of bunting and every flag now in the stock of decorators will be used, and the requirements for new cloth are so extensive that I for one expect that prices will go even higher than they were at any time during the war."

The fireworks trade is not less active. Dealers declare that conditions promise to be as lively as on the Fourth of July. The small boy, apparently, intends to have just as much fun and make just as much noise when Dewey comes home as on the anniversary of the nation's birth. Toy stores are clamoring for Dewey cannon, Dewey crackers and Dewey everything else in the Fourth of July catalogue of Young America. The only regret the wholesalers feel is that they did not foresee this big demand for such goods, and they will apparently be cleaned out of their stocks before Dewey day arrives.

Lithographers and others who print and paint portraits are also reaping a harvest. Thousands upon thousands of likenesses of the admiral are being run off. It seems that enough are being provided to enable every man, woman and child of Greater New York to have one. Street venders will be supplied with a great variety of articles—buttons, handkerchief flags, banners, tin horns, pictures and a whole lot of other things too numerous to mention—while carpenters will have their hands full building public and private stands, which will be many times more numerous than on any previous occasion. The advertising profession, in the form of programmes, pamphlets and the like, are not to be forgotten, and the printing trades will also be benefited.

When it is considered, moreover, that vast throngs of excursionists will pour into the city from all over the country, spending in the aggregate an immense sum for hotel accommodations and the like, it is readily seen that from the commercial standpoint the city will be an immense gainer from the coming Dewey celebration.

THREE STRAIGHT HEATS.

Idolita Gets the Winner's Share of the $30,000 Horse Review Stakes.

DUBUQUE, Ia., Aug. 30.—Idolita, owned by Frank Jones of Portsmouth, N. H., pulled down the winner's share of The Horse Review stakes for 3-year-old trotters. The little bay walked away from the field in three straight heats. The purse was worth $30,000 and was the third of a series of futurity offerings put up by Mr. John C. Baner of Chicago.

The 2:20 pace, worth $8,000, was easy money for the favorite, Robert Fitzsimmons, and the Central stake, for 2:12 trotters, was captured by Sir Charles. Fifteen thousand people witnessed the day's races.

Naval Commanders Acquitted.

MADRID, Sept. 6.—The trial of Captain Dias Moreau, who commanded the Spanish cruiser Cristobal Colon at the battle of Santiago de Cuba, and General Parede, who was on board the Colon, on charges arising from the destruction of the Spanish fleet off Santiago on July 3 of last year, has been concluded, both accused officers being acquitted.

NEW SIX INCH CANNON.

Wonderful Range of Guns For Future American Warships.

A WORLD'S RECORD EOLIPSED.

Major Ingalls Finds by His Latest Calculations That the New Type Six Inch Gun Can Send a Shot Nearly Fifteen Miles—His Remarkable Accuracy.

The firing capabilities of the new high powered 6 inch guns designed for future ships of the United States navy and for coast defense batteries have just been determined by calculations made by Major James M. Ingalls, First United States artillery, says the New York Post. Major Ingalls finds that one of the new 6 inch guns can throw a projectile a distance of 14.76 miles. The greatest range ever obtained hitherto by a piece of ordnance was 12½ miles. This latter range was recorded for a 9.45 inch Krupp gun, which was fired on the Meppen range in Germany in 1892. Previous to the German long distance shot the record was held by a 9.2 inch English gun, which was fired at Shoeburyness on the occasion of the Jubilee celebration in 1890. Major Ingalls' calculations for the new type 6 inch gun are based on a muzzle velocity for the projectile of 2,600 feet seconds and a weight of shell of 105 pounds. The gun he lays at an angle of elevation of 45 degrees. The maximum ordinate, or the culmination point attained by the shell in its flight, is 39,549 feet. In other words, the shell attains a height above the muzzle of the gun of 20,549 feet. The total time consumed by the shell in the flight is 82.5 seconds.

Major Ingalls has long been identified with the Artillery School For Officers at Fort Monroe. He is the officer who, previous to the firing of the famous Shoeburyness shot in England, made the closest calculation as to where the shell would fall. While many foreign officers placed the fall of the projectile at points varying from 1,000 to 3,000 yards in front of where the shell actually fell, Major (then Captain) Ingalls' calculation was only 150 yards short. The wonderful part of it all is that in working back with the actual atmospheric data which prevailed at Shoeburyness at the moment of firing Major Ingalls was able to place the shot, by calculation, practically in the very hole it made.

The time of 82.5 seconds, which Major Ingalls says will be consumed in the flight of a 6 inch shell, exceeds by 12.3 seconds the time occupied by the German record shot in 1892. The record man shot, in ranging to a distance of 12½ miles, obtained a maximum height of 21,496 feet. The enormous muzzle velocity of 3,000 feet seconds, which Major Ingalls uses as a basis for his calculations, is an actuality which has been afforded by the new smokeless powder of the United States. Some of the best velocities obtained abroad from 6 inch guns at present are less than 2,800 feet seconds.

The new battleship Maine and her sisters, Ohio and Missouri, will each carry sixteen 6 inch guns. The 6 inch guns used by the American fleet at Manila and which did such excellent service there, require for each gun a crew of 12 men. It is deemed good work if one of the old type 6 inch guns can maintain aimed fire at the rate of 1½ shots per minute. Generally speaking, the rate of aimed fire is one shot per minute. For the new 6 inch guns a rate of nine shots per minute is recorded, and this rate of fire has been secured, it is declared, by a gun's crew numbering only four men.

The new 6 inch guns will be 50 calibers long, or 22 feet. The majority of the new English 6 inch naval guns have a length of 23 feet 3 inches. The English 6 inch weapons employ shells weighing 100 pounds. When using a charge of 23 pounds of cordite, the English 6 inch gun yields a muzzle velocity of 2,750 feet, with a resultant in muzzle energy of 5,340 foot tons. Owing to the enormous velocities afforded by the new smokeless powder of the United States, the necessity of keeping down the weight of guns or shells in order to insure flatter trajectories no longer exists, and already steps are being made looking to an increase in the weight of projectiles for a number of naval calibers. From what can be learned, the new 6 inch gun will approximate closely to those now employed by the army. The navy 8 inch gun uses a 250 pound shell, the army 8 inch gun a 300 pound shell. The new 12 inch gun employs an 850 pound projectile, as compared with 1,050 pounds for the army 12 inch. The advantages afforded by the larger shell are greater carrying capacity for contained explosive and an increased energy of impact on comparatively low chamber pressures.

Dewey's $4,000 Breakfast.

Let's go kind o' easylike, 'mid o' gettin rush.
You know four thousand dollars is a hefty lot o' cash.
Let's have somebody by the ton an nectar brought in kegs
At dewey; but for breakfast, why not simply ham an eggs?

There's one peculiar fact about the most o' mortal clay,
Their appetites is tender in the fore part o' the day.
It takes some hours for hunger to get steady on its legs,
An in the meantime all one needs is fer some ham an eggs.

The admiral ain't a man from whom the public should expect
Achievements in digestion. His is taste of latest kind.
Although his brains ain't built like ours, his stomach doubtless begs
At breakfast time for common, straight wuz ham an eggs.

CHAS. S. FEE, G. P. & T. A., St. Paul, Minn.

Judge Ensign has assigned to three railways the work of erecting a steel bridge 1,868 feet long, as an elevated roadway over Garfield avenue, Duluth. The avenue is crossed by a score or more of railroad tracks in fast distance and travel there is dangerous.

At a special meeting of the county commissioners Captain A. S. Crossfield of Brown's Valley was appointed county attorney for Traverse county, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of J. J. Steidl, recently appointed to the judgeship of the Sixteenth judicial district.

A pigeon was shot at La Prairie having a ring on its leg, engraved, "1899—F. & E. A." The body of the bird is pure white, with brilliant brown wings like the hose of the brown thrush; the crown of the head was also brown, and the legs were covered with long brown feathers forward, like the wings of a small bird. The pigeon came into the village from the north west.

The iron ore movement from the head of the lakes, Duluth, Two Harbors and Superior, was enormous in August. The amount was 1,456,512 tons. The movement from here since the opening of navigation to Sept. 1 has been 4,854,-660 tons, as compared with 4,131,129 tons for the same period last year—a gain of 723,531 tons. All of the docks broke all previous records during August for any previous month in their existence.

Chief Grain Inspector Reishus has appointed as helpers in the Minneapolis grain inspection department Charles Haustenez, Daniel Moore, Perdinand Johnson, Edward Burke and Thomas Hoganson. L. Lundquist is named as sealer for the same office. The appointments have yet to be confirmed by the state railroad and warehouse commission. Louis Hanson of Moorhead has been appointed and confirmed as clerk in the deputy inspection at Duluth, and the appointment of C. S. Fulton as deputy grain inspector at that point has also been confirmed. He succeeds C. W. Poole in office.

AROUND THE COUNTRY

Weekly Reports From the Journal's Corps of News Gatherers.

WARREN.

The brick work was begun on the court house this week.

H. Funk of Crookston transacted business in this city Friday.

Buildings under construction here are being considerably delayed on account of a scarcity of "Knights of the Saw and Butchet and Trowel."

The average of wheat per acre threshed in this vicinity up-to-date is about twenty-three bushels with a prospect of getting better.

The large frame mill being erected by Hilleboe & Johnson at this place will be completed and in operation in about sixty days. It will have a capacity of seventy-five barrels daily.

We have no absolute proof as to what the prairie chickens thought Friday morning last, but we feel safe in guessing it was nothing at all complimentary to the hunters.

Mr. Tom Shaughnessy, formerly employed on the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL at Crookston, is now superintendent of the mechanical department in the Register office here.

Warren has enjoyed the reputation for several years of being the second largest market in the world, handling wheat direct from the farmer and will make a close race this fall for first place.

CLIMAX.

Wheat is turning out 16 to 18 bushels per acre.

Norman Stoholt went to Halstad on Saturday evening, returning Monday.

Malvin Erickson and Miss Ella Johnson were visiting friends in Crookston Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. John Steenerson left on Tuesday evening for Minneapolis to be present at the state fair.

Ell Steenerson of Crookston came down on Monday evening to look after the threshing on his farm.

Frank Tidholm, who has been working for Andrew Steenerson was kicked by a horse on the leg just below the knee on Tuesday afternoon. He will not be able to do any work for some time. Fortunately no bones were broken.

LEESTON.

The telephone will soon be here.

Everybody is busy stacking nowdays.

Two carloadsof poles arrived here Saturday.

Everybody is complaining of the new game law.

Mrs. John Monum is on the sick list. Hope she will soon recover.

Wheat is turning out very poor around here as reported by those that have threshed.

Mrs. Skor left for Wisconsin Monday, where she will reside in the future with her son. Mrs. Skor was one of the oldest settlers around here.

Otus Bruden has returned from Dakota, where he has been working on the N. P. gravel train. He will be along with Felsing & Gustafson, firing their engine.

LENGBY.

Andrew Olson was to Fosston Saturday.

Miss Carrie Molstad left for Grand Forks Monday.

Hotel Dewey was opened on Monday by A. J. Olson.

A crew of mexmad teams have commenced work on the new line.

Willie Ware of Ebro was a visitor here Saturday and Sunday.

S. S. Stadsvold returned from a business trip up to Lake Park.

John Aspellie and John Wenner took the train for Northwood Monday.

Mr. Kasser and family, who have been visiting here returned to Fosston Monday.

W. S. Hillard has moved in to the section house and Mr. Perrien will leave for Dakota.

MAPLE BAY.

We are having fine weather.

Chicken shooting is now in full blast.

N. E. Nelson returned from Argyle Friday.

Mrs. Dillon was very ill Sunday but is improving.

A. S. Triesen, from Manitoba, was at the Bay this week.

Sam Felsing, who has been sick, is now up and around again.

C. Nelson went to Erskine Tuesday to take in the threshing season.

B. Tatrow and Nels Peterson went to Grand Forks on business Thursday.

E. Gustavson is repairing his store.

That right, Gustavson, shine up a little.

Miss Alice and Mr. Ed. Klinger and Mrs. O. M. Olson went to Crookston Friday.

Miss Marie Nelson goes to Crookston next week to attend the fall term of school.

Threshing engines can now be heard and threshing will be in full blast in a few days.

There are a good many on the sick list around Maple Bay and amongst them are a few cases of diphtheria.

O. M. Olson returned from Dakota on account of sickness, but he is now improving rapidly and will soon be out in the field expertng on blowers again.

Several new buildings have been built this summer and Maple Bay will soon be a fine village, owing to the beautiful lake and shores. The only thing lacking is a railroad.

GRAND FORKS.

The city schools opened Monday.

Miss Veda Miller has returned from Duluth.

Mrs. M. E. Young has had a replane and is quite ill.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Sill are in Chicago purchasing new face goods.

Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Bacon and son are home from the eastern trips.

Mrs. Frank Kent returned Saturday morning from her eastern trip.

Mr. and Mrs. John Mullally are the parents of a son, born Wednesday.

Elbert Addison left Wednesday night for Annandale, N. Y., where he goes to study for the Episcopal ministry.

Miss Tomple Irmon, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Irwin, arrived home Thursday from Duluth, where she has been attending school.

RUSSIA.

Tom Welsh is kept idle with a lame leg.

As wages are as high as $2.50, the thresher machines are whistling quite early and late these days.

A daughter of Mrs. T. Chepplus has been very sick with the typhoid fever, but is now getting better.

The Russia farm buildings have been raised from the ground about three feet and a stone foundation put under so as to have it high enough for a cellar.

Th. Nephew, Sr., was at Crookston last Saturday on business. He is hot against the Polk county commissioners for being too careless about those county ditches. The fact that the ditch passing his land was not finished within the time given to the contractors, is damaging him at least $700.

Messrs. Ole and Knute Myre from Buxton, North Dakota, were with some of their relatives from the southern part of Minnesota, stopping at Peter Warnager's place last Saturday. They have been looking over this part of country with the intention of buying land and locating themselves in this neighborhood.

H. B. Laughlin, J. Rossaen and T. Hamilton were among those that went to take in the sights at the State Fair this week.

Julius Radt's broncbos took a lively spin Saturday. Mr. Radt was thrown out of the buggy, breaking his ankle. Last reports he was improving nicely.

SOUTH CROOKSTON.

Everything is quiet on the south side of the river.

Con Keppie is doing a rushing business in the hotel.

Business is better on the road now and the railroad men are kept busy.

Say, did you see that policeman around? Where does he keep himself?

Miss Lillie Holliday has left for Bagley where she will make her home.

Mr. Bean went to Red Lake Falls last Sunday for a short visit with friends.

Mrs. Phillips has a felon on her finger and is suffering very much from it.

Mrs. T. C. Stewart is very poorly now. We all hope she may soon recover.

C. A. Meyers sold last week 25 hurrels of apples. How is that for the Fifth ward.

G. W. Banks and T. C. Stewart have been away at Eldred the past week building a house.

There will be preaching service at 3 p. m. next Sunday in the Baptist block here. All are welcome.

Mrs. Harry Nickelson's mother arrived from the east last week and will remain for a visit with her daughter.

Mr. Bates has completed the repairs on his house and it makes quite a change in the looks of things across the track.

The new school house is completed and it is something for the fifth ward people to be proud of. School opens the 25th of September.

Some nice young lady could have a nice time driving now. G. W Banks has a new top buggy and a nice driving team. Girls don't miss the chance.

Mr. Bancroft and family will move to Eldred this week where they will hereafter reside. Mr. Bancroft has charge of the elevator there. We are sorry to loose a good neighbor and citizen.

HALLORY.

Alexander Coulter is attending the State Fair.

D. J. Morrow is improving nicely under the doctor's care at a Rochester, Minn., hospital.

The erecting of a fine new city hall is no longer a dream, but a reality. Boorman & Sons are busy sinking off the excuse of one we had before, and carpenters are getting ready to go to work on the new one.

Carl P. Johnson, who returned a few days ago from Manzopa, is still in poor condition and has to keep his bed. During his visit to Manzopa he suffered a severe attack of appendicitis, and being too anxious to get home made the journey a little too soon, which threw him back into fever the day after he arrived home. Now, however, he is again recuperating, and his many friends hope that he may escape the operation, which is so often resorted to in cases of appendicitis.

Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of fifteen hundred twenty-eight and 32-100 dollars, which is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Isabella L. Chilbeck and John Chilbeck her husband, mortgagors, to George Q. A Big Stack of grain can be threshed in a day (and threshed perfectly and separated thoroughly, without waste) if you have a Nichols-Shepard Separator. And the straw will be handled easily, without the slightest trouble and almost no litter, if you use the Nichols-Shepard Swinging Stacker. This takes the place and does the work of an independent stacker. It oscillates automatically, is easily swung to right angles with the separator to carry the straw to either stack or barn. This stacker has been demonstrated by thorough and practical tests in the field to be the handiest, most efficient swinging stacker ever attached to a thresher. Like every other feature of the

Nichols-Shepard SEPARATOR

It is strongly and durably made, without any intricate parts to break or get out of order. All the advantages of the Nichols-Shepard Separator and the Nichols-Shepard STRAW BURNING ENGINE are fully described and illustrated in our free catalogue. Write for it.

POLK COUNTY EXHIBIT

Selected to Represent Minnesota's Agricultural Products at World's Fair in Paris.

MOST ARTISTICALLY ARRANGED

Of County Exhibits at State Fair—Much Credit is due to Geo. W. Purvis.

The Polk county exhibit of agricultural products at the State Fair has been selected by the United States government for its display of northwestern flora and fauna at the World's Fair in Paris.

A committee of superintendents of government experimental stations of states in the Northwest was deputized by the federal government to select from among the county agricultural exhibits at this year's State Fair an exhibit to the Paris World's Fair. The exhibit is to be representative of the grasses and grains, flora and fauna of the Northwest. Prof. Shepherd, of the North Dakota school of agriculture, is chairman of the committee and Prof. T. A. Hoverstad, of Crookston Experiment Station, is the Minnesota member and was empowered by the committee to make the exhibit. This he did and his selection was the Polk County Exhibit. The exhibit will be set up intact at Paris as it was displayed at the fair, save that the vegetables will not be displayed, as they cannot be taken.

The exhibit was easily one of the most artistic at the State Fair, and George W. Purvis, who arranged it and was in charge of the exhibit, was justly proud of the distinction that was accorded his county. To Miss Agnes Purvis also much credit is due for the success of the Polk County exhibit. Mr. Purvis is an old hand at the display of agricultural products, having had charge of Minnesota's agricultural exhibit at the World's Fair in Chicago in 1893, where his exhibit received a gold medal.

The exhibit was in the form of a graceful pagoda, with tall, fluted columns of white wood, dressed with grains and grasses of the county. At the entrance there was a beautiful arch, with the words "Polk County" artistically inscribed thereon. The exhibit was trimmed with nearly every variety of grain and grasses grown in the state or in the Northwest, there being fourteen varieties of wheat grown as far north as the international boundary. There were eight varieties of barley and between fifteen and twenty varieties of oats, five varieties of field peas, etc. The county made a splendid exhibit of corn, showing that this cereal can be grown as well in the northern part of the state as in the southern part, or in Iowa or Illinois. In all there were in the exhibit more than two thousand specimens of grain and grasses.

In the center of the exhibit there was a stately column decorated with grains and grasses, relieved by a taxidermy display of the game birds and animals native to the county. On the wall of the west end of the exhibit there was shown a flat sphere on which was made with heads of wheat and grass a five-pointed star, representing the North Star State. The county also showed something new for the northern part of the state in live varieties of apples. There were displayed grains in the stalk and after it was threshed. One sample being from the Hazard farm at Euclid that went eighty-three bushels to the acre. Samples of wheat by Mathew and John Cornelius of Fairfax went thirty-two bushels to the acre. Mr. J. M. Stevens of Crookston contributed two samples of wheat in the stalk that were wonders. One sample showed sixty-nine straws of a stool grown from a single grain of wheat, and the other showed sixty-eight straws from one grain. The increase from the two grains of wheat was 3,000 fold, and beats any similar record heretofore known. Each straw bore a fully developed head of wheat. The county also exhibited woolen blankets and clothing, made in Fosston's woolen mill, from wool grown by Mr. Bivins of Crookston. All manner of vegetables were shown, including sixteen varieties of potatoes. E. D. Childs of Crookston had an artistic butter display, showing that the northern part of the state is up with the southern in the dairy industry.

As soon as the fair was over Mr. Bull, who has charge of the shipping of exhibits from Minnesota to the World's Fair at Paris, was on hand arranging to box up the Polk County exhibit preparatory to sending it across the ocean.

The State Fair as a whole was a great success. The attendance was much larger than ever before and the receipts in consequence were several thousand dollars more than at any previous fair.

DESTITUTION IN PORTO RICO.

Sergeant Berg Writes from the Island of the Terrific Storm.

The following letter from Charles M. Berg, acting R. M. Sergeant, Signal Corps, U. S. A., who is in Porto Rico, was recently received by his sister, who lives at Mentor, Minn. The JOURNAL takes pleasure in publishing this letter and will say that though the United States government has relieved the distress in Porto Rico to a certain extent, there is still need of food, clothing etc., for the destitute in our recently acquired island:

Coales, Porto Rico, Aug. 11, 1899.

MY DEAR SISTER STELLA:—

No doubt by the time you receive this you will have heard all about the storm that has been so destructive here in Porto Rico. I will tell you my own trouble: first, I am glad I am alive; second, I haven't got any house but am doing all right under some pieces of tin that I placed to keep the hot sun and rain out. About 5:30 a. m. Tuesday the 8th I got a telegram from headquarters stating that a storm was coming via the gulf stream, and at that time the wind was blowing a la Kansas and making things hum. About 8:30 I saw several houses and roofs go, and I commenced to think my house was going to live it out. I had a two story house with a tin roof. I was tying the doors when crash, bang! away went the roof, in came the doors, and my clothes and property and postoffice and telegraph office were among the has beens. I got off pretty luckily, with a few scratches and bruises, considering that I was in the second story. A great many houses were totally demolished and the number killed is something frightful and no estimate can be made. They were burying them last night after 9 o'clock and today body after body has passed to its final resting place where starvation and tempests can't reach them. Whole families were killed—some drowned by mountain streams others by falling debris, trees, pieces of tin, and some actually blown over precipices from their mountain homes in the roaring, swollen, mountain streams. I cannot describe the poverty, as they had little enough before, but those that survived sit around what was once their homes, with no clothing, nothing to eat. All the fruit and vegetation of the once pretty island is fairly beaten to ground—coffee and banana plantations, oranges and all such fruit that served to keep life and soul in the natives is a total loss. I was out in the country yesterday and the sight has tortured me since and years will pass before the sights and remembrance will fade. Mothers were holding their naked children, with no shelter, from the scorching sun, children were crying for food, which it will be some time before the Gov't can give them, for they will have to look toward the generosity of the United States government and the people of the states to nourish them in their great necessity. The storm was of nearly twelve hours duration and all the following night rain fell in torrents, and misery was dealt out to us in unknown quantities. No shelter could be found from the beating rain and driving wind. All telegraph lines are down and tangled up. The short railroads are completely torn up and road beds washed away. In some of the smaller mountain towns they report a great loss of life. This morning a report came in that out at Morovis there were thirty-five unburied and more being brought in. Decomposition sets in very soon, owing to the heat and some will never be buried unless it's the bones. All the pretty hills and mountains are like those in the Rocky mountains after a fire, black and desolate. Now my dear folks this is not a very cheerful letter, but it is from a little island whose cheer and plenty was, but where misery and want is staring the inhabitants in the face unless the people of the United States can do something for them. I have plenty as long as it is. I am not in want and I also have money and the government will care for me, but the people who are without clothing and food are the ones who suffer. Love to all.

Your loving brother,

CHARLES M. BERG.

Farmer Burned out,

Laurits Johnson, a farmer living about four miles west of town had his farm dwelling burnt to the ground last Monday night about 9 o'clock. The fire caught somewhere upstairs but Mr. Johnson is unable to assign any cause for it as there was no chimney or flue in the part where the fire began. All the household goods were saved. Only small insurance was carried. Mr. Johnson will rebuild at once.

THE COUNCIL MEETING

Carnival Gets $100—Steam Heating Ordinance Is Passed—Hill Near Saw Mill to be Fixed.

THE SCHOOL OF AGRICULTURE

Opens in a Month—Each Farmer's Family Should be Represented at This School.

The city council met at the city hall last Tuesday night. Aldermen O'Brien, Harris, Chesterman, Davis, Thompson, McKinnon, Childs and McGregor were present.

Bills to the amount of $500 were allowed and $376.93 voted to pay the men whom street commissioner Jerome has had working on the streets.

The city engineer presented an estimate of the cost of putting sewerage on Broadway from Second street to Fourth, on Third street from Main to Broadway and on Fourth street from Broadway to Ash. When the motion came up upon the acceptance of this report the old question as to just what accepting a report implied was again considered at length. The engineer's report, however, was accepted and the sewers will be built.

Following the action of the council of last year $100 were again voted to assist in arranging for the street carnival.

The question of fixing the hill on south Main street just north of the saw mill again came up for consideration. The result of the discussion was that the city engineer was instructed to draw up new plans for the improvement of this street and as soon as these plans are in the hands of the city clerk he is to advertise for bids upon this work.

A representative of a Chicago firm which does macadamizing work appeared before the council and gave some valuable knowledge anent the the question of macadam. The council did not, however, take any action up on the matter.

The ordinance granting the right to the American District Steam Company, their successors or assigns, to lay, operate and maintain system of pipes in the streets, avenues, alleys and public places in the city of Crookston for conveying and distributing steam was passed, Aldermen Harris, Davis, Chesterman, McKinnon and Thompson voting aye, Alderman Childs nay and Alderman McGregor not voting.

The School of Agriculture.

In a little more than a month the School of Agriculture will again be open for students, says the Farm Students' Review. It is needless to say that the school bids fair to be better than ever before. One new building is in process of erection, and many minor improvements are being made.

There will be large additions to the equipment for the branches of botany, physics and horticulture, and the whole course of study has been improved. There may have been a time when it was doubtful if it would pay a man to take the course at the agricultural school, but if there ever was such a time it is long since passed. The education a young man will receive here will be a paying investment from a business standpoint alone, to say nothing of the many other advantages.

It is of course not to be hoped that the school will make a successful farmer of every boy who takes the course, but it will make him a much better farmer than he otherwise would be. The course of study tends to educate young men towards the farm, to teach them to regard farming as a science with many branches, any one of which is quite worth a man's whole time and attention. The school is intended to benefit the farmers of the state, and they should not fail to make the best of what it has to offer. We look forward to the time when every farm boy and girl will consider the course at the school of agriculture as much of a commonplace necessity as the city boy or girl now considers the regular high school course. The one is certainly as necessary as the other, for its particular class of people, and we hope that all friends of the school and especially the alumni, will exert themselves to help make the attendance far larger this year than ever before.

Epworth League Officers.

The Epworth League, of the Methodist church, held its annual election of officers last Monday evening. J. M. Palmer was chosen president; Miss Packard, first vice president; Mrs. J. W. Wheeler, second vice president; Mrs. A. C. Wilkinson, third vice president; Mrs. Welter, fourth vice president; Miss Grace Hawes, secretary and organist and M. A. Hewitt, treasurer.

VALUABLE TO FARMERS.

A Method by Which Black Rust May be Killed.

Prof. Lugger, state entomologist of Minnesota, has found the remedy for black rust on wheat in Lac qui Parle county, where he has been studying the pest. The remedy, he says, is to destroy the barberry vines.

The habit of black rust is to alternate on two sorts of plants. If it is found on wheat this year it will appear on something else next year, but it will not appear on something else next year, but it will not germinate the next year on wheat.

In one field in Lac qui Parle the black rust has appeared for three consecutive years. Prof. Lugger has discovered that the barberry vine is the offending source of propagation, and by destroying the vines in the neighborhood of the infected field he hopes to have rooted out the pest next season.

The rust is caused by parasitic plants which appear upon the leaves and stems in great clusters, resembling velvet, on the infested cereal, reducing the yield of such crops to a minimum. The spores of the parasitic plants are distributed by the wind, to the plant upon which they must lodge to germinate. So the first year the rust grows on wheat, the second year upon barberry or some other and more common plant. Such plants permit a continuous development of rust from year to year and it is very important to find out what the plant is and destroy it.

MINNESOTA'S WEALTH.

Its Increase Shown by the County Assessors' Work.

The increase of wealth in Minnesota during the past year has been so great that county assessors and county boards of equalization have for the most part been compelled to raise personal property returns as compared with last year—a proceeding that is so thoroughly against the tendency as to be worthy of comment. The exceptions to this unwilling fairness are some of the urban counties—Hennepin, Ramsey, St. Louis, Stearns, Rice and Blue Earth—which deliberately turn in a lower assessment than last year. Washington, Winona and one or two other urban counties didn't have the nerve to deny prosperity. Sixty-nine of the eighty-two counties have already made their reports to the state auditor. The tendency of the cities to evade a state taxation is shown by the fact that the tax payers named in Hennepin county have decreased from 11,983 last year to 10,472 this, while Ramsey has gone down from 12,300 to 11,087. Altogether eighteen counties show these taxpayers less than last year.

RIPENED CORN AND FRUIT

In Scribner and Langton Farms Before September 10.

It is a fact known the world over that the Red River Valley is one of the best wheat producing areas to be found any where, but owing to the fact that in the past, for the most part, wheat alone has been grown, it was thought that only wheat farming would pay here. This delusion, however, is being fast dissipated as it is being demonstrated by those farmers who are farming scientifically that grasses of various kinds can be grown here, corn can be ripened and various kinds of fruit brought to maturity. Herrick Scribner, who owns a large and flourishing farm about nine miles southeast of town, this year had ripened corn on his place before Sept. 10. This shows what can be done if enough pains are taken. Mr. Scribner was raised on a New Hampshire farm and came west to the Valley about fifteen years ago and has made a great success as a tiller of the soil. His is a cleanly picked up farm in truly Eastern fashion. This year he will thresh 2,500 bushels of wheat.

Speaking of fruit, it may be stated that Peter Langton, another prominent farmer in this vicinity, this year has raised a considerable number of musk melon and water melon and these were given a week ago.

Good Shooting.

George Ralph has just returned from a surveying trip up to Thief lake, about thirty-five miles north of Thief River Falls. He says that that is the place at which to shoot ducks, geese, etc., few moose, however, are found in that vicinity. It has been very dry up there, it being possible now even to walk through the swamps without danger of getting wet. While in that region Mr. Ralph collected some samples of cranberry bushes which he will send to the Grand Rapids, Michigan, nursery.

THE STREET CARNIVAL

Many Attractions Have Been Received and a Big Time is Coming.

THE DATES ARE SEPT. 27, 28, 29

The Parades Will be Magnificent—The Fireworks a Thing of Beauty.

The third annual Street Carnival will be held in this city on September 27, 28 and 29 and this year it promises to surpass the great events of the past years. Thousands of dollars have been contributed by the citizens to the Carnival fund and they are not through giving yet. Memberships to the Fair Association are being sold at $5 a piece and many are the purchasers.

The premium list for the live stock exhibit is printed elsewhere in the JOURNAL and is very complete. Over $1,400 are offered in prizes and it is expected that the coming Carnival will witness the biggest and best exhibit of live stock from the Red River Valley ever collected and not only that but stock of the highest breeds ever. But for this section of the state is fast becoming a stock raising region in addition to the fact that it is and has been one of the best wheat producing areas in America.

In the line of amusements something special is promised. The officers of the association were at St. Paul and Minneapolis last week and secured some things in the way of entertainment that will be particularly attractive. The Midway Plaisance will be with us, with such features as the Palace of Illusions, that has appeared at the Omaha Exposition: the Haunted Lady, the Flying Lady, the celebrated Persian dancers also recently at Omaha. In addition to these Prof. Burroe's trained sea lions, the Cuban snake charmer. It is possible also that Col. Ellis' Dare Devil workers will be secured and in that case some most remarkable performances will be witnessed. The above are merely some of the numerous companies and performers who will help the people for a while to forget work and give themselves up to pleasure.

Then there are the parades. These have always given great satisfaction to the spectators and present indications are that this year will cap the climax in this line. The ladies are taking the matter in hand and will attend to the artistic parts. Committees have been appointed and they are now at work. A flower parade will be made of the features that will be particularly pleasing.

In the line of music the event will be unequaled either here or within many miles of here. The Crookston band, which is a boat in itself, has been making special preparations for this Carnival and something particularly fine in the musical line may be expected from them. In addition, bands and bands of the neighboring towns will be here to swell the chorus of instrumental music. There will, indeed, be music in air, and this feature in itself will be worth coming many miles to hear.

In the way of sports a lawn tennis tournament is likely to take place. Lawn tennis is one of the cooler sports in which both ladies and gentlemen can engage and has recently become more popular in Crookston in view of the fact that perhaps the best grounds in Northern Minnesota have been fixed up in the city this summer. A tournament has never occurred in Crookston and the coming meet of the racket wielders promises to be exciting. A game of football, which was played here a few years ago and has been brought to play, is also among the possibilities.

And to top the last night will come the fireworks. This will be a most brilliant and magnificent display, and no one within a radius of a hundred miles of Crookston ought to miss it.

Special excursion trains will be run to Crookston from all directions, the exact dates of which will be announced and without a doubt thousands of people will flock to the Queen City of the Red River Valley on Sept. 27, 28 and 29, when will take place the Street Carnival and Live Stock Show.

There is to be such a variety of entertainments and so many matters to be attended to that the work has been divided up and the following committees appointed:

STOCK SHOW—John McKinnon and George Purvis.

INDUSTRIAL PARADE—A. F. George, George Fontaine and Max Eriesson.

FIRE RUN—Tom Morris and C. A. Hitchcock.

BANDS—H. F. Brown.

VAUDEVILLES AND STREET GAMES—George Finlayson and W. E. Rowe.

FIREWORKS—A. D. Stephens and Robert Farr.

LADIES' PARADE, ETC.—Mrs. Rosenthal, Mrs. Durand and Miss Mapelli.

STREET DECORATIONS—E. M. Walsh, T. G. Thompson and W. A. Maria.

J. Schefstad and his Violin.

A musical treat is in store for the citizens of Crookston. Next Tuesday evening at the opera house Mr. J. Schefstad assisted by Prof. and Mrs. Riggs and others will give a concert. Mr. Schefstad has but recently returned from Leipsic Germany where for the past five years he has been studying music under the direction of the famous Hans Sitt. During this time Mr. Schefstad has had a free scholarship which is given only to those of unusual talent. He has, indeed, proved himself an artist on the violin. Between other selections which he will play are Wieniawski D Minor Concerto, Romance by J. Svendsen, Nocturne by Ole Bull and Balade and Polonaise by Vieuxtemps.

High School Notes.

Out of about forty boys in the high school, there are only twelve or fifteen who take any interest in football, not a very good showing for a high school of this size.

Some of the pupils will have to go back into the eighth grade because of lack of room in the assembly hall.

The meeting of the football boys was held last night and an organization effected. Louis Barrett was elected manager, Lucius Miller, captain and Aleck Arnold secretary and treasurer. The boys will get right down to work and as in the past a winning team will be the result. Rugby, not Association football will be played.

The Caesar class now has a membership of twenty-five which is the largest class in this subject for the last several years.

Marcus Stephens, an ex-member of the high school, now attending Shattuck, was a visitor at the high school Tuesday.

All the classes of Miss Smith will be high school classes save one. English Grammar, and she will use the old library room as her recitation room.

ANOTHER CHANCE.

Otis to Be Allowed to Show What He Can Do With a Larger Army.

CHICAGO, Sept. 12.—A special to The Record from Washington says: The friends of General Otis are becoming hopeful that they will succeed in having him retained in his present command. Last week they were deeply discouraged and one high official of the war department openly admitted that he believed "popular clamor" would result in his friend's retention as the assignment of General Miles or General Merritt to Manila.

The prediction is now being confidently made by General Otis' admirers that he will be permitted to demonstrate what he can do with a large army before being censured for his failure to make more progress during the last campaign.

It is impossible owing to the conflicting reports at work to state positively how the contest for supremacy will terminate. General Miles' friends are as confident as are those of General Otis, but the drift of feeling now seems to have turned in favor of the latter. Plans have been adopted at the department, however, under which General Lawton and General MacArthur are each to be given a responsible command of several divisions, and they will begin operations just as soon as the rainy season is considered at an end. The cavalry will be under command of General Lawton, while General MacArthur's command will be composed principally of infantry. One command will operate to the north, while the other will probably cover the south.

LAURIER WILL BE THERE.

Canadian Premier Accepts an Invitation to Chicago Peace Jubilee.

QUEBEC, Sept. 13.—Lord Minto, the governor general, in reply to the Chicago deputation who waited upon him at the Citadel to invite him to attend the Chicago festival in October, asked for a few days in which to consider his other engagements would permit him to accept.

The premier, Sir Wilfred Laurier, accepted the invitation for himself and will furnish replies also to the invitations for the members of his cabinet, which he promised to have delivered at once.

FLOUR MILLS SOLD.

Minneapolis Deal Involving a Consideration of Over a Million Dollars.

MINNEAPOLIS, Sept. 13.—The Washburn-Crosby company has bought the property, four brands, trade marks, sidetracks, office furniture, elevators, warehouses, power and water wheels of the C. C. Washburn Flour Mills company for a consideration of $1,400,000.

By this purchase the Washburn-Crosby company becomes owner of the Washburn A, B, C, D and E mills, with a total capacity of 28,316 barrels of four daily.

THE DRUMS OF THE FORE AND AFT.

By RUDYARD KIPLING.

long time. Then he said quietly: "If you're passed by the doctor, I dare say you can go. I shouldn't smoke if I were you."

The boys saluted and disappeared. The colonel walked home and told the story to his wife, who nearly cried over it. The colonel was well pleased. If that was the temper of the children, what would not the men do?

Jakin and Lew entered the boys' barrack room with great stateliness and refused to hold any conversation with their comrades for at least ten minutes. Then, bursting with pride, Jakin drawled: "I've bin interviewin the colonel. Good old beggar is the colonel. Says I to 'im, 'Colonel,' says I, 'let me go to the front along o' the regiment.' 'To the front you shall go,' says 'e, 'an I only wish there was more like you among the dirty little devils that bang the bloomin drums.' Kidd, if you throw your 'couterments at me for tellin you the truth to your own advantage your legs'll swell."

None the less there was a battle royal in the barrack room, for the boys were consumed with envy and hate, and neither Jakin nor Lew behaved in conciliatory wise.

"I'm goin out to say adoo to my girl," said Lew, to cap the climax. "Don't none o' you touch my kit, because it's wanted for active service, me bein specially invited to go by the colonel."

He strolled forth and whistled in the clump of trees at the back of the married quarters till Cris came to him, and, the preliminary kisses being given and taken, Lew began to explain the situation.

"I'm goin to the front with the regiment," he said valiantly.

"Piggy, you're a little liar," said Cris, but her heart misgave her, for Lew was not in the habit of lying.

"Liar yourself, Cris," said Lew, slipping an arm round her. "I'm goin. When the regiment marches out you'll see me with 'em, all gallant an gay. Give us another kiss, Cris, on the strength of it."

"If you'd on'y a-staid at the depot, where you ought to ha' bin, you could get as many of 'em as—as you dam please," whimpered Cris, putting up her mouth.

"It's 'ard, Cris. I grant you it's 'ard. But what's a man to do? If I'd a-staid at the depot, you wouldn't think anything o' me."

"Like as not, but I'd 'ave you with me, Piggy. An all the thinkin in the world isn't like kissin."

"An all the kissin in the world isn't like 'avin a medal to wear on the front o' your coat."

"You won't get no medal."

"Oh, yus, I shall, though. Me an Jakin are the only acting drummers that'll be took along. All the rest is full men, an we'll get our medals with them."

"They might ha' taken anybody but you, Piggy. You'll get killed—you're so venturesome. Stay with me, Piggy, darlin, down at the depot, an I'll love you true forever."

"Ain't you goin to do that now, Cris? You said you was."

"O' course I am, but the other's more comfortable. Wait till you've growed a bit, Piggy. You aren't no taller than me now."

"I've bin in the army for two years, an I'm not goin to get out of a chanst o' seein service, an don't you try to make me do so. I'll come back, Cris, an when I take on as a man I'll marry you—marry you when I'm a lance."

"Promise, Piggy?"

Lew reflected on the future as arranged by Jakin a short time previously, but Cris' mouth was very near to his own.

"I promise, s'elp me Gawd!" said he.

Cris slid an arm round his neck.

"I won't 'old you back no more, Piggy. Go away an get your medal, an I'll make you a new button bag as nice as I know how," she whispered.

"Put some o' your 'air into it, Cris, an I'll keep it in my pocket so long's I'm alive."

Then Cris wept anew, and the interview ended. Public feeling among the drummer boys rose to fever pitch, and the lives of Jakin and Lew became unenviable. Not only had they been permitted to enlist two years before the regulation boy's age—14—but, by virtue, it seemed, of their extreme youth, they were allowed to go to the front—which thing had not happened to acting drummers within the knowledge of boy. The band which was to accompany the regiment had been cut down to the regulation 20 men, the surplus returning to the ranks. Jakin and Lew were attached to the band as supernumeraries, though they would much have preferred being company buglers.

"Don't matter much," said Jakin after the medical inspection. "Be thankful that we're 'lowed to go at all. The doctor 'e said that if we could stand what we took from the bazaar sergeant's son we'd stand pretty nigh anything."

"Which we will," said Lew, looking tenderly at the ragged and ill made housewife that Cris had given him, with a lock of her hair worked into a sprawling "L" upon the cover.

"It was the best I could," she sobbed. "I wouldn't let mother nor the sergeant's tailor 'elp me. Keep it always, Piggy, an remember I love you true."

They marched to the railway station, 600 strong, and every soul in cantonments turned out to see them go. The drummers gnashed their teeth at Jakin and Lew marching with the band, the married women wept upon the platform, and the regiment cheered its noble self black in the face.

"A nice level lot," said the colonel to the second in command as they watched the first four companies entraining.

"Fit to do anything," said the second in command enthusiastically. "But it seems to me they're a thought too young and tender for the work in hand. It's bitter cold up at the front now."

"They're sound enough," said the colonel. "We must take our chance of sick casualties."

So they went northward, ever northward, past droves and droves of camels, armies of camp followers and legions of laden mules, the throng thickening day by day, till with a shriek the train pulled up at a hopelessly congested junction where six lines of temporary track accommodated six 40 wagon trains, where whistles blew, Babboos sweated and commissariat officers swore from dawn till far into the night amid the wind driven chaff of the fodder bales and the lowing of a thousand steers.

"Hurry up! You're badly wanted at the front," was the message that greeted the Fore and Aft, and the occupants of the Red Cross carriages told the same tale.

"Tisn't so much the bloomin fightin," gasped a head bound trooper of hussars to a knot of admiring Fore and Afts. "Tisn't so much the bloomin fightin, though there's enough o' that. It's the bloomin food an' the bloomin climate. Frost all night 'cept when it hails an b'ilin sun all day, an the water stinks fit to knock you down. I got my 'ead chipped like an egg. I've got pneumonia, too, an my guts is all out o' order. 'Tain't no bloomin picnic in those parts, I can tell you."

"Wot are the niggers like?" demanded a private.

"There's some prisoners in that train yonder. Go an look at 'em. They're the aristocracy o' the country. The common folk are a dashed sight uglier. If you want to know what they fight with, reach under my seat an pull out the long knife that's there."

They dragged out and beheld for the first time the grim bone handled, triangular Afghan knife. It was almost as long as Lew.

"That's the thing to j'int you," said the trooper feebly. "It can take off a man's arm at the shoulder as easy as slicing butter. I halved the beggar that used that un, but there's more o' his likes up above. They don't understand thrustin, but they're devils to slice."

The men strolled across the tracks to inspect the Afghan prisoners. They were unlike any "niggers" that the Fore and Aft had ever met—these huge, black haired, scowling sons of the Bnei-Israel. As the men stared the Afghans spat freely and muttered one to another with lowered eyes.

"My eyes! Wot awful swine!" said Jakin, who was in the rear of the procession. "Say, old man, how you got puckrowed, eh? Kiswasti, you wasn't hanged for your ugly face, hey?"

The tallest of the company turned, his leg irons clanking at the movement, and stared at the boy. "See!" he cried to his fellows in Pushto. "They send children against us. What a people and what fools!"

"Hya!" said Jakin, nodding his head cheerily. "You go down country. Khana get, peenikapanee get—live like a bloomin raja ke marfik. That's a better handobust than baynit get it in your innards. Goodby, ole man. Take care o' your beautiful figure'ed an try to look kushy."

The men laughed and fell in for their first march, when they began to realize that a soldier's life was not all beer and skittles. They were much impressed with the size and bestial ferocity of the niggers whom they had now learned to call "Paythans," and more with the exceeding discomfort of their own surroundings. Twenty old soldiers in the corps would have taught them how to make themselves moderately snug at night, but they had no old soldiers, and, as the troops on the line of march said, "they lived like pigs." They learned the heartbreaking cussedness of camp kitchens and camels and the depravity of an E. P. tent and a wither wrung mule. They studied animalculæ in water, and developed a few cases of dysentery in their study.

At the end of their third march they were disagreeably surprised by the arrival in their camp of a hammered iron slug which, fired from a steady rest at 700 yards, flicked out the brains of a private seated by the fire. This robbed them of their peace for a night and was the beginning of a long range fire carefully calculated to that end. In the daytime they saw nothing except an occasional puff of smoke from a crag above the line of march. At night there were distant spurts of flame and occasional casualties, which set the whole camp blazing into the gloom and occasionally into opposite tents. Then they swore vehemently and vowed that this was magnificent, but not war.

Indeed it was not. The regiment could not halt for reprisals against the franc-tireurs of the countryside. Its duty was to go forward and make connection with the Scotch and Gurkha troops with which it was brigaded. The Afghans knew this and knew, too, after their first tentative shots, that they were dealing with a raw regiment. Thereafter they devoted themselves to the task of keeping the Fore and Aft on the strain. Not for anything would they have taken equal liberties with a seasoned corps—with the wicked little Gurkhas, whose delight it was to lie out in the open on a dark night and stalk their stalkers—with the terrible, big men dressed in women's clothes who could be heard praying to their God in the night watches, and whose peace of mind no amount of "sniping" could shake—or with those vile Sikhs, who marched so ostentatiously unprepared and who dealt out such grim reward to those who tried to profit by that unpreparedness. This white regiment was different—quite different. It slept like a hog, and, like a hog, charged in every direction when it was roused. Its sentries walked with a footfall that could be heard for a quarter of a mile; would fire at anything that moved—even a driven donkey—and, when they had once fired, could be scientifically "rushed" and laid out a horror and an offense against the morning sun. Then there were camp followers who straggled and could be cut up without fear. Their shrieks would disturb the white boys, and the loss of their services would inconvenience them sorely.

Thus at every march the hidden enemy became bolder, and the regiment writhed and twisted under attacks it could not avenge. The crowning triumph was a sudden night rush ending in the cutting of many tent ropes, the collapse of the sodden canvas and a glorious knifing of the men who struggled and kicked below. It was a great deed, neatly carried out, and it shook the already shaken nerves of the Fore and Aft. All the courage that they had been required to exercise up to this point was the "3 o'clock in the morning courage," and they so far had only succeeded in shooting their comrades and losing their sleep.

Sullen, discontented, cold, savage, sick, with their uniforms dulled and unclean, the Fore and Aft joined their brigade.

"I hear you had a tough time of it coming up," said the brigadier. But when he saw the hospital sheets his face fell.

"This is bad," said he to himself. "They're as rotten as sheep." And aloud to the colonel: "I'm afraid we can't spare you just yet. We want all we have, else I should have given you ten days to recruit in."

The colonel winced. "On my honor, sir," he returned, "there is not the least necessity to think of sparing us. My men have been rather mauled and upset without a fair return. They only want to go in somewhere where they can see what's before them."

"Can't say I think much of the Fore and Aft," said the brigadier in confidence to his brigade major. "They've lost all their soldiering, and by the trim of them might have marched through the country from the other side. A more fagged out set of men I never put eyes on."

"Oh, they'll improve as the work goes on. The parade gloss has been rubbed off a little, but they'll put on field polish before long," said the brigade major. "They've been mauled, and they quite don't understand it."

They did not. All the hitting was on one side, and it was cruelly hard hitting, with accessories that made them sick. There was also the real sickness that laid hold of a strong man and dragged him howling to the grave. Worst of all, their officers knew just as little of the country as the men themselves and looked as if they did. The Fore and Aft were in a thoroughly unsatisfactory condition, but they believed that all would be well if they could once get a fair go in at the enemy. Pot shots up and down the valleys were unsatisfactory, and the bayonet never seemed to get a chance. Perhaps it was as well, for a long limbed Afghan with a knife had a reach of eight feet and could carry away enough lead to disable three Englishmen. The Fore and Fit would like some rifle practice at the enemy—all 700 rifles blazing together. That wish showed the mood of the men.

The Gurkhas walked into their camp, and in broken, barrack room English strove to fraternize with them; offered them pipes of tobacco and stood them treat at the canteen. But the Fore and Aft, not knowing much of the nature of the Gurkhas, treated them as they would treat any other "niggers," and the little men in green trotted back to their firm friends the highlanders and, with many grins, confided to them: "That dam white regiment no dam use. Sulky—ugh! Dirty—ugh! Hya, any tot for Johnny?" Whereat the highlanders smote the Gurkhas as to the head and told them not to vilify a British regiment, and the Ghurkas grinned cavernously, for the highlanders were their elder brothers and entitled to the privileges of kinship. The common soldier who touches a Gurkha is more than likely to have his head sliced open.

Three days later the brigadier arranged a battle according to the rules of war and the peculiarity of the Afghan temperament. The enemy were massing in inconvenient strength among the hills, and the moving of many green standards warned him that the tribes were "up" in aid of the Afghan regular troops. A squadron and a half of Bengal lancers represented the available cavalry, and two screw guns, borrowed from a column 30 miles away, the artillery at the general's disposal.

"If they stand, as I've a very strong notion that they will, I fancy we shall see an infantry fight that will be worth watching," said the brigadier. "We'll do it in style. Each regiment shall be played into action by its band, and we'll hold the cavalry in reserve."

"For all the reserve?" somebody asked.

"For all the reserve, because we're going to crumple them up," said the brigadier, who was an extraordinary brigadier and did not believe in the value of a reserve when dealing with Asiatics. And indeed, when you come to think of it, had the British army consistently waited for reserves in all its little affairs, the boundaries of our empire would have stopped at Brighton beach.

That battle was to be a glorious battle.

The three regiments, debouching from three separate gorges, after duly crowning the heights above, were to converge from the center, left and right upon what we will call the Afghan army, then stationed toward the lower extremity of a flat bottomed valley. Thus it will be seen that three sides of the valley practically belonged to the English, while the fourth was strictly Afghan property. In the event of defeat the Afghans had the rocky hills to fly to, where the fire from the guerrilla tribes in aid would cover their retreat. In the event of victory these same tribes would rush down and lend their weight to the rout of the British.

The screw guns were to shell the head of each Afghan rush that was made in close formation, and the cavalry, held in reserve in the right valley, were to gently stimulate the break up which would follow on the combined attack. The brigadier, sitting upon a rock overlooking the valley, would watch the battle unrolled at his feet. The Fore and Aft would debouch from the central gorge, the Gurkhas from the left and the highlanders from the right, for the reason that the left flank of the enemy seemed as though it required the most hammering. It was not every day that an Afghan force would take ground in the open, and the brigadier was resolved to make the most of it.

"If we only had a few more men," he said plaintively, "we could surround the creatures and crumble 'em up thoroughly. As it is, I'm afraid we can only cut them up as they run. It's a great pity."

The Fore and Aft had enjoyed unbroken peace for five days and were beginning, in spite of dysentery, to recover their nerve. But they were not happy, for they did not know the work in hand and, had they known, would not have known how to do it. Throughout those five days in which old soldiers might have taught them the craft of the game they discussed together their misadventures in the past—how such a one was alive at dawn and dead ere the dusk, and with what shrieks and struggles such another had given up his soul under the Afghan knife. Death was a new and horrible thing to the sons of mechanics who were used to die decently of zymotic disease, and their careful conservation in barracks had done nothing to make them look upon it with less dread.

Very early in the dawn the bugles began to blow, and the Fore and Aft, filled with a misguided enthusiasm, turned out without waiting for a cup of coffee and a biscuit and were rewarded by being kept under arms in the cold while the other regiments leisurely prepared for the fray.

The Fore and Aft waited, leaning upon their rifles and listening to the protests of their empty stomachs. The colonel did his best to remedy the default of lining as soon as it was borne in upon him that the affair would not begin at once, and so well did he succeed that the coffee was just ready when—the men moved off, their band leading. Even then there had been a mistake in time, and the Fore and Aft came out into the valley ten minutes before the proper hour. Their band wheeled to the right after reaching the open and retired behind a little rocky knoll, still playing, while the regiment went past.

It was not a pleasant sight that opened on the unobstructed view, for the lower end of the valley appeared to be filled by an army in position—real and actual, regiments attired in red coats and—of this there was no doubt—firing Martini-Henry bullets, which cut up the ground 100 yards in front of the leading company. Over that pockmarked ground the regiment had to pass, and it opened the ball with a general and profound courtesy to the piping pickets, ducking in perfect time, as though it had been brazed on a rod. Being half capable of thinking for itself, it fired a volley by the simple process of pitching its rifle into its shoulder and pulling the trigger. The bullets may have accounted for some of the watchers on the hillside, but they certainly did not affect the mass of enemy in front, while the noise of the rifles drowned any orders that might have been given.

"Good God!" said the brigadier, sitting on the rock high above all. "That regiment has spoiled the whole show. Hurry up the others, and let the screw guns get off."

But the screw guns, in working round the heights, had stumbled upon a wasps' nest of a small mud fort, which they incontinently shelled at 800 yards, to the huge discomfort of the occupants, who were unaccustomed to weapons of such devilish precision.

The Fore and Aft continued to go forward, but with shortened stride. Where were the other regiments, and why did these niggers use Martinis? They took open order instinctively, lying down and firing at random, rushing a few paces forward and lying down again, according to the regulations. Once in this formation each man felt himself desperately alone and edged in toward his fellow for comfort's sake.

Then the crack of his neighbor's rifle at his ear led him to fire as rapidly as he could—again for the sake of the comfort of the noise. The reward was not long delayed. Five volleys plunged the files in banked smoke impenetrable to the eye, and the bullets began to take ground 20 or 30 yards in front of the firers, as the weight of the bayonet dragged down and to the right arms wearied with holding the kick of the leaping Martini. The company commanders peered helplessly through the smoke, the more nervous mechanically trying to fan it away with their helmets.

"High and to the left!" bawled a captain till he was hoarse. "No good! Cease firing, and let it drift away a bit."

Three and four times the bugles shrieked the order, and when it was obeyed the Fore and Aft looked that their foe should be lying before them in mown swaths of men. A light wind drove the smoke to leeward and showed the enemy still in position and apparently unaffected. A quarter of a ton of lead had been buried a furlong in front of them, as the ragged earth attested.

A private of the Fore and Aft spun up his company shrieking with agony, another was kicking the earth and gasping, and a third, ripped through the lower intestines by a jagged bullet, was calling aloud on his comrades to put him out of his pain. These were the casualties, and they were not soothing to hear or see. The smoke cleared to a dull haze.

Then the foe began to shout with a great shouting, and a mass—a black mass—detached itself from the main body and rolled over the ground at horrid speed. It was composed of perhaps 300 men, who would shout and fire and slash if the rush of their 50 comrades who were determined to die carried home. The 50 were Ghazis, half maddened with drugs and wholly mad with religious fanaticism. When they rushed the British fire ceased, and in the lull the order was given to close ranks and meet them with the bayonet.

Any one who knew the business could have told the Fore and Aft that the only way of dealing with a Ghazi rush is by volleys at long ranges, because a man who means to die, who desires to die, who will gain heaven by dying, must, in nine cases out of ten, kill a man who has a lingering prejudice in favor of life if he can close with the latter. Where they should have closed and gone forward, the Fore and Aft opened out and skirmished, and where they should have opened out and fired they closed and waited.

A man dragged from his blankets half awake and unfed is never in a pleasant frame of mind. Nor does his happiness increase when he watches the whites of the eyes of 300 six foot fiends upon whose beards the foam is lying, upon whose tongues is a roar of wrath and in whose hands are three foot knives.

The Fore and Aft heard the Gurkha bugles bringing that regiment forward at the double, while the neighing of the highland pipes came from the left. They strove to stay where they were, though the bayonets wavered down the line like the oars of a ragged boat. Then they felt body to body the amazing physical strength of their foes. A shriek of pain ended the rush, and the knives fell amid scenes not to be told. The men clubbed together and smote blindly—as often as not at their own fellows. Their front crumpled like paper, and the 50 Ghazis passed on, their backers, now drunk with success, fighting as madly as they.

Then the rear ranks were bidden to close up, and the subalterns dashed into the stew—alone, for the rear rank had heard the clamor in front, the yells and the howls of pain, and had seen the dark, stale blood that makes afraid. They were not going to stay. It was the rushing of the camps over again. Let their officers go to hell if they chose. They would get away from the knives.

"Come on!" shrieked the subalterns, and their men, cursing them, drew back, each closing into his neighbor and wheeling round.

Charteris and Devlin, subalterns of the last company, faced their death alone in the belief that their men would follow.

"You've killed me, you cowards!" sobbed Devlin and dropped, cut from the shoulder strap to the center of the chest, and a fresh detachment of his men retreating, always retreating, trampled him underfoot as they made for the pass whence they had emerged.

Proceedings in Bankruptcy.

BANKRUPT'S PETITION FOR DISCHARGE.

In the District Court of the United States for the District of Minnesota.—Sixth Division. In the matter of Henry Steege, Bankrupt. In Bankruptcy.

To the Hon. William Lochren, Judge of the District Court of the United States for the District of Minnesota, Sixth Division.

Henry Steege, of the city of Crookston, in the county of Polk, and state of Minnesota, in said district, respectfully represents,

That on the 14th day of April, 1899, he was duly adjudged bankrupt under the acts of congress relating to bankruptcy; that he has duly surrendered all his property and rights of property and has fully complied with all the requirements of said acts and of the orders of the Court touching his bankruptcy.

Wherefore he prays that he may be decreed by the Court to have a full discharge from all debts provable against his estate under said bankruptcy acts, except such debts as are excepted by law from such discharge.

Dated this 11th day of August, 1899.

HENRY STEEGE, Bankrupt.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT, DISTRICT OF MINNESOTA, SIXTH DIVISION. } ss.

On the 17th day of August, A. D., 1899, on reading the foregoing petition, it is Ordered by the Court, that a hearing be had upon the same on the 6th day of September, A. D., 1899, before said court at Minneapolis, in said district, at two o'clock in the forenoon; and that notice thereof be published in the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL, a newspaper printed in said district, and that all known creditors and other persons in interest may appear at the said time and place and show cause, if any they have, why the prayer of the said petitioner should not be granted.

And it is further Ordered by the Court that the Clerk shall send by mail to all known creditors copies of said petition and this order, addressed to them at their places of residence as stated.

Witness the Honorable WILLIAM LOCHREN, Judge of the said Court, [SEAL OF COURT] and the seal thereof, at Fergus Falls in said District, on the 17th day of August, A. D. 1899.

THE DRUMS OF THE FORE AND AFT.

By RUDYARD KIPLING.

long time. Then he said quietly: "If you're passed by the doctor, I dare say you can go. I shouldn't smoke if I were you."

The boys saluted and disappeared. The colonel walked home and told the story to his wife, who nearly cried over it. The colonel was well pleased. If that was the temper of the children, what would not the men do?

Jakin and Lew entered the boys' barrack room with great stateliness and refused to hold any conversation with their comrades for at least ten minutes. Then, bursting with pride, Jakin drawled: "I've bin intervooin the colonel. Good old beggar is the colonel. Says I to 'im, 'Colonel,' says I, 'let me go to the front along o' the regiment.' 'To the front you shall go,' says 'e, 'an I only wish there was more like you among the dirty little devils that hang the bloomin drums.' Kidd, if you throw your 'conterments at me for tellin you the truth to your own advantage your legs 'll swell."

None the less, there was a battle royal in the barrack room, for the boys were consumed with envy and hate, and neither Jakin nor Lew behaved in conciliatory wise.

"I'm goin out to say adoo to my girl," said Lew to cap the climax. "Don't none o' you touch my kit, because it's wanted for active service, me bein specially invited to go by the colonel."

He strolled forth and whistled in the clump of trees at the back of the married quarters till Cris came to him, and, the preliminary kisses being given and taken, Lew began to explain the situation.

"I'm goin to the front with the regiment," he said valiantly.

"Piggy, you're a little liar," said Cris, but her heart misgave her, for Lew was not in the habit of lying.

"Liar yourself, Cris," said Lew, slipping an arm round her. "I'm goin. When the reg'ment marches out, you'll see me with 'em, all gallant an gay. Give us another kiss, Cris, on the strength of it."

"If you'd on'y a-staid at the depot, where you ought to ha' bin, you could get as many of 'em as—as you dam please," whimpered Cris, putting up her mouth.

"It's 'ard, Cris. I grant you it's 'ard. But what's a man to do? If I'd a-staid at the depot, you wouldn't think anything o' me."

"Like as not, but I'd 'ave you with me, Piggy. An all the thinkin in the world isn't like kissin."

"An all the kissin in the world isn't like 'avin a medal to wear on the front o' your coat."

"You won't get no medal."

"Oh, yus, I shall, though. Me an Jakin are the only acting drummers that'll be took along. All the rest is full men, an we'll get our medals with them."

"They might ha' taken anybody but you, Piggy. You'll get killed—you're so venturesome. Stay with me, Piggy, darlin, down at the depot, an I'll love you true forever."

"Ain't you goin to do that now, Cris? You said you was."

"O' course I am, but the other's more comfortable. Wait till you've growed a bit, Piggy. You aren't no taller than me now."

"I've bin in the army for two years, an I'm not goin to get out of a chanst o' seein service, an don't you try to make me do so. I'll come back, Cris, an when I take on as a man I'll marry you—marry you when I'm a lance."

"Promise, Piggy?"

Lew reflected on the future as arranged by Jakin a short time previously, but Cris' mouth was very near to his own.

"I promise, s'elp me Gawd!" said he.

Cris slid an arm round his neck.

"I won't 'old you back no more, Piggy. Go away an get your medal, an I'll make you a new button bag as nice as I know how," she whispered.

"Put some o' your 'air into it, Cris, an I'll keep it in my pocket so long's I'm alive."

Then Cris wept anew, and the interview ended. Public feeling among the drummer boys rose to fever pitch, and the lives of Jakin and Lew became unenviable. Not only had they been permitted to enlist two years before the regulation boy's age—14—but, by virtue, it seemed, of their extreme youth, they were allowed to go to the front—which thing had not happened to acting drummers within the knowledge of boy. The band which was to accompany the regiment had been cut down to the regulation 20 men, the surplus returning to the ranks. Jakin and Lew were attached to the band as supernumeraries, though they would much have preferred being company buglers.

"Don't matter much," said Jakin after the medical inspection. "Be thankful that we're 'lowed to go at all. The doctor 'e said that if we could stand what we took from the bazaar sergeant's son we'd stand pretty nigh anything."

"Which we will," said Lew, looking tenderly at the ragged and ill made housewife that Cris had given him with a lock of her hair worked into a sprawling "L" upon the cover.

"It was the best I could," she sobbed. "I wouldn't let mother nor the sergeant's tailor 'elp me. Keep it always, Piggy, an remember I love you true."

They marched to the railway station 600 strong, and every soul in cantonments turned out to see them go. The drummers gnashed their teeth at Jakin and Lew marching with the band, the married women wept upon the platform, and the regiment cheered its noble self black in the face.

"A nice level lot," said the colonel to the second in command as they watched the first four companies entraining.

"Fit to do anything," said the second in command enthusiastically. "But it seems to me they're a thought too young and tender for the work in hand. It's bitter cold up at the front now."

"They're sound enough," said the colonel. "We must take our chance of sick casualties."

So they went northward, ever northward, past droves and droves of camels, armies of camp followers and legions of laden mules, the throng thickening day by day, till with a shriek the train pulled up at a hopelessly congested junction where six lines of temporary track accommodated six 40 wagon trains; where whistles blew, Baboos sweated and commissariat officers swore from dawn till far into the night amid the wind driven chaff of the fodder bales and the lowing of a thousand steers.

"Hurry up! You're badly wanted at the front," was the message that greeted the Fore and Aft, and the occupants of the Red Cross carriages told the same tale.

"'Tisn't so much the bloomin fightin'," gasped a head bound trooper of hussars to a knot of admiring Fore and Afts. "'Tisn't so much the bloomin fightin, though there's enough o' that. It's the bloomin food an' the bloomin' climate. Frost all night 'cept when it hails an b'ilin sun all day, an the water stinks fit to knock you down. I got my 'ead chipped like an egg. I've got pneumonia, too, an my guts is all out o' order. 'Tain't no bloomin picnic in those parts, I can tell you."

"Wot are the niggers like?" demanded a private.

"There's some prisoners in that train yonder. Go an look at 'em. They're the aristocracy o' the country. The common folk are a dashed sight uglier. If you want to know what they fight with, reach under my seat an pull out the long knife that's there."

They dragged out and beheld for the first time the grim, bone handled, triangular Afghan knife. It was almost as long as Lew.

"That's the thing to j'int you," said the trooper feebly. "It can take off a man's arm at the shoulder as easy as slicing butter. I halved the beggar that used that 'un, but there's more o' his likes up above. They don't understand thrustin, but they're devils to slice."

The men strolled across the tracks to inspect the Afghan prisoners. They were unlike any "niggers" that the Fore and Aft had ever met—these huge, black haired, scowling sons of the Bnei-Israel. As the men stared the Afghans spat freely and muttered one to another, with lowered eyes.

"My eyes! Wot awful swine!" said Jakin, who was in the rear of the procession. "Say, old man, how you got puckrowed, eh? Kiswasti, you wasn't hanged for your ugly face, hey?"

The tallest of the company turned, his leg irons clanking at the movement, and stared at the boy. "See!" he cried to his fellows in Pushto. "They send children against us. What a people and what fools!"

"Hya!" said Jakin, nodding his head cheerily. "You go down country. Khana get, peenikapanee get—live like a bloomin raja ke marfik. That's a better bandobust than baynit get it in your innards. Goodby, ole man. Take care o' your beautiful figure'ed an try to look kushy."

The men laughed and fell in for their first march, when they began to realize that a soldier's life was not all beer and skittles. They were much impressed with the size and bestial ferocity of the niggers whom they had now learned to call "Paythans," and more with the exceeding discomfort of their own surroundings. Twenty old soldiers in the corps would have taught them how to make themselves moderately snug at night, but they had no old soldiers, and, as the troops on the line of march said, "they lived like pigs." They learned the heartbreaking cussedness of camp kitchens and camels and the depravity of an E. P. tent and a wither wrung mule. They studied animalculæ in water and developed a few cases of dysentery in their study.

At the end of their third march they were disagreeably surprised by the arrival in their camp of a hammered iron slug which, fired from a steady rest at 700 yards, flicked out the brains of a private seated by the fire. This robbed them of their peace for a night and was the beginning of a long range fire carefully calculated to that end. In the daytime they saw nothing except an occasional puff of smoke from a crag above the line of march. At night there were distant spurts of flame and occasional casualties, which set the whole camp blazing into the gloom, and occasionally into opposite tents. Then they swore vehemently and vowed that this was magnificent, but not war.

Indeed it was not. The regiment could not halt for reprisals against the franc-tireurs of the countryside. Its duty was to go forward and make connection with the Scotch and Gurkha troops with which it was brigaded. The Afghans knew this and knew, too, after their first tentative shots, that they were dealing with a raw regiment. Thereafter they devoted themselves to the task of keeping the Fore and Aft on the strain. Not for anything would they have taken equal liberties with a seasoned corps—with the wicked little Gurkhas, whose delight it was to lie out in the open on a dark night and stalk their stalkers—with the terrible big men dressed in women's clothes who could be heard praying to their God in the night watches, and whose peace of mind no amount of "sniping" could shake—or with those vile Sikhs, who marched so ostentatiously unprepared and who dealt out such grim reward to those who tried to profit by that unpreparedness. This white regiment was different—quite different. It slept like a hog, and, like a hog, charged in every direction when it was roused. Its sentries walked with a footfall that could be heard for a quarter of a mile; would fire at anything that moved—even a driven donkey—and, when they had once fired, could be scientifically "rushed" and laid out a horror and an offense against the morning sun. Then there were camp followers who straggled and could be cut up without fear. Their shrieks would disturb the white boys, and the loss of their services would inconvenience them sorely.

Thus at every march the hidden enemy became bolder, and the regiment writhed and twisted under attacks it could not avenge. The crowning triumph was a sudden night rush ending in the cutting of many tent ropes, the collapse of the sodden canvas and a glorious knifing of the men who struggled and kicked below. It was a great deed, neatly carried out, and it shook the already shaken nerves of the Fore and Aft. All the courage that they had been required to exercise up to this point was the "2 o'clock in the morning courage," and they so far had only succeeded in shooting their comrades and losing their sleep.

Sullen, discontented, cold, savage, sick, with their uniforms dulled and unclean, the Fore and Aft joined their brigade.

"I hear you had a tough time of it coming up," said the brigadier. But when he saw the hospital sheets his face fell.

"This is bad," said he to himself. "They're as rotten as sheep." And aloud to the colonel: "I'm afraid we can't spare you just yet. We want all we have, else I should have given you ten days to recruit in."

The colonel winced. "On my honor, sir," he returned, "there is not the least necessity to think of sparing us. My men have been rather mauled and upset without a fair return. They only want to go in somewhere where they can see what's before them."

"Can't say I think much of the Fore and Aft," said the brigadier in confidence to his brigade major. "They've lost all their soldiering, and by the trim of them might have marched through the country from the other side. A more fagged out set of men I never put eyes on."

"Oh, they'll improve as the work goes on. The parade gloss has been rubbed off a little, but they'll put on field polish before long," said the brigade major. "They've been mauled, and they quite don't understand it."

They did not. All the hitting was on one side, and it was cruelly hard hitting, with accessories that made them sick. There was also the real sickness that laid hold of a strong man and dragged him howling to the grave. Worst of all, their officers knew just as little of the country as the men themselves and looked as if they did. The Fore and Aft were in a thoroughly unsatisfactory condition, but they believed that all would be well if they could once get a fair go in at the enemy. Pot shots up and down the valleys were unsatisfactory, and the bayonet never seemed to get a chance. Perhaps it was as well, for a long limbed Afghan with a knife had a reach of eight feet and could carry away enough lead to disable three Englishmen. The Fore and Aft would like some rifle practice at the enemy—all 700 rifles blazing together. That wish showed the mood of the men.

The Gurkhas walked into their camp, and in broken, barrack room English strove to fraternize with them; offered them pipes of tobacco and stood them treat at the canteen. But the Fore and Aft, not knowing much of the nature of the Gurkhas, treated them as they would treat any other "niggers," and the little men in green trotted back to their firm friends, the highlanders, and, with many grins, confided to them: "That dam white regiment no dam use. Sulky—ugh! Dirty—ugh! Hya, any tot for Johnny?" Whereat the highlanders smote the Gurkhas as to the head and told them not to vilify a British regiment, and the Gurkhas grinned cavernously, for the highlanders were their elder brothers and entitled to the privileges of kinship. The common soldier who touches a Gurkha is more than likely to have his head sliced open.

Three days later the brigadier arranged a battle according to the rules of war and the peculiarity of the Afghan temperament. The enemy were massing in inconvenient strength among the hills, and the moving of many green standards warned him that the tribes were "up" in aid of the Afghan regular troops. A squadron and a half of Bengal lancers represented the available cavalry, and two screw guns, borrowed from a column 30 miles away, the artillery at the general's disposal.

"If they stand, as I've a very strong notion that they will, I fancy we shall see an infantry fight that will be worth watching," said the brigadier. "We'll do it in style. Each regiment shall be played into action by its band, and we'll hold the cavalry in reserve."

"For all the reserve?" somebody asked.

"For all the reserve, because we're going to crumple them up," said the brigadier, who was an extraordinary brigadier and did not believe in the value of a reserve when dealing with Asiatics. And indeed, when you come to think of it, had the British army consistently waited for reserves in all its little affairs, the boundaries of our empire would have stopped at Brighton beach.

That battle was to be a glorious battle.

The three regiments, debouching from three separate gorges, after duly crowning the heights above, were to converge from the center, left and right upon what we will call the Afghan army, then stationed toward the lower extremity of a flat bottomed valley. Thus it will be seen that three sides of the valley practically belonged to the English, while the fourth was strictly Afghan property. In the event of defeat the Afghans had the rocky hills to fly to, where the fire from the guerrilla tribes in aid would cover their retreat. In the event of victory these same tribes would rush down and lend their weight to the rout of the British.

The screw guns were to shell the head of each Afghan rush that was made in close formation, and the cavalry, held in reserve in the right valley, were to gently stimulate the break up which would follow on the combined attack. The brigadier, sitting upon a rock overlooking the valley, would watch the battle unrolled at his feet. The Fore and Aft would debouch from the central gorge, the Gurkhas from the left and the highlanders from the right, for the reason that the left flank of the enemy seemed as though it required the most hammering. It was not every day that an Afghan force would take ground in the open, and the brigadier was resolved to make the most of it.

"If we only had a few more men," he said plaintively, "we could surround the creatures and crumble 'em up thoroughly. As it is, I'm afraid we can only cut them up as they run. It's a great pity."

The Fore and Aft had enjoyed unbroken peace for five days and were beginning, in spite of dysentery, to recover their nerve. But they were not happy, for they did not know the work in hand and, had they known, would not have known how to do it. Throughout those five days in which old soldiers might have taught them the craft of the game they discussed together their misadventures in the past—how such a one was alive at dawn and dead ere the dusk, and with what shrieks and struggles such another had given up his soul under the Afghan knife. Death was a new and horrible thing to the sons of mechanics who were used to die decently of zymotic disease, and their careful conservation in barracks had done nothing to make them look upon it with less dread.

Very early in the dawn the bugles began to blow, and the Fore and Aft, filled with a misguided enthusiasm, turned out without waiting for a cup of coffee and a biscuit and were rewarded by being kept under arms in the cold while the other regiments leisurely prepared for the fray.

The Fore and Aft waited, leaning upon their rifles and listening to the protests of their empty stomachs. The colonel did his best to remedy the default of lining as soon as it was borne in upon him that the affair would not begin at once, and so well did he succeed that the coffee was just ready when—the men moved off, their band leading. Even then there had been a mistake in time, and the Fore and Aft came out into the valley ten minutes before the proper hour. Their band wheeled to the right after reaching the open and retired behind a little rocky knoll, still playing, while the regiment went past.

It was not a pleasant sight that opened on the unobstructed view, for the lower end of the valley appeared to be filled by an army in position—real and actual regiments attired in red coats and—of this there was no doubt—firing Martini-Henry bullets, which cut up the ground 100 yards in front of the leading company. Over that pockmarked ground the regiment had to pass, and it opened the ball with a general and profound courtesy to the piping pickets, ducking in perfect time, as though it had been brazed on a rod. Being half capable of thinking for itself, it fired a volley by the simple process of pitching its rifle into its shoulder and pulling the trigger. The bullets may have accounted for some of the watchers on the hillside, but they certainly did not affect the mass of enemy in front, while the noise of the rifles drowned any orders that might have been given.

"Good God!" said the brigadier, sitting on the rock high above all. "That regiment has spoiled the whole show. Hurry up the others, and let the screw guns get off."

But the screw guns, in working round the heights, had stumbled upon a wasps' nest of a small mud fort, which they incontinently shelled at 800 yards, to the huge discomfort of the occupants, who were unaccustomed to weapons of such devilish precision.

The Fore and Aft continued to go forward, but with shortened stride. Where were the other regiments, and why did these niggers use Martinis? They took open order instinctively, lying down and firing at random, rushing a few paces forward and lying down again, according to the regulations. Once in this formation each man felt himself desperately alone and edged in toward his fellow for comfort's sake.

Then the crack of his neighbor's rifle at his ear led him to fire as rapidly as he could—again for the sake of the comfort of the noise. The reward was not long delayed. Five volleys plunged the files in banked smoke impenetrable to the eye, and the bullets began to take ground 20 or 30 yards in front of the firers, as the weight of the bayonet dragged down and to the right arms wearied with holding the kick of the leaping Martini. The company commanders peered helplessly through the smoke, the more nervous mechanically trying to fan it away with their helmets.

"High and to the left!" bawled a captain till he was hoarse. "No good! Cease firing, and let it drift away a bit."

Three and four times the bugles shrieked the order, and when it was obeyed the Fore and Aft looked that their foe should be lying before them in mown swaths of men. A light wind drove the smoke to leeward and showed the enemy still in position and apparently unaffected. A quarter of a ton of lead had been buried a furlong in front of them, as the ragged earth attested.

A private of the Fore and Aft spun up his company shrieking with agony, another was kicking the earth and gasping, and a third, ripped through the lower intestines by a jagged bullet, was calling aloud on his comrades to put him out of his pain. These were the casualties, and they were not soothing to hear or see. The smoke cleared to a dull haze.

Then the foe began to shout with a great shouting, and a mass—a black mass—detached itself from the main body and rolled over the ground at horrid speed. It was composed of perhaps 300 men, who would shout and fire and slash if the rush of their 50 comrades who were determined to die carried home. The 50 were Ghazis, half maddened with drugs and wholly mad with religious fanaticism. When they rushed the British fire ceased, and in the lull the order was given to close ranks and meet them with the bayonet.

Any one who knew the business could have told the Fore and Aft that the only way of dealing with a Ghazi rush is by volleys at long ranges, because a man who means to die, who desires to die, who will gain heaven by dying, must, in nine cases out of ten, kill a man who has a lingering prejudice in favor of life if he can close with the latter. Where they should have closed and gone forward, the Fore and Aft opened out and skirmished, and where they should have opened out and fired, they closed and waited.

A man dragged from his blankets half awake and unfed is never in a pleasant frame of mind. Nor does his happiness increase when he watches the whites of the eyes of 300 six foot fiends upon whose beards the foam is lying, upon whose tongues is a roar of wrath, and in whose hands are three foot knives.

The Fore and Aft heard the Gurkha bugles bringing that regiment forward at the double, while the neighing of the highland pipes came from the left. They strove to stay where they were, though the bayonets wavered down the line like the oars of a ragged boat. Then they felt body to body the amazing physical strength of their foes. A shriek of pain ended the rush, and the knives fell amid scenes not to be told. The men clubbed together and smote blindly—as often as not at their own fellows. Their front crumpled like paper, and the 50 Ghazis passed on, their backers, now drunk with success, fighting as madly as they.

Then the rear ranks were bidden to close up, and the subalterns dashed into the stew—alone, for the rear rank had heard the clamor in front, the yells and the howls of pain, and had seen the dark, stale blood that makes afraid. They were not going to stay. It was the rushing of the camps over again. Let their officers go to hell if they chose. They would get away from the knives.

"Come on!" shrieked the subalterns, and their men, cursing them, drew back, each closing into his neighbor and wheeling round.

Charteris and Devlin, subalterns of the last company, faced their death alone in the belief that their men would follow.

"You've killed me, you cowards!" sobbed Devlin and dropped, cut from the shoulder strap to the center of the chest, and a fresh detachment of his men retreating, always retreating, trampled him underfoot as they made for the pass whence they had emerged.

INTENTIONAL DUPLICATE EXPOSURE

NEWS IN MINNESOTA

The general conference of the Evangelical church will meet in St. Paul next month.

The state horticultural society offers $1,000 for a seedling apple that will do in the Minnesota climate.

Adjg. suggests to have been manufactured a gold dollar of the size of the federal quarter dollar.

The burned buildings of Concordia college, St. Paul, have been restored and were reoccupied Sunday.

George F. Hinkins of St. Paul has been elected president of the National Railway Blacksmiths' association.

The semi-centennial of the introduction of Masonry in Minnesota was celebrated at St. Paul Lodge No. 3 Friday evening.

Eight emptied pocketbooks were found behind a coop in the poultry building at the state fair when the fowls were removed.

Colonel Ames and Major Bean have buried the hatchet, temporarily at least, and all is peace in the Thirteenth regiment, which will be mustered out about Oct. 1.

Thirty-six thousand people attended the Minnesota state fair Thursday—St. Paul day—breaking all previous records. The gate receipts aggregated $18,000.

Receipts at the state fair for the week were $80,000, compared with $81,000 last year. The evening features were more than self paying, though the additional expense was about $12,000.

A definite move for an epileptic colony in Minnesota is on foot as a result of the state conference of corrections and charities in Duluth last week. A committee has been named to draft a bill to that end.

Minnesota has furnished the largest delegation to the Grand Army encampment of any Western state. About 300 came on the official Burlington and Ohio train via Washington and the Soo brought enough more to give a total of more than 430.

An important pine land deal has been made from Henry and Albert Stephens of Detroit, Mich., to the Northern Lumber company, the Weyerhauser syndicate. The consideration was $160,000. The property includes timber on towns 57, 58 and 59, ranges 14, 15, 16, 17 and 23.

Thomas Mendsall of La Crescent, aged 75, and Mrs. M. E. Remington, aged 66, were married at the bride's home near Dexter. Mr. Mendsall claims the distinction of being the oldest postmaster in the United States, he having held that position at La Crescent for 43 years.

John L. Larson, John Lundstrom, Albert Larson and Henry Eggan of Garfield, and Ole Wertman from Belle River, threshers, while returning from Brandon were struck by lightning. Lundstrom and Wertman were killed instantly. The others were more or less injured but will recover.

More than 230,000,000 feet of lumber have been shipped from Minneapolis since Jan. 1, which is an increase of 47 per cent over the corresponding months of last year. The August shipments amounted to 56,510,000 feet, an increase of 25,000,000 over the amount shipped in the corresponding month last year.

The state railroad and warehouse commission will make a trip this month over the Preston narrow gauge branch of the Milwaukee and the narrow gauge Zumbrota road, with a view to ascertaining whether it is best to order the construction of standard gauge road. The Milwaukee will probably take action without waiting for an order from the commission, and will build a standard gauge track on the Preston branch in order to improve its facilities for handling business.

Dr. C. A. Schenck, an officer of the forestry administration of the State of Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, said to be one of the oldest forestry experts in the world, Professor Greene, and General Andrews will make a two weeks visit of inspection to the pine forests of Minnesota. The trip is to be made by request of the state forestry board, with a view to securing data to be used at the next session of the legislature for wise revision of the state timber laws with regard to the perpetuity of Minnesota's forests.

RAISED HORSES.

Higher Prices Cause an Increase in Assessed Valuation in Minnesota.

ST. PAUL, Sept. 13.—The state board of equalization averaged values of horses for the state, raising them from last year, and, in more cases than not, from the valuation returned by the county boards.

The basis of valuation for 1-year-old horses last year was $7 to $8, this year, $9 to $11; of 2-year-olds, last year, $11 to 13, this year $15 to $17; of 3-year-olds last year, $26 to $28, this year $26 to $30.

On that basis 19 counties were raised on yearlings and 4 lowered from the county boards figures, 7 counties raised and 12 lowered on 2-year-olds, and 38 counties raised and 8 lowered on grown horses.

Reports Monthly Statements.

ST. PAUL, Sept. 13.—Public Examiner Poppe has called for a statement from the entire banks of the condition of business Sept. 7, to conform to the national bank call. General Pope has adopted the practice of taking a monthly trial balance report from all the banks. Rather than call for the reports when there may be monthly bills outstanding, he has taken the 10th. As the banks balance daily, they have merely to write a copy of the footings.

Opening of the University.

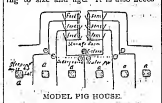
MINNEAPOLIS, Sept. 13.—The state university opened Tuesday. The authorities are jubilant over the attendance, while considerable enthusiasm is shown that the 3,000 mark will be passed.

LIVE STOCK

CONVENIENT PIG HOUSE.

The Plan Here Illustrated Can Be Adapted to Suit the Size and Condition of Any Herd.

Concerning a modern up-to-date hog house costing $200 or more, large enough to accommodate 40 or 50, would say that in building plans, like everything else, the best is always cheapest. The plan shown herewith needs but little explanation, as it can be constructed according to the means at the builder's command and it can be made to suit the size of one's herd. You could easily construct a four-room feeding house on this plan out of good dressed lumber for less than $200, especially if you are able to do your own carpenter work. As many as 40 or 50 hogs are to be kept they always do better if kept in different pens according to size and age. It is also necessary that different aged animals be fed a different ration for best and most satisfactory results, and this can only be done when we have our hogs properly graded and separated. One thing we would have in making a hog house, and that is a concrete floor. Any other floor is objectionable in some way. All kinds of wooden floors make bad rat harbors unless they are built up high off the ground, and in most cases they soon begin to decay and make pens unhealthy. By letting the concrete extend out to the walls all round no rats can do any damage and you can scrape or wash out your house as clean as a pig at any time. The cost of a concrete floor may be a little more than wood to start with, but it is cheapest in the end.



MODEL PIG HOUSE.

Let the sleeping rooms be made like a less-to, roof sloping just one way and facing the south if possible. In these we would have no floor. They can be moved about the yard from time to time and thus keep a nice, pure place for pigs to sleep, every time it is moved using clean bedding, or rather moving every time clean bedding is used. Water is best supplied out in the lots instead of in the feed room, as hogs will keep the feed room more or less filthy if water is supplied there, especially if they can get to it to wallow. A small cistern or well is located in storage room from which underground pipes may extend to the several lots. In making fences between lots do not make them more than three or four boards high, just so a man can straddle over them comfortably. This you will find very convenient in handling after your hogs. The outside fence may be higher if other stock have access to pens and are likely to jump. Two and a half feet is high enough for all inside fences.—Orange Judd Farmer.

Keep Young Hogs Growing.

There is an impression among farmers that hogs in summer at pasture can get enough with the swill from the house and what they can get in the fields. This was all right so long as skimmilk, one of the best foods for growth, was part of the swill, and often refuse from the table was also thrown in. But in many places the skimmed milk is now sold in some form, while a better use for table refuse is found in giving it to the poultry. So the pig is starved in summer, when all the time he ought to grow the fastest, and is the poorest preparation for the heavy corn feeding that will begin in September and continue until the pig is turned over to the butcher. A half-starved animal loses the power of digesting hearty food, for the stomach, like every other organ of the body, needs to have something to do to keep in good health and strength.—American Cultivator.

Food of the Brood Mare.

The mare with foal should have plenty of nutritious food, but it should not be the kind that promotes the accumulation of fat. The foal is developed through the feed to the dam, and for that development the chief thing is of feeding stuff that builds up its frame. Aside from that it is not well for the foal for the mare to have much fat, as there is with such condition often a certain tendency to a feverish state which would prevent the foal from receiving healthy support. Let the feed contain but little corn, consisting mostly of oats, bran and good roughage. Just before the time of foaling the feed should have a somewhat laxative effect, and as a rule there should have the constituents that promote milk production.—Texas Stock and Farm Journal.

Strange Freak of Nature.

Jacob Harmon, a farmer living four miles east of town and near Passaic Hill schoolhouse, in Benton county, has a mare which gave foal to twin colts, one of which is a well-developed and perfect male, while the other is a horse colt, a perfect image of its mother. The colts were foaled last week and are growing and doing nicely. The mule colt is three feet and the horse colt is three feet and three inches high. The mule is 3 years old and 14 hands high.—Windsor (Mo.) Republican.

The Case Clearly Stated.

The San Francisco Bulletin points out that the county which cannot afford schools and good roads is allowed to pass into the possession of men who want neither.

FOR THE POULTRY YARD.

Three Feeding Contrivances Whose Introduction is Recommended by Experts.

No doubt some of the feeders have experienced difficulty in raising chicks in the same yard with hens, which resulted in the chicks being crowded out at mealtimes and being picked by the hens. In the illustration No. 1 is shown a box into which the chicks can go at any time to feed, and the hens cannot get at them at all. The box is made of 16-foot board, 12 inches wide, the board being cut into four pieces, each piece four feet long, and nailed together. The box has no bottom, but the top is covered with lath, the sides having holes that admit the chicks and exclude the hens. By having the box bottomless it may be moved from place to place, thus avoiding filth.

A cheap coop for a hen and a brood of young chicks may be made of an ordinary large cheese box, as shown in No. 2. If the box is not deep enough, two of them may be fastened together. It is only intended for use during the first few days of the chicks, as the hen would not answer for the hen during any length of time, the room being too restricted. It serves well for summer use, as it is cool and can be cleaned or moved easily. Simply mark the box all around into strips about two inches wide and cut out each alternate strip. The object of the contrivance is to enable one to prepare a coop in a short time and almost at no cost. As the chicks will be removed after they are large enough to run about, the coop may then be used for the next young brood.

More properly No. 3 may be termed a cover for the feed dish, or it may be made larger for enclosing a few, the chicks to run in and out. Simply attach a handle to an old basket or a box or a kind and make openings or holes of a diameter just sufficient to permit young chicks to run in and out. The handle to the basket or box should first be removed.

The object is that, when feeding young chicks, their food may be so covered as to protect it from larger chicks or fowls, while the chicks can help themselves unmolested.—Poultry Keeper Illustrated.

INTRODUCING QUEENS.

Description of a Method Which Has Been Tried Successfully by a Skilled Beekeeper.

Some years ago I sent to a Massachusetts queen-breeder for six queens, and they were to be introduced according to his plans, and if any failed to become safely introduced the dead would be replaced by living queens. His instructions were to remove the old queen from the hives that were to receive the new stock, and have of the stock, at once lay the cage over the frames and close the hive for five days—a thing which I did and found only one queen that had been accepted. Two or three years later, as a writer in the American Bee Journal, I received an albino queen from an Iowa breeder, but this time I made the colony queenless that was to receive the queen 48 hours before introducing, and lost my queen. I could not understand why it was that these queens, coming from a distance, were rejected by my bees when I had no trouble in introducing my own stock among my own. May be some one can tell. I sent south last spring for 50 queens, and when they arrived all were laid on the shelf, and 48 two-frame nuclei were made, and all shut up tight with wire screen until 48 hours had passed; then the 48 queens were laid on top of the frames, as before, and every single one was accepted. All had started cells in abundance, but when the queens were set free all cells were destroyed. I did not wait five days, either, to see what was going on, but took a look at any of them at any time I chose. The remaining two were introduced in full colonies, but not confined, with equal safety. I think I would not be afraid of introducing any number when done as above. Though others may have plans that work equally well, I am not afraid of this plan in my hands.

INTENTIONAL DUPLICATE EXPOSURE

Polk County Journal,

BY N. S. GORDON.

Subscription $1.50 per year in advance

Entered at the postoffice at Crookston, Minnesota, as second-class matter.

Thirteen Towns: Editor Gordon, of the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL, has put a new Optimus press into his office at Crookston. It is probably the best printing press in Northern Minnesota and will materially aid him in getting out a first class weekly, which he is now doing.

JOHN BLANCHARD, for eight or nine years the editor-in-chief of the Minneapolis Times, died at his home in Minneapolis last Tuesday morning.

PRESIDENT HUNTINGTON has arranged a most delightful trip for the editors of the state, and we regret very much that we cannot avail ourselves of this opportunity to visit the Omaha Exposition, Denver, Pike's Peak, etc. The start will be made from St. Paul next Sunday night and the party will be away a week.

DEWEY is the hero of the hour and the reception he will receive when he lands again in the United States will be a veritable triumph. Nothing in our history can equal it. Thus does America pay tribute to the man of brains, courage, large and comprehensive views, and sterling character. The demo-pops, anti-imperialists, anti-expansionists or whatever title may be given to this heterogeneous mass, can have no part or lot in the Dewey demonstration for they are really condemning all that Dewey did.

THE Minnesota soldiers from Manila are encampedonce more on their native soil in the Presidio near San Francisco and in a few days, comparatively, they will again be in Minnesota where a rousing reception will accorded them. It is indeed, unfortunate that there was some trouble among the officers ament Colonel Ames. The home coming has been in this marred to a certain extent. The private soldiers, however, are standing by Col. Ames and he is likely to come home at the head of the regiment. All honor to the boys in blue and a thrice double welcome to them.

THE boys from Manila will soon be in Minnesota again and a right royal welcome, indeed, will they receive. But most of them will be without work and though a big celebration in their honor will undoubtedly be pleasing to them, still more pleasing will be a chance to earn their bread and butter, for from their small wages as privates it is not to be expected that they have saved much of anything. The scheme, therefore, of the Minneapolis Journal in establishing a bureau for furnishing situations to those soldiers who on their return will desire employment, is a most commendable one, and one that the boys themselves will greatly appreciate.

"I CANNOT believe that the good loyal people of this country are so anxious for a reduction in the pension list that they would insist upon its being done in a manner that would be unjust or unfair." The above is a quotation from the address of the commander of the National G. A. R. at Philadelphia and in this opinion the general is certainly correct. The ranks of the Civil war veterans are becoming thinner every year. These we will not long have with us and we cannot afford to treat them ungenerously. Where a man is deserving let him be pensioned, but where an unworthy man applies the G. A. R. men ought to be as anxious as the citizens at large to have such an one refused aid.

GOVERNOR LIND forgot, so says the Minneapolis Journal, to name delegates to the trust conferences at Chicago and St. Louis. The governor believes in eliminating the trusts in a partisan way. This being true Mr. Lind, in so far as this matter is concerned, is not showing statesmanlike qualities. Where possible, it is certainly better for important questions to be decided in a non-partisan manner than otherwise. The fact is that Lind is showing himself a political trickster. His aim is to remain in power.

FRANCE has committed a monstrous crime in the conviction of Dreyfus and retribution will follow. The world has been closely reading the evidence in the case and pulpit and press unite in characterizing as nothing short of infamy the verdict of the Rennes court martial. Dreyfus has been deliberately sacrificed to the alleged "honor" of the French army in the face of overwhelming evidence of his innocence and nothing against him save the perjured statements of such villains as Generals Mercier and Roget. It hardly seems possible that a civilized (?) nation could permit such an inhuman and unjust sentence to be pronounced against an innocent man, yet such is the case. France, however, is receiving her just reward in the contempt in which all nations of the earth are holding her. If she is not entirely lacking in feeling her head must hang in shame as she reads what the world is justly saying of her. It is possible, may even probable, that the Paris Exposition next year may be boycotted by private exhibitors in United States, Great Britain, Germany and elsewhere, if not by the governments, as a protest against the execrable treatment accorded Dreyfus.

Notes From Exchanges.

Halstad Reporter: Hendrum farmers are nearly all trying to clear up something of their crop, and but very few haven't enough for seed and feed.

Beltrami County News: Dr. J. H. Thomas, theorist, isolearing ground for the erection of a handsome cottage on the lake front, and will make his permanent home here.

Red Lake Falls Gazette: A. A. Gray went to Crookston Friday to retain Halvor Steenerson as his counsel in a damage suit against the Red Lake Falls Lumber Company, and the papers were served here Saturday. In the winter of '98 while in the employ of the company, Mr. Gray's left foot was crushed under a log and amputation of the fore part of the foot followed. He has now sued the company for $15,000 damages.

Winona Pioneer. The publisher of the Anoka Herald recented sued a delinquent subscriber and recovered judgment for seven years' subscription and costs that amounted to $20. The paper had been ordered stopped and returned from the postoffice as refused but the subscriber had not paid up the arrears and his name continued on the books, and the paper mailed regularly to his address. The decision of the court was, a subscriber could be held for subscription until arrearages were paid.

Roseau Times: From all parts of Roseau county comes the satisfactory statement of good crops. The yield will be better than expected earlier in the season and the settlers of Roseau county will now have a prosperous start for the future. The acreage is about double that of last year. The hay crop was good and was secured in good season. Vegetables will yield abundantly and our farmers are all well satisfied with their condition. Cattle promises to be a fair price and as but few have been sold this year, the sale of cattle this fall will, with good prices, bring a large amount of money into the county.

Alexandria Post-News: William Jennings Bryan is the first citizen the United States has ever had to spend all his life as a political agitator. As a rule our politicians, like our volunteer soldiers, have returned when out of office to private life, have become producers and useful citizens. But for years Bryan has not done a day's honest labor. He has made office seeking his business and the denunciation of the government under which he lives is his stock in trade. It is a new business but as he has grown rich at it others may adopt it. Thank Heaven they cannot be republicans.

Thirteen Towns: A noticeable feature of the grain crop this year is the unusual freedom of weed seed from the wheat. This factor will work considerable benefit to the grower by the lessening of dockage. Thus far, shipments to Duluth have received light dockage and satisfactory grading, as far as we can learn.

Farm Students Review: If you have not been provident enough to raise a lot of cabbage for winter greens for the flock, see what you can do about securing enough before the cold weather comes. Cabbages at the prices usually paid in the fall are good property for the poultry man to invest in and store in the cellar for winter use. Pack in dry sand on the cellar bottom, heads down.

McIntosh Tribune: While at Crookston the other day it was the writer's pleasure to meet Mr. Ray, proprietor of the Ray Mercantile Co's. wholesale establishment at that place. Mr. Ray is an old pioneer of Crookston and has built up a business which is a credit to the manager. His salesmen visit our town periodically and should be rewarded by a liberal patronage from our dealers.

Solway Press: We would suggest the Great Northern Railroad Company transfer its passengers on the prairie south of Crookston where this line divides from the St. Paul line. It would be much easier and safer than juggling them around the old thing resembling a cast-off wannigan they call a depot. People from hereabouts prefer going via Duluth than making the transfer with present accommodations at Crookston.

Red Lake County Courier: For the first time in many years there is an insufficiency of men in this locality to handle the fall crop. Many machines were to start shock threshing this week but were unable to procure help although $2.50 per day was offered. It has been the custom for many years for the floating population in the woods of the woods to go to Dakota for work during the threshing season, and quite a number have gone there this year. This with the men employed on the different drives and building operations in the city renders it impossible to shock threshing and consequently the majority of farmers will stack their grain.

Superior Evening Telegram: The fires in the Barclay mill were started today, the mill starting out on grind for the first time in about two years. The Commander Milling Company has been organized since the new owners took hold, with A. N. Hixon as president. C. E. Sawyer secretary and treasurer, and J. E. Newman vice-president. Mr. Newman, who is president of the Portland Milling Company, of Portland, Mich., has purchased a third interest. He has been in the milling business for forty years. Mr. Hixon was formerly in the grain business at Crookston and Mr. Sawyer was a banker there. Ample capital has been secured for conducting the business.

Cass Lake Times: September is at hand, and so are the ducks—fat and lusty, ready for the sacrifice. Up the Turtle river is Rice lake, only a few miles, and down Cass river a dozen miles, and around the shores of Leech, Winnibigoshish, are immense rice fields where the quackers built their nests last spring and reared their downy broods, now full-fledged and ready for oven or camp kettle. There are no other fields in the state where the duck hunter can realize so readily on his capital as here, and no place more easily reached. When the slaughter begins we expect to be independent of the meat trust, and the Times larder will be full again, not with fish (we've tired of them), but of great fat mallards and butter-balls, fit food for the gods!

Literary Notes.

THE SEPTEMBER ATLANTIC.

President Charles Kendall Adams opens the September Atlantic with a review of The Irresistible Tendencies, the spirit of the ages, the great movements of centuries or generations, which change the face of the world; unshaking chiefly the spirit of individualism, to which he attributes the wonderful advances in liberty and progress of the last four hundred years. He claims that the fundamental fact is that the whole of this vast movement is the advance of civilization upon barbarism. He maintains that it is the ever irresistible encroachment of the modern spirit upon the spirit of antiquity; electrically driving out the rush light; the white man ever civilizing the red man or pushing him out of the way. And this great movement is in the interests of a larger and a richer and a higher humanity.

SEPTEMBER LADIES' HOME JOURNAL.

The September issue of the Ladies' Home Journal is an unusually attractive number. On the first page is given a series of pictures of "The Wayside Inn of Sudbury Town," made famous by Longfellow. Barton Cheyney contributes an instructive article on "The Young Man and the Professions," telling young men how to take up the study of law, medicine, architecture, etc. Charles T. Brodhead has an illustrated article on "The East-side Girl of New York," and Patti Lyle Collins tells "Why Six Million Letters Go Astray Every Year." Nelje Blanchan contributes her seventh paper on "Nature's Garners," telling of the wild flowers that bloom in September. An interesting page of pictures is presented showing "The Social Side of the Trolley," and there is also a double page of pictures of "The Prettiest Country Homes in America." Julia Marlowe writes of "Dramatic Performances by Amateurs." "Bringing in the Sheaves," by John Northern Hilliard, is a timely account of harvesting in the west. "The Confessions of a Worrier" is the unique title of a paper by Mary Boardman Page. The article suggests different ways in which the worrying habit may be overcome. The Rev. Newell Dwight Hillis, D. D., contributes the fourth article in his series on "The Secrets of a Happy Life," his subject being "Sons of Greatness and Coodness."

THE FORUM.

The Forum for September is a number of world-wide interest. Mr. William T. Stead, editor "Review of Reviews," gives his views of "The Conference at The Hague." President Robert E. Jones of Hobart College discusses "Washington's Farewell Address and Its Applications:" Mr. Ramon Reyes Lala, a native Filipino, writes entertainingly of "The people of the Philippines:" Prof Rudolf Eucken of Jena tells of the "Progress of Philosphy in the Nineteenth Century:" Charles Denby, Jr., contributes an article on "Cotton-Spinning at Shanghai:" Sir William H. Rattigan, an eminent jurist of India, portrays "Indian Famines:" and A Cuban furnishes a review of "The Younger Russian Writers."

NEW YORK UNDER TAMMANY RULE.

"New York under Tammany Rule" is the title of an informing article which Seth Low, counsel for the Mazet Investigating Committee, has written for The Saturday Evening Post, of Philadelphia. After summarizing the notorious methods of Tammany rule, where the leaders enrich themselves at the expense of the taxpayer, and run the city of New York as "wide-open" as any modern mining town, Mr. Ross accounts for the helplessness of the law-abiding majority and suggests a means for the overthrow of the Croker regime.

This article is one of a series dealing with the municipal affairs of great American cities. It will appear in The Saturday Evening Post of Sept. 9.

REVIEW OF REVIEWS.

The American Monthly Review of Reviews for September contains a remarkably attractive group of contributed articles. The timeliness of the subjects treated is seen by a glance at the table of contents. The war in the Philippines is summed up by John Barrett: the outcome of The Hague conference is set forth by W. T. Stead; the subjects of trusts is discussed by George E. Roberts and by Henry Macfarland; Hezekiah Butterworth writes of "The Future Trade of the New England Farm" while Prof. L. H. Bailey answers affirmatively the question, "Does Farming Pay?" Sylvester Baxter tells of the progress made by the State of Massachusetts in her public library system, and Gilbert K. Brownson describes the work of the Cuban Educational Association of the United States; a sketch of "The New Secretary of War" is contributed by Henry Macfarland, while Dr. William Hayes Ward writes of Colonel Ingersoll and Erica Glenton of the late Grand Duke George of Russia.

NEW LIPPINCOTT'S.

The September number of the "New Lippincott" is over-flowing with interest of every attractive sort. There is abundant and varied fiction, beginning with the complete novel by Maurice Hewlett, and including papers by Ruth McEnery Stuart, Mrs. Schuyler Crowninshield, E. F. Benson, Maurice Thompson, and Albert Bigelow Paine; there is matter for yachtsmen and for the veterans of the G. A. R.; there is literature, social life, picturesque history, and national interests. Everybody is served with his favorite dish and such will like the choice of all the rest.

NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW.

The North American Review for September is in close touch with the leading interests of the day, and in the quality of its contents it more than fulfils the promises made by the new editor when he undertook the management of the Review—which, indeed, have been most generously redeemed by every issue that has come from his hands. The number opens with the late Colonel Ingersoll's famous reply to the Rev. Dr. Henry M. Field, which was published originally in the Review in November, 1887, and which is republished now in consideration of the keen and widespread interest awakened by Colonel Ingersoll's death in his views on religion and dogma. This paper contains what is in all probability the fullest, strongest and most eloquent statement of his position which the brilliant agnostic ever penned. The nature and extent of "Ingersoll's influence" is discussed by Dr. Henry M. Field, Colonel Ingersoll's old friend and antagonist, who goes with some minuteness into an examination of the reasons for believing that the influence of Ingersoll will not survive him long. Archibald Little, an English merchant resident in China, who is known throughout the world as an authority on questions connected with the Far East, contributes a rejoinder to Vladimir Holmstrom's recent plea for a Russo-American understanding, in which he insists that there is little in common between Russia and the United States, and that America would be dealing destructively with her commercial future in China if she joined hands with Russia there.

Elsewhere.

Alexandria has a handsome new postoffice building.

Bemidji public schools have an enrollment of 314 pupils, necessitating the hiring of six teachers.

The small town of Northwood, Grand Forks county, N. D., was destroyed by fire last Tuesday afternoon.

During the great storm in Porto Rico last month the wind at times reached a velocity of 140 miles an hour.

Thos. Tobaas representing himself as a carpenter from Crookston blew out the gas at the Ingles House in Grand Forks last Saturday and narrowly escaped death in consequence.

In Havana the average annual number of deaths from yellow fever in the six years from 1890 to 1895 both included, was 415, 1,539 in 1896 and 1,606 in 1897, while in 1899, upto August 1st only seven persons died of this fever. This shows what United States rule is doing for Cuba in the way of sanitation.

Last week two sales of fifty foot lots were made at Bemidji, the consideration being about $2,500 for the paked lot in each case. One lot having a $1,500 building on it sold for $4,000, and the other with a $1,000 building, sold for $3,500. The lots were bought a couple of years ago for a small amount.

The results of a series of experiments made by German dairy experts show that milk that has been heated for fifteen minutes at seventy-five degrees C. scarcely loses any of its capacity of being converted into cheese. An addition of calcium chloride shortens the time required by the rennet to coagulate the milk, the action of the salt being in proportion to the amount added.

The Minnesota department of the G. A. R. at Philadelphia, recently, was represented in the parade by 200 men, all of whom wore in their caps bunches of "No. 1 hard" wheat, and the state badge of yellow ribbon on the left shoulder. The badge was unique and very attractive, showing the crossed rifle, the famous Minnesota wheat and two gophers in military uniform on each end. A large American flag carried by eighteen past department commanders was a noticeable feature.

Saturday was pay day at Grand Forks for the paving men and the contractor, P. McDonnell, contributed nearly $10,000 in good hard cash, most of which will remain right in the city, going, as it does, to residents who live there and buy their goods there. There is no question that paving costs money, but a large portion of the money spent for it is spent right in the city where the work is done. This will be the case when Crookston gets to paving. Many people will be benefited.

—The Heart of Chicago, one of this season's big money winners, will be seen on Monday night at the Grand. It is a melodrama of the sensational order and is being given a great scenic production. One of the scenes, the much talked of approaching train, has been given much space in the newspapers of the east, and is said to be little short of perfection. It is absolutely unlike any railroad effect ever put upon the stage. In this scene the train is in full view for ten minutes, first as a mere speck in the distance, and finally when it arrives at the footlights full-sized and perfect, even down to the most minute detail. It is a real engine as far as a stage engine can be, and is manned by a crew of live men.

—R. Nichols, of Fertile, spent Monday in Crookston.

AN IMPORTANT FOOD LAW.

Heavy Penalties for Selling Articles of Food Containing Unhealthy Ingredients.

The following law was passed at the last session of the Missouri Legislature, taking effect August 20, 1899:

SECTION 1. That it shall be unlawful for any person or corporation doing business in this state to manufacture, sell or offer any article, compound or preparation for the purpose of being used or which is intended to be used in the preparation of food, in which article, compound or preparation there is any arsenic, calomel, bismuth, ammonia or alum.

SECTION 2. Any person or corporation violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall, upon conviction, be fined not less than one hundred dollars, which shall be paid into and become a part of the road fund of the county in which such fine is collected.

The operation of this law will be mainly against alum baking powders. But the manufacture or sale of any article of food or article intended to be used in food which contains any of the substances classed by the law as unhealthful—from Arsenic to Alum—is absolutely prohibited.

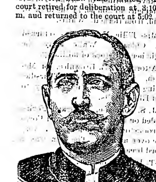
LONG TRIAL ENDED

CAPTAIN DREYFUS FOUND GUILTY OF TREASON

And Sentenced to Ten Years Imprisonment—France Is Quiet, but the Rest of the World Condemns the Verdict in Unmeasured Terms — Exposition Likely to Be Boycotted.

RENNES, Sept. 11.—The final session of the second trial by courtmartial of Captain Alfred Dreyfus on the charge of treason has been held, and before it had terminated nearly the whole civilized world knew the verdict. The court retired for deliberation at 3:10 p. m. and returned to the court at 5:02.



CAPTAIN DREYFUS.

The decision of the court was as follows:

"The court declares on the question, by a majority of 5 votes to 2, 'Yes.' The accused is guilty. The majority agreed that there are extenuating circumstances, in consequence of which, and on the request of the commissary of the governor the president put the question and received the votes in the above mentioned form. As a result the court condemns, by a majority of 5 vote ... Dreyfus to the punishment of ten years detention."

MAY BE PARDONED.

Stated That Captain Dreyfus Will Probably Be Given Freedom.

LONDON, Sept. 13.—The Paris correspondent of The Daily Chronicle claims to have good authority for the statement that Dreyfus will be pardoned, although President Loubet will not exercise his prerogative until after the meeting of the council de revision. He adds that Captain de Beauvais and Major Breu were the only two members of the courtmartial who voted for acquittal, and Captain Parfait, who insisted upon the proviso regarding extenuating circumstances.

WOULD PARDON DREYFUS.

The Temps Urges the Government to Take Such Action.

PARIS, Sept. 13.—Under the head of "Pacification," The Temps urges the government to take advantage of the present conditions and pardon Dreyfus, which, it adds, would put the finishing touch to the Rennes verdict and would permit France to occupy herself with the affairs of the country and the exposition.

CHICAGOANS INDIGNANT.

Organized Party of Seven Hundred Abandon Their Trip to Paris.

CHICAGO, Sept. 13.—Indignation over the outcome of the Dreyfus trial has caused a party of over 700 Chicagoans who were going to the fair in a body to abandon their trip. Louis Halle, who is the treasurer of the party and who since the scheme was inaugurated a year ago has been receiving weekly remittances from those who proposed going, has issued notices to the members to call at his office and get their money.

OFFICERS APOLOGIZED.

Trouble in the South Dakota Regiment Settled.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 13.—The trouble in the First South Dakota regiment has been settled. Colonel Frost has withdrawn his charges against Lieutenant Colonel Stover, Lieutenant Bates and Major R. C. Warne, and the order of arrest against them was removed by General Shafter. Colonel Frost received letters of apology from all three of the accused officers, which they wrote in response to appeals made by the citizen's reception committee from South Dakota now in this city. Governor Lee, who has just arrived here, has approved the action taken.

REGIMENT ON PARADE.

Governor Lind Reviews the Thirteenth Minnesota.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 13.—The camp of the Thirteenth Minnesota regiment was the center of attraction at the Presidio both in the morning and in the evening. The men received $10 each in the morning from Adjutant General Lambert of Minnesota for their services at Camp Ramsey and were as happy as school boys. In the afternoon Governor Lind and his staff reviewed the regiment on the Presidio parade ground in the presence of many thousand spectators.

MAY COME AFTER ALL.

President Hopes to Visit Minnesota and South Dakota.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 13.—Although the president had thought that it would be quite impossible for him to extend his Western trip beyond Chicago he is now seriously considering the matter and while there is some clashing of dates it is hoped that he will be able to visit St. Paul and Minneapolis and possibly Aberdeen, S. D., to welcome the returning volunteers.

ENCAMPMENT ENDS.

Grand Army Officers Elected and Other Business Transacted.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 8.—The 33d national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic came to an end during the evening. The election of a commander-in-chief, who, it was supposed would be selected after a warm contest, was conducted and carried out in the most peaceable manner imaginable. Colonel Albert D. Shaw of Watertown, N. Y., was unanimously elected to the highest office of the organization after Judge L. E. Rassieur of St. Louis had declined to be a candidate. Early in the campaign there were three candidates. W. C. Johnston of Cincinnati, who was acting commander-in-chief, was first mentioned and the names of Colonel Shaw and Judge Rassieur later became prominent. Johnston's boom was ended by his election to the office for the unexpired term, lasting two days. This made him ineligible for the office again, and on the

he became past commander-in-chief. Aside from the selection of a commander-in-chief the pension question received the major portion of attention. Resolutions were adopted that Rule 225, passed by congress in 1890 and now in practice, was a hardship, in that it required proof of identity and injuries which many old soldiers could not furnish, and asking that the president re-establish Rule 164, later passed by congress, which is not so stringent in its requirements. The resolutions also deplored the practice in the pension bureau which bars widows who have an income of $96 a year and ask that the limitation be increased to $250 a year.

Pursuant to the resolutions a committee was appointed to seek relief from the administrative officers, and, failing this, to ask congress to amend the law in favor of the veterans.

SONS OF VETERANS.

Asa W. Jones of Youngstown, O., Elected Commander-in-Chief.

DETROIT, Sept. 11.—The Sons of Veterans suspended their constitution and made three men constitutional life members of the order because of distinguished service rendered to the order.

The following officers were elected: Commander-in-chief, Asa W. Jones, Youngstown, O.; senior vice commander, A. L. Solter, Des Moines, Ia.; junior vice commander, W. S. Raines, Battle Creek, Mich.; council in chief, George B. Abbott, Chicago; George Addington, Albany, and Rev. W. G. Patton, Marinette, Wis.

ELECTED CONSERVATIVES.

Important Action at a Recent Session of the Filipino Congress.

MANILA, Sept. 11.—8:50 p. m.—A Filipino who has arrived here from Tarlac says an extraordinary session of the revolutionary congress took place at Tarlac Aug. 24. Aguinaldo presided and chose Mabini as president of the supreme court and Gonzaga as attorney general. They both represent the most conservative and temperate element.

Mabini, who recently resigned the foreign secretaryship, is the ablest man connected with the revolution. Gonzaga was president of the last peace commission.

The proceedings of the congress disproved the report that Aguinaldo had declared himself dictator. A decree has been issued by the Filipinos compelling the registration of all foreigners in Filipino territory. The Chinese, who are a large faction of the population are considered foreigners, including those born in the Philippine islands. Applications must be made on stamped paper, which figures largely in all the business of the insurrectionary government. This seems to be largely a scheme to tax Chinamen.

NOT EVEN SUGGESTED.

Secretary Hay Denies Stories of an Alleged Secret Alliance.

COLUMBUS, O., Sept. 13.—In a letter to Chairman Dick of the Republican state executive committee, Hon. John Hay, secretary of state, makes this emphatic statement regarding the alleged secret alliance between the United States and England:

"There is no alliance with England nor with any other power under heaven except those published to the world—treaties for commercial or business purposes. No treaty other than these exist; none is suggested on either side; none is in contemplation. It has never entered the mind of the president or of any member of the government to forsake under any circumstance the wise precept of the forefathers who forbade entangling alliances with European powers."

HANNA'S HEALTH POOR.

Friends Fear He Cannot Continue the Work Mapped Out.

CLEVELAND, O., Sept. 13.—It is feared by Cleveland friends of Senator Hanna that the condition of his health may prevent him from continuing the hard work which he has mapped out for himself. Letters from members of his family to friends and relatives give the impression that his health has not been at all improved by his sojourn in France, in fact the opinion is expressed that he would have been better if he had remained home in quiet. Senator Hanna is expected home soon, he is now on the Atlantic.

Permission for the Demonstration.

LONDON, Sept. 13.—The home office has granted permission for the proposed demonstration in Hyde park, London, next Sunday to express sympathy with Dreyfus and to appeal to France to do him justice. Twenty-one platforms will be erected.

Robbed an Express Train.

COCHISE, A. T., Sept. 11.—Express train No. 10 on the Southern Pacific was robbed here by four masked men, who blew the safe open and took everything in sight. The amount of their booty is said to be small.

IS AN ULTIMATUM

CHAMBERLAIN'S LATEST NOTE SO CONSIDERED.

Causes Much Excitement When Read in the Transvaal Parliament, but Its Consideration Was Not Concluded—Immediate Acceptance of Its Terms Demanded or Action Is Threatened.

LONDON, Sept. 13.—A special dispatch from Pretoria says the British note, which was read in both raads, is regarded there as a virtual ultimatum. The correspondent says:

"It proposes a five years franchise, enlarged representation for the gold fields in the volksraad, equality for the English and Dutch in the volksraad and equality for the old and new burghers in presidential elections. It proposes that a conference between the representatives of the two powers shall follow for the purpose of drafting details and avoid the introduction of unnecessary laws by the Transvaal government on the passage of any new bills, calculated to defeat the reform.

"The note goes on to say that the present state of affairs in South Africa cannot be prolonged and that the definite acceptance of these proposals is demanded without delay. Otherwise her majesty's government will take the entire situation under reconsideration and will act so as to bring about a settlement. The situation is acute."

TRANSVAAL MAY ACCEPT.

Unofficial Dispatches From Pretoria So Predict.

CAPE TOWN, Sept. 13.—Various unofficial dispatches have been received from Pretoria predicting the Transvaal's acceptance of the terms of the latest dispatch which was read in the volksraad during the afternoon and is understood to furnish a basis for negotiations which will possibly lead to a peaceful settlement.

BLOEMFONTEIN, Orange Free State, Sept. 14.—The Daily Friend says it has excellent authority for predicting that the government of the South African Republic will accept the suggested conference at Cape Town.

The delegates will probably be Commandant General Joubert, vice president of the Transvaal; J. A. M. Wolmar and one of the two non-official members of the Transvaal executive council and Mr. Fischer, who has figured prominently in some of the recent negotiations as the special representative of the Orange Free State.

CAUSED MUCH EXCITEMENT.

Latest Note From Chamberlain Read to the Volksraad.

PRETORIA, Sept. 13.—The reading in the volksraad of the reply of the British secretary of state for the colonies, Joseph Chamberlain, to the latest Transvaal note was greeted with silence except for some interruptions from Mr. Tosen and other ultra conservative members. Its terms, however, have produced considerable excitement here. There is no indication as yet of the views held regarding it in official circles.

The volksraad has urged the government to dismiss Mr. Jefey, secretary of education, for writing a letter to the newspapers accusing the ministers of the United church of jingoism because they wanted more English education in the state schools.

CONSIDERED MODERATE.

London Opinion of Mr. Chamberlain's Latest Note.

LONDON, Sept. 13.—Owing to the understanding that Mr. Chamberlain's note is to be published simultaneously in London and Pretoria only an inadequate summary has yet been telegraphed. The London papers are inclined to withhold comment until the text is available.

Despite the fact that the note is described as an ultimatum, the balance of opinion tends to regard it as a rather moderate document, since apparently it does not fix a definite time limit, leaves the real crux of the dispute for the proposed conference and does not raise the question of suzerainty. In a word the note seems to leave the way open to further negotiations.

THIRTY THOUSAND IN LINE.

Land Parade in Dewey's Honor Will Be a Big Affair.

NEW YORK, Sept. 12.—General Roe, who has charge of the land parade of the Dewey celebration ceremonies said that at least 30,000 uniformed men will take part in the parade.

General Roe has received word from Colonel James E. Barnett, that the Tenth Pennsylvania regiment, which has just returned from the Philippines, will take part in the parade. The division of the G. A. R. will include 20 representatives from each of the 58 G. A. R. posts in this city. General O. O. Howard is expected to command the veterans and General Roger A. Pryor will be in command of the division of Confederate Veterans of Greater New York. Major R. P. Davidson of the Northwestern Military academy, Chicago, has written to say that he will join the parade with his motor gun battery.

GREETS SOUTH DAKOTANS.

Governor Lee Late in Reaching San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 13.—Governor Lee of South Dakota arrived here Tuesday to welcome the South Dakota volunteers who returned on the transport Sheridan. It was Governor Lee's intention to get here in time to receive the men as they disembarked from the transport but owing to conflicting reports of the date of her arrival he did not reach here in time and was denied the pleasure of welcoming them as he had anticipated.

A DELSARTE THEORY.

Falling Without Getting Hurt Is an Easy Trick If You Only Know How.

"People wonder how an actress can fall on the stage without hurting herself," says a woman who, according to the New York Times, has tried all sorts of fads as they have come up, "but it is the easiest thing in the world. I tried the Delsarte exercises at one time, and for awhile, when my attack of the disease was at its height, my family had the pleasure of seeing me fall for their amusement and enlightenment all around the house. The great secret of falling is to relax. If you slip and fall some time when you do not wish to, if you can only remember to relax your muscles you will be saved perhaps from a serious injury. Children and drunken people fall relaxed. My mind at that time was filled with my desire to be always relaxed, whenever the Delsarte oracles said I must. So it happened that one day I slipped on the street and had a heavy fall. I pulled myself up in a sitting position a little dazed—I was not sure whether I had put my principles into practice or not. I was brought to myself by a man who came up asking me in a considerate tone:

"Are you seriously hurt, madam?"

"No; oh, no! thank you,' I said, still dazed. 'I'm not hurt.' And then I realized that I had been thinking so much of my principles that instead of getting up immediately I had been sitting there saying to myself, in a brown study: 'Did I relax or didn't I relax?' I am pretty sure that I didn't, for I found later a goodly number of big black and blue spots, which never should develop on a true disciple of Delsarte."

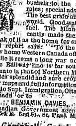
FREE HOMESTEADS



In Western Canada.
Renters, farmers' sons and farmers burdened with taxes, mortgages, impoverished soil and crop failures may secure free homesteads of 160 acres in the Canadian West, the land of No. 1 Hard Wheat, 25 to 35 bushels to the acre. Lowest railroad rates; special advantages to prospectors. The best grain and cattle country in the world. Good water, low taxes, abundant fuel. The Minnesota editors, who recently made the Western Canada trip, speak of it as the home for small farmers. The official report says: "To the small farmer seeking a new home Western Canada offers great inducements. While it seems a long way north the Canadian Pacific Railway line is far south of Edinburgh, the climate is that of Northern Minnesota, and the land raises splendid and sure crops."

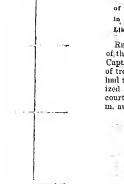
LONG TRIAL ENDED

CAPTAIN DREYFUS FOUND GUILTY OF TREASON

And Sentenced to Ten Years Imprisonment—France Is Quiet, but the Rest of the World Condemns the Verdict in Unmeasured Terms — Exposition Likely to Be Boycotted.

RENNES, Sept. 11.—The final session of the second trial by court-martial of Captain Alfred Dreyfus on the charge of treason has been held, and Dreyfus' fate terminated widely the whole civilized world knows the verdict. The court retired for deliberation at 3:10 p. m. and returned to the court at 5:02



CAPTAIN DREYFUS.

The decision of the court was as follows:

"The court declares on the question, by a majority of 5 votes to 2, Yes." The accused is guilty. The majority agreed that there are extenuating circumstances, in consequence of which, and on the request of the commissary of the government the president put the question and received the votes in the above mentioned form. As a result the court condemns, by a majority of 5 vote to 2, Dreyfus to the minishment of ten years detention."

MAY BE PARDONED.

Stated That Captain Dreyfus Will Probably Be Given Liberty Presently.

LONDON, Sept. 13.—The Paris correspondent of The Daily Chronicle claims to have good authority for the statement that Dreyfus will be pardoned, although President Loubet will not exercise his prerogative until after the meeting of the council de revision. He adds that Captain de Beauvais and Major Bres were the only two members of the courtmartial who voted for acquittal, and Captain Parfait, who insisted upon the proviso regarding extenuating circumstances.

WOULD PARDON DREYFUS.

The Temps Urges the Government to Take Such Action.

PARIS, Sept. 13.—Under the head of "Pacification," The Temps urges the government to take advantage of the present conditions and pardon Dreyfus, which, it adds, would put the finishing touch to the Rennes verdict and would permit France to occupy herself with the affairs of the country and the exposition.

CHICAGOANS INDIGNANT.

Organized Party of Seven Hundred Abandon Their Trip to Paris.

CHICAGO, Sept. 13.—Indignation over the outcome of the Dreyfus trial has caused a party of over 700 Chicagoans who were going to the fair in a body to abandon their trip. Louis Halle, Gano is the treasurer of the party, and ever since the scheme was inaugurated a year ago has been receiving weekly remittances from those who proposed going, has issued notices to the members to call at his office and get their money.

OFFICERS APOLOGIZED.

Trouble in the South Dakota Regimental Settled.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 13.—The trouble in the First South Dakota regiment has been settled. Colonel Frost has withdrawn his charges against Lieutenant Colonel Seaver, Lieutenant Bates and Major B. C. Warne, and the order of arrest against them was removed by General Shafter. Colonel Frost received letters of apology from all three of the accused officers, whereupon orders in response to appeals made by the soldiers' reception committee from South Dakota, in this city, Governor Lee and his staff will be present and approved the action taken.

REGIMENT ON PARADE,

Governor Lind Reviews the Thirteenth Minnesota.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 13.—The camp of the Thirteenth Minnesota regiment was the center of attraction at the Presidio both in the morning and the evening. The men received $10 each in the morning from Captain General Lambert in Minnesota, their arrears at Camp Eagger were also to pay as agreed upon by the division quartermaster. In the afternoon the regiment on the Presidio parade ground in the presence of many prominent citizens.

MAY COME AFTER MILES.

President Likely to Make Him Head Army Again.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 13.—Although the president had thought that it would be quite impossible for him to extend his Western trip beyond Chicago he is now seriously considering the willow bill, which, if it goes through, will enable him to visit Minneapolis and possibly Aberdeen. S. D., to welcome the returning volunteers.

ENCAMPMENT ENDS.

Grand Army Officers Elected and Other Business Transacted.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 13.—The 33d national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic came to an end during the evening. The election of a commander-in-chief, who, it was supposed would be settled after a long contest, was conducted and carried out in the most peaceable manner imaginable. Colonel Albert D. Shaw of Watertown, N. Y., was unanimously elected to the highest office in the organization, after Judge L. B. Rassieur of St. Louis had declined, to be a candidate. Early in the morning there were three candidates. W. C. Johnston of Cincinnati, who was acting commander-in-chief, was first nominated and the names of Colonel Shaw and Judge Rassieur later became prominent. Johnston's name was added by his election to the office for the unexpired term, lasting two days. This made him ineligible for the office again, and on the

Election of Colonel Shaw

he became past commander-in-chief. Aside from the selection of a commander-in-chief the pension question received the major portion of attention. Resolutions were adopted that Rule 240, passed by congress in 1890 and now in practice, was a hardship in that it required proof of identity and injuries which many old soldiers could not furnish, and asking that the president reestablish Rule 164, later passed by congress, which is not so stringent in its requirements. The resolutions also lamented the practice in the pension bureau which bars widows who have an income of $25 a year and ask that the limitation be increased to $250 a year.

Pursuant to the resolutions a committee was appointed to seek relief from the administrative officers, and failing this, to ask congress to amend the law in favor of the veterans.

SONS OF VETERANS.

Ass'n Jumps Into Politics, Elects Democratic Chief.

DETROIT, Sept. 11.—The Sons of Veterans suspended their constitution and made them more consistent like members of the order because of distinguished service rendered to the order.

The following officers were elected: Commander-in-chief, Ass W. Scott, Youngstown, O.—senior vice commander, Al L. Soiter, Des Moines, Ia.—junior vice commander, W. S. Randall, Battle Creek, Mich.—council in chief, George B. Abbott, Chicago; George Addington, Albany, and Rev. W. G. Pattison, Marinette, Wis.

ELECTED CONSERVATIVES.

Important Action at a Recent Session of Cortes—Filipinos Conquered.

MANILA, Sept. 11.—8:30 p. m.—A Filipino who has arrived here from Tarlac says an extraordinary session of the revolutionary congress took place at Tarlac Aug. 24. Aguinaldo presided and Gracio Mariola, ex-president of the supreme court and Gonzaga, ex-attorney general. They both represent the most conservative and tenacious element.

Malolos, who recently resigned the foreign secretaryship, is the oldest man connected with the revolution. Gonzaga was president of the last peace commission.

The proceedings of the congress disproved the report that Aguinaldo had declared himself dictator. A decree has been issued by the Filipinos considering the registration of all foreigners in Filipino territory. The Chinese, who are a large faction of the population are considered foreigners, including those born in the Philippine islands. Applications must be made on stamped paper, which figures largely in all the business of the insurrectionary government. The scheme is largely a scheme over Chinamen.

NOT EVEN SUGGESTED.

Secretary Hay Denies Stories of an "Alliance" Between Britain and America.

COLUMBUS, O., Sept. 13.—In a letter to Chairman Dick of the Republican state executive committee, Hon. John Hay, secretary of state, makes this emphatic statement regarding the alleged secret alliance between the United States and England:

"There is no alliance with England nor will any be entered into under heaven except those published to the world—treaties for commercial or humane purposes. No treaty other than these exist; none is suggested on either side; none is in contemplation. It has never entered the mind of the president or of any member of the government to forsake our time honored policy which we have proved to be the wise one for the stable existence of the United States. Entangling alliances with European powers."

GRAND HEALTH BOOM.

Friends Fear He Cannot Confine the Work Stamped Out.

CLEVELAND, O., Sept. 13.—It is feared by Cleveland friends of Governor Hoyt that the condition of his health may prevent him from completing the hard work which he has mapped out for himself. Letters from members of his family to friends and relatives give the impression that his health has not built at all improved by his sojourn in Canada. He is at Port Stanley, Ont., and it is reported that he would have been better if he had remained home in quiet. Senator Hanna is expected home soon, and he is now on the Atlantic.

Parliament to Be Dissolved.

LONDON, Sept. 13.—The queen office this granted dissolution for the prorogation in Hyde park. London Real Estate Express sympathy with Dreyfus and for appeal to France to be pardoned. Twenty-one pistol shots will be greeted.

FLIGHT OF TWO.

Cashier and Teller Rob Bank and Escape.

COCHISE, A. T., Sept. 11.—Express train No. 16 on the Southern Pacific was robbed here by four masked men, who boarded the train and compelled the engineer to run to Contention, where the booty is said to be small.

IS AN ULTIMATUM

CHAMBERLAIN'S LATEST NOTE SO REGARDED BY BOERS.

CRITICISM

Causes Much Excitement When Read in the Transvaal Parliament, but the Government Says Not Considered Unfriendly—Boer Delegates Start for Cape Town.

PRETORIA, Sept. 12.—Special dispatches from Bloemfontein, Cape Colony, and Cape Town, which have been received here, state that Chamberlain's latest dispatch to the Transvaal is considered an ultimatum. The correspondents say:

"It proposes within five years a franchise, enlarged representation for the gold fields in the reformed council, equality for the English and Dutch in the volksraad and equality for the old and new burghers in presidential elections. It proposes that a conference between the representatives of the two powers shall follow for the purpose of drafting details and adopting the assignment of necessary laws by the Transvaal government for the passage of any new bills calculated to defeat the reform."

"The note goes on to say that the present state of affairs in South Africa cannot be prolonged and that the immediate acceptance of these proposals is demanded without delay. Otherwise her majesty's government will take the enfranchisement under reconsideration and will act so as to bring about a settlement. The situation is acute."

TRANSVAAL MAY ACCEPT.

Unofficial Dispatches From Pretoria Say President Is Willing.

CAPE TOWN, Sept. 12.—Various unofficial dispatches have been received from Pretoria predicting the Transvaal's acceptance of the terms of the latest dispatch which was read in the volksraad during the afternoon and is understood to contain the basis for negotiations which will possibly lead to a peaceful settlement.

BLOEMFONTEIN, Orange Free State, Sept. 14.—The Daily Friend says it has excellent authority for predicting that the government of the South African Republic will accept the suggested conference at Cape Town.

The delegates will probably be Commandant General Joubert, vice president of the Transvaal, J. A. Smith, mayor and one of the two non-official members of the Transvaal executive council and Mr. Fischer, who was prominent prominently in some of the recent negotiations as the special representative of the Orange Free State.

CAUSED MUCH EXCITEMENT

Latest Note From Chamberlain Read to the Volksraad.

PRETORIA, Sept. 12.—The reading in the volksraad of the reply of the British secretary of state for the colonies, Joseph Chamberlain, to the latest Transvaal note was greeted with silence except for some interruptions from Mr. Tosen and other ultra Conservative members. Its terms, however, have produced considerable excitement here. There is no indication as yet of the views held regarding it in official circles.

The volksraad has urged the government to dismiss Mr. Jefry, secretary of education, for writing a letter to the newspapers accusing the missionaries of the United church of Zingoness because they wanted more English education in the state schools.

CONSIDERED MODERATE.

London Opin-on of Mr. Chamberlain's Latest Note.

LONDON, Sept. 13.—Owing to the understanding that Mr. Chamberlain's note is to be published simultaneously in London and Pretoria only an inadequate summary has yet been telegraphed. The London papers are inclined to withhold comment until the text is available.

Despite the fact that the note is described as an ultimatum the indications of opinion tends to regard it as a rather moderate document, since apparently it does not fix a definite time limit, leaves the real crux of the dispute for the proposed conference and does not raise the question of suzerainty. In a word the note seems to leave the way open to further negotiations.

THIRTY THOUSAND IN LINE.

Land Parade in Denver's Honor Will Be a Big Affair.

NEW YORK, Sept. 12.—General Roe, who has charge of the land parade of the Dewey celebration, accentuates the fact that at least 30,000 uniformed men will take part in the parade.

General Roe has received word from Colonel James E. Barrett, that the Tenth Pennsylvania regiment, which has just returned from the Philippines, will take part in the parade. The battalion of the U. S. R. will include 20 representatives from each of the 56 U. S. R. posts in this city. General Oliver O. Howard is expected to command the Veterans and General Roger A. Pryor will be in command of the division of Confederate Veterans of this city. New York, Major Ralph Beaumont of the Northwestern Military academy, Lake geneva, has written that he will be on hand to join the parade with his entire battalion.

GREETS SOUTH DAKOTANS.

Governor Lee Lies in Harbor at San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 13.—Governor Lee of South Dakota arrived here Tuesday to welcome the South Dakota volunteers who returned on the transport Sheridan. It was Governor Lee's intention to get here in time to receive the men as they disembarked from the transport but owing to conflicting reports of the date of her arrival he did not reach here in time and was denied the pleasure of welcoming them as he had anticipated.

A DELSARTE THEORY.

Failing Without Getting Hurt is an Easy Trick If You Only Know How.

"People wonder how an actress can fall on the stage without hurting herself," says a woman who, according to the New York Times, has tried all sorts of falls as they are done now, but is by the easiest thing in the world. I tried the Delsarte exercises at one time, and the result was that my attack of the disease was at its height, my family had the pleasure of seeing me fall for their amusement and enlightenment all around the house. The great secret of falling is to relax. If you slip and fall backward, you will be all right if you can only remember to relax your muscles; you will be shocked perhaps from a serious injury. Children and drunken people fall relaxed. My mind at that time was filled with my desire to see if I were relaxed, whenever I thought of it relax my clutch. I relax at dinner. I relax at my parents. I didn't, for I found later a goodly number of big black and blue spots, which never should develop on a true disciple of Delsarte."

SYNOPSIS.

Chapter I.—Tom Scott, a New England farmhand, decides to go to Klondike to search for gold. In Boston he rescues a Mr. Avery from footpads, and, as his new acquaintance is also going to Klondike, he asks Tom to accompany him, and the invitation is accepted. They take passage on the Seabird, a sailing vessel bound for 'Frisco.

Chapter II.—They board the vessel and a new mate, Obed Rider, whom the captain had just secured, proves to be an old enemy of Tom's, who had accused his father of deserting the ship of which he was captain and taking with him several thousand dollars of the owner's gold. Tom's father had not been home since the accusation had been made, but Tom, then a boy, did not believe it, and attempted to whip Rider. In the fight he broke the mate's nose. When the mate finds Tom aboard the vessel he vows to be avenged for the broken nose.

Chapter III.—During the passage Mr. Avery is knocked overboard accidentally and Tom again saves his life by jumping into the ocean after him. The man is injured internally and about to die. He calls Tom to him and wills him all his money, $5,000, and also his share in a rich gold region which his partners have discovered and where he was going to join them. He gives Tom a letter from one of them which gives direction for finding the territory, the possession of which and Avery's will will serve as an identification when he gets there.

Chapter IV.—Rider hears the man's conversation with Tom and determines to get the papers and the gold which they entitle the holder to. In San Francisco Tom is waylaid and robbed by Rider of the paper and what money he had with him, but the majority of his cash was on board the Seabird. Tom is found by the second mate of the Seabird, Green, who has left the sea to search for gold, and taken to his lodgings. Rider escapes and starts for Dyea.

Chapter V.—At Dyea Rider meets Tom's father, who has been in the gold fields and is returning home with a fortune. He asks for his son and his brother, and is told that Tom is dead, saying that Tom died in 'Frisco and was buried by the captain of the Seabird. After giving Rider gold enough to help him reach the gold fields, Tom's father starts for 'Frisco to find the sea captain, and from him learns that his son is not dead, but had started for the gold fields a few days before.

Chapter VI.—Green believes Rider has stolen Tom's paper and money and they try to find him.

Chapter VII.—In Dyea Rider has formed a partnership with a tough named Bowers. They leave Dyea to search for the hidden gold the day after Tom and Green reach there and without them being aware of their presence. Tom rescues a woman from the hands of a tough and finds that she is the daughter of a brother of the man who befriended him by giving him the papers which had been stolen. She and her father were on their way to the mines for which his brother had started. Tom tells his story and also of his brother's death.

Chapter VIII.—In the meantime Rider and Bowers are on their way up the Dalton trail. They meet one of the partners of Avery on his way to Dyea for provisions and secure what information they can from him after showing him the paper from Avery and telling their story, which he does not believe.

CHAPTER IX.

JOINING FORCES.

Tom and his party camped the first night about 30 miles from Dyea. The next morning they were early astir and continued their journey. The young girl was too full of life and spirits to ride quietly at her father's side, and Tom had several long chats with her as they wound their way along the faintly marked trail.

She confided to him that she did not remember her mother, who died when she was very young. She had always lived in Wisconsin with her father, and was an only child. She refused to be left behind on the present occasion, she said, and it was very apparent she ruled her father in most things.

In return Tom described his life at home, and the young girl listened with breathless interest to the story of the voyage and his adventure at San Francisco.

She was riding by his side late in the afternoon when suddenly she pointed to the summit of a hill not far ahead, and exclaimed:

"See! There's a man coming this way!"

She had scarcely spoken when the second mate announced the same fact. As for Tom, he would not have seen an army just at that time, for candor compels the statement that he was already hopelessly in love with his fair companion, and paid but little attention to other things.

Five minutes later Joe Tarbox had met them, and Tom accosted him at once with:

"How are you! Bound for Dyea?"

"That's just it," was the response as the man ran his eyes rapidly over the liberal outfit with an appreciative glance. "Where might you be heading?"

"We're going toward Fort Selkirk," said Tom.

"Going down the river to Dawson?"

"It's hard to tell where we'll fetch up," replied the young man evasively.

"Did you meet anyone on this trail lately?" asked Avery, pushing forward.

The man hesitated a moment, and then said:

"Well, yes, I did meet two men yesterday. Friends of yours?"

"What were they like?" asked Tom.

"One was a tall chap that I think I've seen at the river stations, and the other was a sailor. He said he was, and he looked it. He was stout-built, with a nose that looked as if it was broken some time. He—"

"Obed Rider!"

"It's the mate!"

The exclamations broke simultaneously from Tom and Green, while the stranger looked at them in surprise, and added:

"That wasn't the name he gave me. He said his name was Tom Scott."

"By thunder! We're on the right course," shouted Green, while Tom could only gasp:

"Tom Scott! That's my name!"

The man looked at them a moment in blank astonishment, and then a light evidently seemed to break on his mind, for he turned and looked sharply at Avery and asked:

"Will you tell me your name?"

"Certainly. My name is William Avery."

The other man stepped up to him at once and extended one of his hands, palm downward, on the middle finger of which was a heavy gold ring with a curious device in the back.

"If that is your name, you can tell me the history of this ring," he said, looking Avery full in the face.

"I surely ought to be able to," was the reply, while the others looked on in surprise at the little scene being enacted so unexpectedly before them. "I gave it to Dick Taylor in California a good many years ago. You must be the man he mentioned in his letter to me. You are Joe Tarbox, or you wouldn't have that ring."

"Right you are," was the hearty response, "and I'm mighty glad to see you. But how about those two fellows? Is that really the Scott your brother mentioned in his will?"

"What do you know about his will?" demanded Tom blankly.

"Because I've read it."

"Scott—I was robbed of it in 'Frisco—"

"The mate must have shown it to him," broke in Green. "I knew I was right all the time!"

The questions now flew thick and fast and soon Tarbox was made aware of the true state of affairs. Tom showed him the identification he had brought from San Francisco, which removed the last lingering doubt, but their new acquaintance was determined to take no chances. He maintained a discreet silence in regard to the mine and its exact location, declaring that until his partner had seen and acknowledged the party he was not at liberty to reveal any of the secrets.

At length Avery said abruptly:

"But you are not going to Dyea now? We have supplies enough here to feed our party and you two besides for the next year. You must come back with us. We ought to hurry as fast as we can with those two scoundrels ahead of us. They may catch Dick with the papers they've got. How can he tell but what they are all straight?"

Tarbox chuckled grimly as he replied:

"They won't find him. You'll understand better when you get there. Dick will know the tallest galoot the moment he sets his eyes on him. We've both seen him before. The sailor picked out just the man to queer him with Dick. If it wasn't for that I might feel a little bit uneasy, but it's all right, I tell you. Dick Taylor is no tenderfoot. We might as well camp for the night. It'll soon be dark. If all this stuff is grub there's enough to feed the whole Klondike country."

He was firm in his refusal to proceed further that day, and, in fact, by the time the loads had been removed from the horses and the animals cared for the sun had disappeared. The tents were soon pitched and after supper and a friendly chat the entire party stretched themselves on their rude couches and were soon asleep.

An early start was made the following morning, and, three days later, as they reached the top of a long hill, Tarbox pointed to a white cliff a few miles to the north and said:

"There is where the trail branches off to our place. It's only about 25 or 30 miles then. We'd better push ahead and see if we can make it before dark."

An hour later they reached the landmark. Tom could not see any sign of a trail in the direction in which Tarbox turned his horse's head, but after a moment the latter pointed to a spot where the marks of hoofs were plainly to be seen and said coolly:

"Our two friends managed to find their way, I see."

He had not uttered a threat against the men who had tried to deceive him, but Tom felt certain there would be a day of reckoning in the near future. There was an air of resolution about their guide which is only gained by contact with danger in its various forms.

"Push the horses along," said Tarbox. "We shan't want all of them after to-day. Maybe we shan't want them at all. We can't keep them where we are going."

"But there's plenty of meat on the bones," [illegible]

Tarbox was apparently determined not to explain himself and the subject was dropped. Mile after mile was rapidly passed, for the country was comparatively open, and even the pack horses could trot at times. Still the guide showed no sign of pausing, and at last the sun was dipping behind the horizon. Then he suddenly turned to the left around a huge bowlder toward which they had been traveling for some time, and the rest saw directly in front of them the summits of two lofty hills, the gorge between them being densely wooded about half way up on either side.

The tops were still crowned with snow, upon which the setting sun shone its crimson rays until they seemed bathed in blood.

For some distance on the left of the travelers extended a perpendicular cliff fully a hundred feet high and accessible only to the birds. On the right the ascent was more gradual, but the trees were very dense until the snow line was reached.

Tarbox led the way among the bowlders at the foot of the cliff until he came to an open spot. Then he dismounted and said:

"We are here. Now for a fire."

Tom was about to go for fuel, when he saw Tarbox reach behind a rock and bring out a handful of dry twigs and moss, which he soon ignited. When the blaze shot up he covered it with damp moss, and the result was a dense column of smoke which went curling up the face of the cliff until it showed distinctly against the sky above.

The other men busied themselves with the usual routine work of camping, but Tarbox stood by the fire in silence for fully ten minutes. An anxious look began to appear on his face, but suddenly he gave a little exclamation of relief as a pebble struck him on the shoulder and rebounded to the ground.

"I'll be back in a minute," he called to Avery's daughter, who was nearest to him. Then he disappeared behind one of the rocks.

Like a shadow he glided along in the gathering darkness, twisting and turning without hesitation until he stopped at a spot where the base of the cliff was covered with scrub and moss. With a hasty glance about him, as if to be certain no one was watching him, he stooped and pulled aside a mass of clinging creepers from the rocks, revealing a narrow opening some three feet wide and extending upwards to an unknown height.

"All right, Dick," he whispered softly, and then came a rustling noise as a man appeared from the dark cavity and grasped his hand warmly.

CHAPTER X.

RUN DOWN AT LAST.

"What brought you back so quick?" said the newcomer, in a low tone. "I wasn't looking for any signal, and was just going to turn in when I happened to see the smoke. Who have you brought with you?"

"One of the Averys is with me," was the reply. "It's a long story, Dick. I met him on the way. Come and take a peep at him, and make sure. I haven't told him anything that'll hurt us, but there is no doubt he is the right party. Come on, but keep out of sight till you are sure."

As he spoke he retraced his steps to the fire, the other following close behind him, until he was able to peer cautiously around a rock and obtain a good look at the party. Then, with a shout, he sprang forward and seized Avery's hand, exclaiming:

"Bill, old man! Shake! Where's John?"

Avery clasped his hand warmly, but did not reply for a moment, and the two old friends silently noted the changes which the years had made in each other. Many had passed since they met, and as they stood there, looking into each other's eyes, with the light from the fire flickering upon their rugged features, to each it seemed that they were back in the old days, when their blood was hotter than now, and their hair innocent of the gray with which both heads were liberally sprinkled.

Taylor was first to recover himself, and he repeated:

"Where is John? Didn't he—"

"Poor John is dead," interrupted the other, sadly. "He died on the ship he was coming on from Boston and was buried at sea. This young man saved him from drowning, but he was hurt internally when he fell overboard and never got over it."

"John dead!"

That was all, but the hands of the two men gripped harder for a moment, and both understood. No words of sympathy could have conveyed more meaning.

Tarbox now stepped forward and made his partner acquainted with the other members of the party. Then he said:

"It's too dark to try to get up to the camp to-night. We shall have to stay here till morning, Dick. There's a long story to tell, and I wish we were safe out of sight now. Have you seen any smoke before?"

"Smoke? What do you mean? Who would be doing that? All the people who know our signal are here now."

"Not by a long sight, they ain't," was the reply, as Tarbox tried to pierce the darkness about them, which was intense by this time.

"What do you mean?"

"Well, it's a long story, Dick. In the first place, we might as well get a bite of supper, and then Scott here will tell you all about his trip on the vessel and what happened to him. I'll finish the yarn, and then you'll understand just how the thing stands."

This was sound advice, and his partner made no objection, but he was burning with impatience, and could hardly wait till the frugal repast was swallowed. Then he exclaimed:

"Now, let's have the story. There's a good deal depending on it. Come, Scott, fire away."

Tom at once began a detailed account of his acquaintance with the old miner, and when he had concluded the story Tarbox added his meeting with the two [illegible]nize him at first, but when I saw him tipping the wink to the sailor on the sly, I began to smell a rat."

"But where are they?" burst out Taylor, excitedly. "You say they were ahead of us. Where are they now?"

"That's what makes me uneasy," replied his partner. "We saw their tracks back by the white cliff and they turned off all right. We were too busy hurrying to look for them any more. I suppose they have got off the track somehow, but if they should see our fire there might be trouble. We must stand a watch to-night. If we can get everything out of sight before they get here, they'll never be the wiser. They can't find us in a hundred years."

His partner evidently shared his uneasiness, for he responded quickly:

"Perhaps they won't, but we mustn't take any chances. I'll take the first watch and you the second. We are more used to this sort of thing, you know. We'll keep the fire down low. It isn't very cold."

The rest of the party now retired, Avery and his daughter occupying one tent and the three younger men the other, while Dick Taylor loosened his revolver in his belt, made sure that each cartridge was in place, and then took up his post in the dark shadow of a huge rock where no ray of light could betray his presence to a watcher.

Soon not a sound was to be heard but the low murmur of his companions' voices as they discussed the situation, then these died out, and a chorus of snores testified to the soundness of their slumber.

Hour after hour passed until it was fully midnight. Then the miner entered the tent where his partner was sleeping and laid his hand lightly on his shoulder.

In an instant the sleeper was wide awake, and a moment later the two were outside.

"Hear anything?" asked Tarbox softly.

"No," replied the other, "but somehow I feel uncomfortable. I never had this feeling yet but what there was sure to be trouble ahead. I wish it was daylight. Keep out of sight as much as you can, Joe. I didn't say much before the rest, but I believe that scoundrel we saw at Ladue's place would think nothing of shooting a man in the back if he had any cause to do it. It's a pity this all happened. We might have all got as much as we wanted before anyone found out about it. Now there's no telling what may happen."

Five minutes later he was asleep and Tarbox was standing sentry over the silent camp.

It was nearly daybreak when he replenished the fire, for the air grew very chilly. Soon a gray streak appeared in the southeast, and as Tom came out of his tent the sun was just rising over the rolling land over which they had traveled the day before.

The rest of the party were soon awake, and Taylor said at once:

"I believe we have not been seen yet, but we must get out of sight before breakfast. Joe, turn the horses loose and start them off. The rest of us will begin to pack in the stuff."

He grasped a heavy package as he spoke, and the others followed his example. When they reached the face of the cliff he paused and said, solemnly:

"I am going to show you a wonderful secret. All I want is your word that you will never reveal it until I give you permission. Will you promise this?"

His three companions readily gave their promise, and looked curiously about them.

Their guide stepped up to the rocky wall and carefully pushed aside the mass of moss and creepers, disclosing to their wondering gaze the same aperture from which he had issued the previous night. Looking inside, they could see that for several feet the rock overhead was unbroken, forming an arch like a doorway at the height of some seven or eight feet, but the light which showed beyond was apparently from above.

Taylor led the way with his burden after looping the creepers to one side to prevent them from being in the way. A few steps brought them beyond the arch of rock, and a simultaneous exclamation of astonishment broke from all the men.

"Don't you count me?" pouted Clara.

They found themselves standing at the bottom of a deep chasm in the solid rock. On either side of them the walls rose perpendicularly to the height of some 50 feet as smoothly as if chiseled by human agency. Far above them a narrow strip of blue sky wound like a ribbon, and in front at a distance of a few yards a sharp curve in the rocky way shut off all farther view.

Where they stood the passage widened abruptly for a space of some ten feet, and Taylor said:

"This is the bed of some old stream which must have run here thousands of years to wear its way down through the rock to this depth. Right here where men who had showed him the papers, adding:

"If I'd ever suspected the truth, Dick, I'd put a spoke in their wheel somehow. One of them is that tall scamp we saw hustled out of Ladue's. I didn't recog-we are standing it seems to have backed up and made a sort of basin which accounts for the rocks being worn out so much wider. When there was a freshet the water couldn't get out through the opening fast enough. But we must be getting the rest of the goods in here. Drop your loads here till we have it all out of sight."

The others obeyed, and as they went back and forth he told them how he had discovered the opening.

"We came down from Selkirk," he said, "but we struck off somewhere north of where the trail divides. It was last summer. We were prospecting and headed over this way. We got all mixed up in the woods and at last we came out at the other end of the curious gully. We found gold and stayed there. One day I followed this place down from the other end and came out here."

It required some time to carry all the goods into the opening, and, although Tarbox soon returned and even the young girl assisted with all her strength it was an hour later when Dick Taylor pulled the sheltering mass over the entrance and hid it from view, saying:

"There! We are safe now from all prying eyes. The next thing is to get all this stuff into camp. It'll be a tough job, but there's plenty of time and five of us to do it."

"Don't you count me?" pouted Clara Avery. "See the great, heavy bundle I just brought in here."

"Of course," laughed Taylor. "Everyone can help, and you seem to be a plucky little one. We shall find plenty of work for you mending and cooking for us. Can you cook?"

"Can she cook?" repeated her father proudly. "Dick, you just wait till she turns out a sample. We shan't have to live as we did in the old days."

"Good! Well, talking about eating reminds me that we haven't had any breakfast. I couldn't wait to get this stuff out of sight till after breakfast, but now it's different. We will leave all we can't take at one load and go up to our camp now. We can come back and get the rest after we have eaten. Don't load up too heavy. It's not very smooth walking where we are going."

Throwing a package over his shoulder, he led the way until the turn in the passage was reached. Beyond this the way grew narrower, until there was barely room to walk. Twenty yards farther there was a sudden rise for about ten feet, and the walls appeared to be alternate layers of rock, gravel and dirt.

Soon it was all a sharp rise, and they found it extremely difficult to carry their burdens.

"You see why we have no need for the horses," remarked Tarbox. "I have sent them racing down the trail as far as I could. We couldn't get them up here, and they wouldn't find anything to live on if we could. I hope they will stay away from this locality. They would arouse suspicion if anyone saw them."

Another five minutes' climb and they emerged on a rocky platform, and Taylor said quietly:

"There. In front of you lies our camp, and gold enough to make you all rich, if we can only keep the place to ourselves long enough. We have food enough for a year, and all we want is to be let alone."

Tom and Green stared blankly about them, but their untrained eyes told them nothing. A huge ridge of rock ran from where they stood across the valley before them, and was lost in the dense timber half a mile away. In the foreground the heavy moss which covered the ground was cut up in places by the channels of defunct torrents and dotted with fragments of rock, some of which seemed to have pierced the bosom of the soil from below, while others had been detached from the ridge at some time and rolled into the valley.

On the left of the ridge a small stream, scarcely two feet wide, was running swiftly, and pointing to its bank Taylor added:

"See those two holes and the two heaps of dirt? Well, we've been waiting for water to wash that dirt out. We've been thawing out that ground with fires all winter so we could dig. Those two heaps are full of gold and it'll run ten dollars to the pan."

Avery alone seemed to pay little or no attention to his friend's words. He was examining the scene before him critically, but he hardly glanced at the two heaps of dirt upon which the others gazed with intense interest. He made no comment, however, and when Taylor moved forward he followed him without a word.

"Now I'll show you where we live."

There was no sign of a tent or hut visible, but they soon saw that he was heading for a stout bush not far from the little stream and about 100 feet from where they had emerged from the natural tunnel.

Behind this bush they saw an opening partially concealed from view by a big bowlder, while others had been added by human hands to make concealment more effectual.

"This is our house," said Taylor. "It will do nicely for your daughter, Bill, and the rest of us can use the tents. It's hot enough for the rest of the summer."

The cave was about ten feet square, and was not altogether the work of nature. The rock was very soft, and the two men had spent many hours enlarging it, until it was a very comfortable place of abode. Several skins covered the floor, and Clara Avery gave a cry of delight as she entered.

"I'll soon have breakfast ready now," she said.

While she was preparing it her father strolled off by himself and examined the ground with a thoughtful air. He came to the cave when his daughter called that the food was ready, but his appetite seemed to be poor, and he had little to say. Even his daughter noticed his preoccupation, but whatever was troubling him he kept it to himself, and joined the others after breakfast in the work of bringing up the rest of the goods, which proved no easy task.

Three hours later, when the last package had been safely piled in the cave, Dick Taylor said thoughtfully:

"Why wouldn't it be a good plan to block up the passage? Those two men are too near to suit me, Joe. They've got my letter and are sure to find where we camped last night if they look long enough. The very fact that we let our horses go will let them know that we must have gone where we could not possibly take them. They are sure to see the animals. Suppose they go nosing round and find the opening under the moss? We are on American soil and they have as much right here as we have."

"But one of them tried to murder me," cried Tom, indignantly, "and he did rob me!"

"We might make him give up what he stole," was the quiet reply, "but you have no courts here and I can't prove anything against him. I think I'll take a look along the trail and see if there are any signs of them."

Turning on his heel abruptly he made his way up the incline until he reached the top of the cliff, where he shaded his eyes with both hands, for the sun was glaring. A moment later he called his companions, who hastened to join him.

"Look!" he said, as they reached his side.

Following his outstretched arm the others saw a mounted man not more than a mile from the foot of the cliff and making directly for it. That it was the mate or his companion there could be no doubt. He was leading several pack horses, and Joe Tarbox at once recognized the outfit.

"It's one of them, sure enough!" he exclaimed. "They've managed to find their way here, and now they will see the ashes of our fire. They'll make one in the same place, but that's all the good it'll do them. Still, I think we'd better stop up that hole, so they can't get through if they do find it."

"Better do it at once, then," replied Taylor, and the two men started for the entrance to the gully. When they had reached it Tarbox pointed to a big bowlder lying almost on the edge of the opening and said:

"Call the rest of them and we will roll this down. It won't go far before it wedges, and then no living man can come through."

But it required half an hour's laborious work to accomplish this. They were obliged to fell a small tree for a lever, and even then it required their united labor to move the heavy bowlder. Inch by inch, however, they forced it along until it overbalanced. Then with a sullen crash it fell into the rocky bed and bounded down the steep way for some 30 yards until it reached a turn. Here it wedged itself fast, completely blocking the passageway.

But, mingled with the crash of its lodgment, the men distinctly heard a muffled shout from beyond it, which caused them to stare blankly at each other.

SYNOPSIS.

Chapter I.—Tom, Scott, a New England farmhand, decides to go to Klondike to get gold. Dick Taylor, a friend of Scott, tells Mr. Avery from Tacoma and a fellow acquaintance is also going to Klondike, he asks Tom to accompany him, and the invitation is accepted. They take passage on the Seattle, a sailing vessel bound for Alaska.

Chapter II.—They board the vessel and a rough mate, Dodd, Hiller, whom they had just secured, proves to be an old enemy of Tom's, who had accused his father of deserting the ship of which he was captain and taking with him several thousand dollars of the owner's gold. Tom's father had left his home since the accusation had been made, but from then to his death believed in the innocence of his wife Hiller. Tom tells Dick the man's name. Where the plaid Back Tom aboard the vessel he vows to be avenged for the broken nose.

Chapter III.—During the passage Mr. Avery is knocked overboard accidentally by Hiller and drowned. Tom jumps overboard to the ocean after him. The man is injured internally and about to die. He calls Tom to him and tells him all his money, $1,800, and also his share in a rich gold region which his partners have discovered, and where he was going to join them. He gives Tom papers from one of them which will serve as an identification when he goes there.

Chapter IV.—Hiller hears the man's conversation with Tom and threatens to take the papers and the gold which they represent. On the harbor tug, in San Francisco, Tom is warned and makes for Hiller at the same time, and what money he has with him, but the latter escapes. Tom and Dick Taylor leave for Seattle. Tom is robbed by the second mate of his gold. Greek who has left the sea, to search for gold, and, taken to his lodgings, finds it escapes and starts for Dyea.

Chapter V.—At Dyea Tom meets Scott's father, who has been in the Klondike region and who has returned with a fortune. He asks Tom to go and his brother. And to test Tom's honesty he tells him that Scott is in Dawson City and is married to a woman by the name of Dolores Lopez. Tom, however, refuses to believe the story of his friend's marriage and starts for the Klondike. Tom's father starts for Frisco to find the man, and, not finding him learns that his brother is dead, but has entrusted the papers and money to Hiller.

Chapter VI.—Tom believes Hiller has stolen Scott's papers and money and vows to avenge Scott's wrongs.

Chapter VII.—In Dawson Tom finds Scott married to Dolores and living in the Indian village. They meet one of the party from Avery's camp, the way he died, and receives a letter from him after showing him the paper from Avery and money. Their story which he does not believe.

CHAPTER IV.

Tom and his party camped the first night about 10 miles from Dyea. The next morning they started early and continued their journey. The young girl was too full of life and spirits to ride quietly, and kept her pony prancing. Tom had several long chats with her, as they wound about, way along, the mountain trail.

She confided to him that she did not remember her mother, who died when she was very young. She had always lived in Wisconsin with her father, and was an only child. She refused to be left behind on the present occasion, she said, and it was very apparent that indeed her father must need things.

In return Tom described his life at home, and the young girl listened with breathless interest to the story of the voyage and his adventures at San Francisco.

She was riding by his side late in the afternoon when suddenly she pointed to the summit of a hill not far ahead, and exclaimed:

"See! There's a man coming this way!"

She had scarcely spoken when the second mate announced the same fact. As for Tom, he would have dove for the army just at that time, for quite a few people the statement that he was already hopelessly in love with his fair companion, and paid but little attention to other things.

Five minutes later the Tarbox and met them, and Tom recognized him at once saying:

"How are you? Bound for Dyea?"

"That's just it," was the response as the man on his eyes rapidly over the liberal outfit with appreciative glance. "Where might you be heading?"

"We're going toward Fort Selkirk," said Tom.

"Going down the river to Dawson?"

"It's hard to tell where we'll finish up," replied the young man evasively.

"Did you meet anyone on this trail lately?" asked Avery, pushing forward.

The man hesitated a moment, and then said: "Oh, I should say so."

"Well, yes, I did meet two men yesterday. Friends of yours?"

"What were they like?" asked Tom.

"One was a tall chap that I thinked even at the extra distance, and the other was a sailor. He said he was, and he looked it. He was rather short, with a nose that looked as if it was broken some time. He—"

"Died Riderer!" cried Avery. "Where is he now?"

The explanations broke simultaneously from four and Greek, while the stranger looked at them in surprise, and added:

"That wasn't the name he gave me. He said his name was Tom Scott."

"Then, thank God, we're on the right course," shouted Green, while Tom could only gasp.

The man looked at him in amazement in blank astonishment, and then a light evidently seemed to break on his mind.

"Oh, I see," he said. "You're the party for he turned and looked sharply at Avery and Greek.

"Will you tell me your name?"

"Certainly. My name is William Avery," was the reply.

The other man stepped up to him at once and identified those of his hands, palm downward, and the middle finger of which was a heavy gold ring with a curious device in the back.

"That is your name, you can tell me the history of this ring," he said, bending a very full in the face.

"I surely ought to be able to," was the reply, while the others looked on in breathless interest. "Mr. Scott Ring selected me unexpectedly before them. He gave it to Dick Taylor in California a good many years ago. You might be the man he mentioned in his letter to me. You are Jos. Tarbox, sir, you might have that ring."

"Right you are," was the hearty response, and, in spite of himself, Avery found himself the object of considerable attention from the others. Tarbox was apparently determined not to let a finish himself, and the subject was dropped. After a little while was right jolly, for the country was communicative now, and even the quiet Tarbox could trot at times. Still the guide showed no sign of pausing, and at last the sun was dipping behind the horizon. Then he suddenly turned to the left around a huge bowlder toward which the land had been traveling for some time, and the rest saw directly in front of them the summits of two lofty hills, the gorge between them being closely wooded about half way up on either side.

The tops were still crowned with snow, upon which the setting sun shone its crimson rays until they seemed bathed in blood.

For some distance on the left of the two mountains ended a perpendicular cliff fully a hundred feet high and accessible only to the bird. On the right the ascent was more gradual, but the trees were very dense until the snow line was reached.

Tarbox led the way among the bowlders at the foot of the cliff until he came to an open spot. Then he dismounted, and said:

"We are here. Now for a fire."

Tom was about to go for wood when the saw Tarbox reach behind a rock and bring out a handful of dry twigs and moss, which he quickly made into a fine blaze shot up he covered it with damp moss, and the result was a dense column of smoke which went straight up in the face of the cliff until it showed distinctly against the sky above.

The other men had set themselves with the usual routine work of camping, but Tarbox stood by the fire in silence for fully ten minutes. An anxious look began to appear on his face, but suddenly he gave a little exclamation of relief as a pebble struck him on the shoulder and rebounded to the ground.

"I'll be back in a minute" he called to Avery's daughter, who was silent to him. Then he disappeared behind one of the rocks.

Like a shadow he glided along in the gathering darkness, twisting and turning without hesitation over the rough ground, until he came to a point where the cliff was covered with vermin and moss. With a hasty glance about him, as if to be certain no one was watching him, he stooped and pulled aside a mass of clinging creepers from the face of the cliff, revealing a narrow opening some three feet wide and extending upwards to an unknown height.

"All right, Dick," he whispered softly; and then there was a rustling noise and a man appeared from the dark cavity and grasped his hand warmly.

CHAPTER X.

RUN DOWN AT LAST.

"What brought you back so quick?" said the newcomer, in a low tone. "I wasn't looking for any signal, and was just going to turn in when I happened to see the smoke. Who have you brought with you?"

"One of the Averys is with me," was the reply. "It's a long story, Dick. I'll met him on the way. Come and take a peep at him, and make sure. I haven't told him anything that he'll mind, and there is no doubt he is the right party. Come on, but keep out of sight till you are sure."

As he spoke he retraced his steps to the fire, the other following close behind him, until he was within a couple of yards of the spot, when he stopped and obtain a good view of the party. Then, with a cry he sprang forward and seized Avery's hand, exclaiming:

"Right, old man! Shake! Where's John?"

Avery clasped his hand warmly, but for the moment was speechless, and the old friends silently noted the changes which the years had made in each other. Many had passed since they met, and as they stood there, looking into each other's eyes, with the light from the fire flickering upon their strong, manly features, to each it seemed that they were back in the old days, when their blood was bolder than now, and their hair innocent of the gray with which both heads were liberally sprinkled.

Taylor was first to recover himself, and he repeated:

"Where is John? Didn't he—"

"Poor John is dead," interrupted the other, sadly. "He died on ship he was coming on from Dutch Harbor, and buried at sea." This young man saved him from drowning, but he was just too late when he fell overboard and was never got over it."

"John dead!"

That was all but the hands of the two men gripped harder for a moment, and both understood. No words of sympathy could have conveyed more feeling.

Tarbox now stepped forward and made his partner acquainted with the other members of the party. Then he said:

"Well, it's a long story, Dick, but the first place, we might as well get a bite of supper, and then Scott here will tell you all about his trip to the coast and what happened to him, and then the rest, and then you'll understand why I'm so anxious to get back to the claim."

This was sound advice, and his partner made no objection, but he was burning with impatience, and could hardly wait till the frugal repast was swallowed. Then he exclaimed:

"Now let's have the story. There's a good deal depending on it, Comp. Scott. Fire away!"

Tom at once began a detailed account of his acquaintance with the old miner, and when he had completed the story Tarbox added his meeting with the two men on the trail, how he had tracked up and made a sort of fight, which was ended by the sudden flight of the latter, and how he had followed him up the cliff.

"That's the story," was the curt rejoinder, excitedly. "You say these were ahead of us. Where are they now?"

"Camped upon making an entry," replied his partner. "We saw their tracks back by the white cliff and they turned off all right. We were not busy hurrying to look for them this morning, so I thought we'd get off our trail and take a rest. Then we'd start on, but if they camped we may as well do it right. We must stand watch to-night. If we can get everything out of sight before they get here, they'll never be the wiser. They can't be far in a bunch of ice."

His partner evidently shared his uneasiness, for he responded quickly:

"Perhaps they won't, but we mustn't take any chances. I'll take the first watch and you the second. We are many miles from any help, and they know. We'll keep the fire down low. It will keep cold."

That was the very best course, and Avery and his daughter occupying one tent and the three strangers another, either, while Dick Taylor loosened his revolver in his belt, made sure that each cartridge was in place, and then took up his post in the dark shadow of a huge rock where no ray of light could reach his presence to a watcher.

Soon not a sound was to be heard but the low murmur of his companions' voices as they discussed the situation, then these died out, and a chorus of snores testified to the soundness of their slumber.

Hour after hour passed until it was quite midnight. Then the silence seemed the vast wheels pursuing were no longer and laid his head lightly on his shoulder.

In an hour the sleeper was awake and a moment later the two were consulting.

"Hear anything?" asked Tarbox softly.

"Not a thing," replied Taylor, "and how I feel uncomfortable. I never had this feeling yet but what there was some one around. I'm going to take a look right. Keep out of sight as much as you can, Jos. I didn't say much before them, but I believe that fellow was the same Ladue's place would think nothing of shooting a man in the back if he could escape scot-free. I'm going to see all that happened. We might have all got as much as we wanted before we knew it, and about it. Now there's nothing what may happen."

Five minutes later he was asleep and Tarbox was stabbing destry over the other camp.

What Avery may have said when he replenished the fire for the air grew very chilly. Soon a gray streak appeared in the southeast, and as Tom came out of his tent the sun was just rising over the rolling land over which they had traveled the day before, and from which they had descended.

The rest of the party were soon awake, and Taylor said at once:

"I believe we have not been seen yet, but we must get out of sight before we're sure. Where's Jos? I'll have a look around there and see if I can find him."

He was not long in finding the guide, who was busily engaged in preparing breakfast, and the others followed his example. When they reached the face of the cliff Taylor said to the guide:

"I am going to show you a wonderful secret. All I want is your word that you will never reveal it until I give you permission. Will you promise this?"

The three companions readily gave their promise, and a mile or so in the foreground the heavy moss which covered the ground was set up in places by small bunches of torrents and dotted with fragments of rock, some of which looked as if they formed the bosom of the soil from below, while others had been detached from the face of some time and rolled to the valley.

On the left of the ridge a small opening appeared, and Taylor said:

"Here's the two holes and the cross I helped to drill. We'll be seen waiting for water to wash the dirt out. We'll see a long gap on this ground with fires all winter, so we could dig. Those two heaps are full of gold and we'll run ten sluices to the pan."

Avery alone seemed to pay little or no attention to his friend's words. He was examining the scene before him critically, but he hardly glanced at the heaps of dirt upon which Taylor's words seemed with intense interest. He made no comment, however, and when Taylor removed he said, he followed him without a word.

"Now I'll show you where we lived." There was no sign of a tent or hut visible, but they soon saw that he was heading for a stout bush not far from the high stream and along which he had come. Then he and emerged from where they had emerged from the mouth of a natural tunnel.

Behind this they saw an opening partially concealed from view by a big bowlder, and entering it they found themselves in a roomy cave. Several skins covered the floor, and there Avery gazed in delight as she entered.

"I'll soon have breakfast ready now," she said.

Whilst she was preparing it her father strolled off by himself, and examined the ground with a thoughtful air. He came to the bar, when his daughter called that the food was ready, but its appetite seemed to be poor, and he had little to say. His daughter noticed the fact, and asked him whether he was troubling him the head of himself, and joined the others at their breakfast. In the work of bringing up the rest of the goods, which proved no easy task. Three days were spent in this, when the package had been safely piled in the cave. Dick Taylor said the last trip.

"Why couldn't it be a good point to block up the passage?" Those two men are too near to suit me, Joe. They'll get wise after awhile, and come to find where we camped last night if they look long enough. The very fact that we let our horses go will put them know that we must have gone. We're we could not possibly take them. They're sure to see the animals. Suppose they go moving round and find the opening unknown to us? We are not armed, and probably have as much right here as we have."

"Let one pit them tried to interfere me," replied Tom, indignantly, "and he will rue his day."

"We might make him give up what he stole," was the quiet reply. "But you have no notion we have and want to run anything against him. I think I'll take a look along the trail and see if there are any signs of him."

Turning on his heel abruptly he made his way up the incline until he reached the top of the cliff, where he shaded his eyes with both hands, for the sun was glaring. A moment later he called his companions, who hastened to join him.

"Look," he said, as they reached his side.

Following his outstretched arm the others saw a mudshed and not more than a mile from the foot of the cliff and making directly for it. That it was the camp of the strangers there could be no doubt. He was leading several pack horses, and Joe Tarbox at once recognized the quilt.

"It's one of them, sure enough!" he exclaimed. "They've managed to find their way here, and now they will see the shed of our end. They'll make up in the cave. You don't suppose that's all the good it'll do them? Still, I think we'd better stop up that hole, so they can't get through it this night at any rate."

"Better do it at once, then," replied Taylor, and the two men started for the entrance to the cliff, which they had reached in Tarbox pointed to a big bowlder lying almost on one edge at the opening of the cave.

"Call the rest of them and we will roll that down to make it fast. Then before it we'll put a small tree for a prop, and even then it will be very easily blocking up."

But, mingled with the crash of its lodgment, the men distinctly heard a muffled shout from beyond it, which caused them to stare blankly at each other.

WARREN.

Mrs. T. B. Craig went to Crookston yesterday.

Miss Hilda Samuelson went to Moorhead on Monday to resume her studies at the State Normal school.

Mrs. T. F. Sherene and son Hugh, who have been visiting relatives and friends in this city during the past summer, left yesterday for their home in Waverly, Ill.

The special city election was held yesterday. The proposition to bond the city in the sum of $6,000 for the purpose of procuring funds with which to pay the outstanding city indebtedness in full resulted in the success of the proposition by a vote of 62 to 5. The sentiment of the citizens has all along seemed overwhelmingly in favor of the proposition but few of them took the trouble to go to the polls and vote.

Thos. T. Stevens, founder of the Register and for many years its editor and proprietor, returned to Warren last Thursday, after an absence of nearly four years, to pay a short visit to his sons and daughter here and to greet old neighbors. Mr. Stevens was most agreeably surprised at the great growth this city has had since he was last here in the fall of 1895. He notes the fact that many new and handsome residences have been erected and that several new business blocks have added to the appearance of the business section of the town. He also says that Warren has a progressive and prosperous look, and is all in all one of the neatest and most orderly he has ever seen.

A young man, somewhat the worse for liquor, stepped off the train Monday afternoon and at once started out to acquaint the whole town with the fact of his arrival by frequent and strenuous use of his vocal organs. Marshal Daly took the libations young man into his keeping and marched him before the city justice, who gave him an opportunity to contribute a few shekels to the city's exchequer. He paid his fine and received his discharge. Drunks have been uncommonly few in Warren the past month, considering the time of year, but occasionally a thresher becomes possessed of an all-consuming thirst which he assuages by long and frequent draughts from the flowing bowl and then he gets noisy and sobers up in the cooler.

MALLORY.

Miss Etta Conlter is teaching the Geddes school this term.

Mrs. Yeddem left Wednesday for her home at Winnipeg.

Mrs. O. G. Cornwell and Miss Clara Cornwell are the guests of Mrs. Thos. Hunter.

Fred Lusian spent Wednesday evening at Mallory renewing old acquaintances.

R. E. White made a flying trip to Bemidji this week. He reports everything lively at that place.

D. J. Morrow is reported to be improving and his friends expect to see him home fully recovered in a short time.

Mr. Sheffield, Supt. St. Anthony & Dakota Elevator Co., spent Wednesday at Mallory looking after the interests of his company.

O. Osmundson made a flying trip to Fisher this week. Mr. Osmundson has cut prices and is cleaning out his stock of general merchandise quite fast.

LOCKHART.

W. B. Sheffield was a prominent visitor in town last Monday.

Ben Walsh is acting as Relief agent at the depot for two weeks.

A new engine house is being erected for the St. Anthony & Dakota Elevator Co.

The old section house two miles south has been torn down and a new one built at Bolette.

F. B. Dykeman is looking after his threshing at Beltrami. Wheat on 150 acres averaged 19 bushels but since 16 to 17.

—Mrs. J. Anderson has recovered from an operation for uterine ventral fixation recently performed by Dr. O. J. Brown assisted by Dr. Jul. Gendron.

Geo. Q. Erskine left for Crookston this week having finished threshing on his big farm west of here. His wheat which was some damaged by hail averaged about 8 bushels per acre.

SOUTH CROOKSTON.

Mr. Bancroft has been engaged as janitor for the new school house.

Con. Keeple's Restaurant is open day and night. He feeds about 100 a day.

H. R. Phillips has returned from a trip along the line where he has been repairing elevators.

Peter Ramstead, the elevator man of S. Crookston, is taking in a large amount of wheat now.

The cool shed man over here is very busy, more engines calling for coal then he can tend to.

Alex Gray returned this week from Oregon. He says it is the only place in which to live and he will return about Dec. 1st.

A social hop was given last Thursday night. A large crowd was over from Crookston headed by J. W. Riley. Riley is all right, at least so the young ladies think.

Mr. Bisezzn, proprietor of the Cranmill Big Store, came down static a morning or two ago and found his front store door open. It looks as though there were some crooks around. Look out Mr. Policeman and tend to business.

ERSKINE.

Business is picking up again.

Sheriff Lawrence was here Monday.

Dr. Olson returned from the State Fair Friday.

Dr. McKinnon did business here Wednesday.

John Rolsun was at Red Lake Falls Tuesday.

Martin Flom was at Fertile Saturday and Sunday.

Pete Rolsun did business at the county seat Saturday.

W. F. Peterson was up from Crookston Friday to look after Flom and his business.

Mrs. W. H. Bailey returned from the State Fair Wednesday.

O. B. Tveten, of Crookston, was a visitor here between trains Sunday.

Mrs. Hulvor Osthy left for a visit with her parents at Perley Monday.

Charley Dillon was visiting with his brother Dale Sunday and returned Tuesday.

Thompson Bros. opened up their place of business again Tuesday after a two weeks lay-off during harvest and threshing.

SHELLY.

Dr. Cleveland spent Sunday at Caledonia.

J. P. Clark from Caledonia transacted business in town Monday.

Dr. E. M. Pierce and family of Hillsboro visited in town Saturday.

Nicholas Olson of Halstad visited with his brother Ludvid Sunday and Monday.

A number of young boys came over from Hillsboro Sunday to visit with Shelly friends.

H. J. Nyhus came over from Hillsboro Monday to write some mutual Life Insurance policies.

Dr. and Mrs. Osmgaard and Dr. Osngaard's sister and brother came up from Halstad Monday afternoon to call on C. A. Hawkins and L. E. Olson. Dr. Osngaard and family returned from Spring Grove, Minn., where they have been spending a few months, vacation.

MAPLE BAY.

Fishing has been very poor all summer.

Mr. Gustafson started threshing this morning.

Some of the boys were out hunting Sunday.

George Gaylord from Fertile spent Saturday here.

Some of the Fertile people spent Sunday on the lake.

Sam Felsing went to Grand Forks on business Saturday.

Mr. Russell came out here but went to the Saturday night.

O. M. Olsen made a flying trip through the Bay Sunday.

Nels Peterson and B. Tilrow returned from Dakota Friday.

We had a rain shower Saturday night just enough to lay the dust.

A. Baken's mother came up from Fertile last week to stay with him.

Ed. has quit thrashing the base ball. Ask him what he is throwing now.

Messrs. Cook and Pierce from Terrebonne were down here on business Sunday.

Wheat around here will average about 15 bushels to the acre, and grades No. 1 Northern.

One of our city belles was out wheeling with the wheel-borrow. How is that for wheeling?

They have the electric lights working here now, so will work late hours at the factory after this.

H. P. Rustad had his eye injured in the factory last week. It was burnt quite badly with hot babbitt.

Miss Ella Anderson's smiling face is seen once more. She was one of those that were down with diphtheria.

The Hitterdale Ladies sewing society met here with Mrs. Nelson Wednesday and a good time was reported by all.

Mr. Wilhelm, from Thief River Falls, was down and bought a blower, and Mr. Olson went back with him to put it on his machine.

Miss Alice Kling is improving since last Monday when she was in Crookston to see Dr. Smith. She had an abcess on the tongue.

There was some excitement in the factory last week Friday— a steam pip e exploded. Saturday they had a small fire but no damage was done at either time.

Miss Sarah Patterson and Mrs. Pushberg went to Grand Forks Sunday, the former to take a course in dressmaking and the latter to consult an ear specialist.

LENGBY.

Threshing is on in full speed.

Ed. Odegaard is around looking for cattle.

Joe McLeod, of Grand Forks, was in town Friday.

of grain can be threshed in a day (and threshed perfectly and separated thoroughly, without waste) if you have a Nichols-Shepard Separator. And the straw will be handled easily, without the slightest trouble and almost no litter, if you use the Nichols-Shepard Swinging Stacker. This takes the place and does the work of an independent stacker. It oscillates automatically, is easily swung to right angles with the separator to carry the straw to either stack or barn. This stacker has been demonstrated by thorough and practical tests in the field to be the handiest, most efficient swinging stacker ever attached to a thresher. Like every other feature of the

PLEASURE AND PROFIT

To be had in Large Quantities at the Crookston Carnival and Live Stock Show.

GREAT MIDWAY PLAISANCE

Direct From Omaha—Fun Provoking Specialties—Magnificent Parades —Most Brilliant Fireworks.

The grand Street Carnival and Live Stock Show which will be held in Crookston next week Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, will be the event of the year in Northern Minnesota from any standpoint from which you may look at the matter. The citizens of the city are determined to entertain in nothing less than regal fashion the thousands of people who will, on that occasion, be within the city walls and when the Queen City makes up its mind to do anything everybody knows that that something will be done.

MUSIC.

Harmony, the key note of the Carnival, will be struck by a collection of bands such as this part of the country has never seen before. Melodious sounds will pervade the entire city and under the magic of musical strains dull care will be forgotten. H. P. Brown who has had in charge the matter of securing musical aggregations for the harvest celebration next week, was seen as he was hoarding the train yesterday morning for Bemidji and he reported that up to date the Fosston Juvenile band and the Argyle band have been arranged with to be here and these with the Crookston band, even if no others come, will assuredly furnish harmony enough to satisfy everybody. The Fosston players at the fair out there last week "captured the crowd individually and collectively" says the Thirteen Towns.

THE DECORATIONS.

These will be on a magnificent scale. Those who are attending to this matter have already collected enough material to make a splendid display and they have still left several days in which they will get more. Not merely will the business houses be adorned with gay colors but it is the intention to have the private residences decked out with flags, buntings, etc. Indeed Crookston will be appareled in attire benefiting the Queenly City which she is, and it will be worth going many miles simply to see the decorations. To give one illustration: At the intersection of Second and Main streets, and stretching across the square from the Merchants National bank to the Reckitt block will be an imposing arch that would do credit to the streets of New York at the Dewey reception. This arch will be festooned with everything that is beautiful and Bowen & Schmidt will also put upon it the marks of their artistic handiwork.

MIDWAY PLAISANCE.

There was nothing at the Chicago World's Fair that received as much attention from the sight-seers as did the Midway Plaisance. At the Crookston Carnival there will be something of a reproduction of this famous pleasure palace, and delights galore are in store for those who visit this city next week. Second street between Broadway and Ash will be given up to this realm of enjoyment. Within this, which will then be enchanted ground, will be found a Turkish Theatre, Palace of Illusions, Persian Dancers, the Haunted Swing and other pleasure producing sights and performances, all of which have come direct from the Omaha Exposition. The entrance to this region where happiness will abound will be on Broadway and stretching across Second street between the Commercial Hotel and the First National bank will be a gorgeous curtain designed and painted by Schmidt & Bowen.

THE PARADES.

Wonderful, indeed, more than wonderful, will be a feature of the parades. Uncle Sam's bachelor girls, who last year captivated the crowd, are again drilling and will form no unimportant part in the processions. A large number of those who have carriages have signified their intention of decorating them and forming a carriage parade. Last year the effect of a few of these was pleasing and now that there are to be many next week something particularly fine may be expected.

The civic societies are arranging to appear with all their paraphernalia, banners, etc., and when it is remembered what a large number of these orders are in the city, it will be seen what an imposing appearance they will make.

Elegant floats representing business houses, societies and so forth, will be in the line of march. The industrial parade also promises to be particularly attractive.

SPECIALTIES.

Among these will be Hogan's Alley Kids, a great diversion, a family of acrobats, tumblers and contortionists, Prof. Drake's coon plantation quartettes, theatrical specialties, balloon ascensions not merely in day time but at night, at which latter time, the aeronaut will take with him fireworks which he will send off when he is several hundred feet from the earth, Olds' automobile, made at the Crookston bicycle shop from original designs and which will be capable of holding two persons. These and other things too numerous to mention will entertain the crowds in Crookston next week.

LIVE STOCK SHOW.

Here is where the farmers will find not merely delight but instruction. This will be a distinctly educative feature of the doings in the city. Polk county and vicinity is richer in live stock than is commonly supposed and next week will see exhibited in Crookston some of the finest stock raised on the western prairie and a great impetus to cattle raising will given by this show. Enough is already known to indicate that the exhibit will be large.

Prof. Hoverstad informs the JOURNAL that Dean Liggett, of the State Agricultural College, will be here to judge cattle and John Nelson, of Hutchinson, to pick out the prize horses. In effort was made to have Prof. Drew, of the Agricultural College here to judge poultry but he can not come.

The railroads give a one fare rate to Crookston next week and several excursion trains will be run in here. Come on the free one and don't miss any part of the Grand Carnival.

Friday night the three days' festival will go out in a blaze of glory. At that time the most brilliant fireworks will be sent off and a naval battle rivaling in excitement the real thing will take place on the river.

Don't forget the dates, Sept. 27, 28 and 29.

CONGRESSMAN EDDY

Becomes Humorous in Discussing the Philippine Question.

A Washington, D. C. paper publishes the following interview with Frank M. Eddy:

"In my section we have few followers of Atkinson and Aguinaldo. They talk about the terrible war of extermination being carried on in the Philippines, and allude to Aguinaldo as a second George Washington. Whenever I hear one of those curbstone orators talking up in my district, I immediately challenge him to joint debate. The terms I make are most liberal. I offer to allow him to do all the talking, and abuse and traduce the American arms and flag all he desires. The only condition I exact is that when he has talked himself out, and providing there is still an audience who have listened to what he had to say, he proposes three cheers for Aguinaldo, the 'second George Washington'. After he has done this, my proposition is to propose three cheers for the president of the United States and the army and navy of the United States. A count of noses is to be taken as to the number in the audience who side with Aguinaldo and those who vote to sustain this government, and that will settle the debate and the Atkinson disciple."

Building in Jerome's Addition.

During the present year no portion of the city has built up more rapidly than has Jerome's addition and if there is any favorite residence portion of the city that has been the place for the past few months. The JOURNAL has from time to time noted the progress of building operations over there and it is safe to say that only several feet of snow will stop the good work.

One of the last to begin erecting a residence in this addition is Alderman McGregor of the 5th ward. This house will front west on Washington avenue and will be occupied by Mr. McGregor when it is completed. Mr. Schuyler, the plasterer, has already laid the foundation for a large house, and at the south end of Lincoln avenue Mr. Greenbaigh has a house just completed. The carpenter work on M. E. Harbin's dwelling house is finished, the painting is done and it is almost ready to move into. Mr. Brummell's residence also is nearly finished and will be ready for occupation in a few days.

NEW GREAT NORTHERN DEPOT.

Magnificent Brick Structure 328 feet Long—May be Built This Fall.

A new Great Northern railway station in the city of Crookston is not merely an assured fact but it is possible that the building may be erected before winter sets in. Last Saturday F. D. Bell, the local agent, received from the chief engineer of the road the plans and specifications for the new station and bids on this building will be received by the railway up to noon tomorrow, Friday, Sept. 22.

The station is to be of brick with stone facings, 328 feet long, one story, with basement. It will be a passenger station and freight and express depot combined. The ticket office 14 x 18 will be in the centre, and on either side the ladies' and gentlemen's waiting rooms, 30 x 34 each. On the side toward Second street will be the large freight department and on the south side will be the baggage and express rooms. In front of the passenger and baggage department will be a brick platform 16 feet wide.

This will make a building commensurate with the business done at this point by the Great Northern and will be in keeping with the general architectural appearance of the business portion of the city. It is, too, another proof that J. J. Hill is willing to do the right thing by the Queen City of the Valley.

BIDS FOR MACADAM

Received by City Council—Cost Will be From $1.50 to $2 a Yard.

An adjourned meeting of the city council was held last Tuesday evening.

A quit-claim deed having been executed by Adelbert Lytle and Anna his wife for east half of lot seven in block ten in Jerome's addition, being for right of way for street and alley purposes, on motion same was accepted by council and ordered placed on record.

A communication was read from the city engineer referring to the bad condition of Elm street between Fifth and Sixth streets.

On motion the matter was referred to committee on streets and bridges for their attention.

A resolution ordering several new sidewalks to be built in different parts of the city was passed.

On motion city engineer was instructed to make a thorough examination of the condition of the Seventh street bridge and report to council at next meeting.

It was moved and seconded that when council adjourns, it adjourned to meet on Friday the 29th inst. Motion carried.

It was moved and seconded that the chief of fire department be asked to to report to council at next meeting, regarding the purchase of a number feet of hose lately authorized by council. Motion carried.

It was moved and seconded that the chief of police be instructed to notify his assistants to assist the street commissioner to enforce the ordinance in regard to keeping the streets free from waste paper, mill wood or anything that they may see that they consider as a nuisance. Motion carried.

It was moved and seconded that the official paper be requested to make and present its bills for printing monthly. Motion carried.

As per notice given by city engineer, macadam were filed and opened at this time.

It was moved and seconded that the bids for paving and curbing be referred to committee on streets and bridges with instructions to report at next regular meeting and that meantime and at as early a date as practicable, the clerk furnish each member of the council with a copy of the plans and specifications prepared by the city engineer on which the bids are made, and with a copy of each of the bids presented to council. Motion carried.

The bids were made by P. McDonnell, Fitzgerald and Morris, of Duluth, J. Kennedy, of Fargo and J. H. Killman, of Mason City, Iowa, and were from $1.50 to $2.00 per square yard without gutters, the gutter adding to these figures from 25 to 50 cents. Curbing was not included in the above figures.

An exchange says that the Ringling Brothers have purchased three islands off the coast of Florida. These they will use as farms to rear wild animals. The islands are covered with thick undergrowth and the animals will have everything that they could find in their native jungles. They will be allowed perfect liberty in every way and when wanted will be captured in the same manner as when taken from their native heath.

BEST FOOD FOR HENS

Result of Experiments With Poultry Made on Expermental Farms of Canada.

HENS LAY WHEN EGGS HIGH

Careful Feeding—Pullets are Preferable—Plymouth Rocks, Wyandottes and Brahmas Best

The following article, published in The Farmer, is from the pen of Prof. A. G. Gilbert, of Ottawa, Canada. The experiments referred to were made where the climate is quite as cold as in Northern Minnesota, hence the results of those experiments cannot but prove helpful to the farmers in the Red River Valley. It is not too late in the season to adopt the suggestions of Prof. Gilbert and the outcome will be a greater revenue from the poultry.

In order to make the most money out of their poultry the aim of the farmers should be to procure eggs when they are of the highest value, viz., the winter season. He would be considered a poor business man who should hold his goods until they were of the least value and then begin to sell them. Yet it is something akin to this that the farmers are doing with their hens. During winter their laying stock have remained unproductive, probably kept over at a loss. When warm spring weather comes, everybody's hens commence to lay and prices are away down. It is at this time that the hens of the great majority of farmers begin production. A most unbusiness-like proceeding truly! How are eggs to be obtained in winter?

FACTORS IN WINTER EGG PRODUCTION.

There are several important factors in the production of eggs in winter, viz:

1. Laying stock of the proper age, not over two or three years of age.

2. Fairly comfortable quarters consisting of a temperature at which water will not freeze.

3. Proper foods for egg production fed in proper quantities.

4. The keeping of none but the best all-round fowls, that is good winter layers and rapid flesh formers.

5. Intelligent management so that the three great essentials, viz: Meat, green stuff and exercise, are of first importance.

6. The regular supply of pure drink water, grit, dust bath, lime in some form or varied forms, and freedom of stock and quarters from lice.

REASON WHY.

Intelligent readers and thinkers want to know the reason why? (No reason can be kept over two and a half or three years of age, because old hens moult late and are not likely, in consequence, to lay as early in the season of the year as is desirable.) Winter laying should begin in November, by which time the hens with proper care and feeding will be over their moulting and into winter quarters in prime condition.

In order to help shorten the moulting period the hens should be allowed a run in a field, or fields, where they can find clover, grass and flaxseed life. The feeding of cut bone, or cooked meat at this period, in proper quantities, will be found beneficial.

Variety in rations is recommended, because during the long winter term of artificial life and treatment we try to imitate the natural conditions as much as possible. The nearer we come to them the greater our success.

A supply of lime in some form or forms is recommended because in feeding to make the egg we must also remember to give egg shell-making material.

EGG PRODUCING RATIONS.

The aim of the farmer should be to utilize as much as possible of the waste of his farm and house, in the composition of his winter rations. There is really no cast-iron rule as to what should make the rations, but experience has shown that certain forms are most convenient, and certain quantities most effective. A warm mash in winter is a form in which a great deal of waste of farm and house may be used to good effect. We give the following:

Morning Ration.—Mash, composed of whatever ground grains are most abundant on the farm, mixed with boiled vegetables, such as potato pealings, unmarketable turnips, carrots, mangels, etc. Mix with boiling water into a "crumbly" condition. Steamed clover hay, cut into small pieces, and mixed in the mash occasionally is excellent. Feed three or four mornings of the week and in proportion of one quart to every fifteen hens. The object is to feed enough of the mash to barely satisfy and certainly not to gorge. A few pinches of salt and a modicum of black pepper may be mixed into the mash with good effect. Other mornings of the week feed cut green bones in proportion of one pound to every fifteen or sixteen hens. Where green bones cannot be had, break up beef heads, sheep heads, etc. Meat in some shape is necessary to successfully make egg production. After feeding the mash, or cut bone in quantities named, throw two or three full hands of grain into the litter on the floor of the pens and so incite the hens to exercise in searching for it. Not being filled to repletion at the first ration, they are likely to look for the grain. The object is to keep the hens busy during the whole day.

NOON RATION.

Two or three more handfuls of grain may be thrown into the litter to still keep the layers busy. Mangels, carrots, turnips or beets should be in regular supply at all times. All the unmarketable vegetables of the farm can be put to good use in this way. Lawn clippings, steamed during early morning, during night previous, and fed a little before noon will be eaten with great relish. A liberal quantity may be given. The lawn clippings are saved and cured during summer and when steamed become quite green.

It is beyond cavil a cheap and beneficial form of green stuff. Indeed, it is comparative waste put to good account. A result of the morning and noon rations, fed as described was noted in the increased quantity of green stuff and grit eaten. And it is desirable that it should be so.

AFTERNOON RATION.

The afternoon ration should be of whole and sound grain, wheat or buckwheat preferred. In cold weather corn may be fed to the Mediterranean class, but in very small quantities to the Asiatics and American classes. Throw the grain into the litter on the floor and feed early enough to permit of the fowls searching for it.

Use intelligence and observation in the feeding of the rations. Vary them in composition and time of feeding. That is feed the mash for the last ration at times and then again the cut bone, but always have pure water, grit and green stuff in constant supply and keep the layers as busy as possible, from morn to time to going to roost. If you find the quantities named not quite sufficient for the Mediterranean breeds, give a little more, as the experience of many years has proved to the writer that more disaster has been occasioned by overfeeding to over-crowded stock in winter quarters more particularly at the morning mash than by any other cause. If fed and treated as above, eggs in winter are likely to come and there will be a feeling that the vexatious so common in winter, of egg eating and feather picking.

FOWLS FOR THE FARMER.

The experience of many years in a cold climate shows that beyond question the best fowls for the farmers are Plymouth Rocks, Wyandottes and Brahmas, with preference for the first two breeds named. Why? Because they are good winter layers and their progeny make rapid flesh formers.

MANAGEMENT OF PULLETS.

What is wanted is an early pullet to begin to lay when the older hens are moulting. Not so easy to do as say. Granted, but quite within bounds, if a good incubator is used and early eggs are fertile. But it is at once said farmers have either incubators now do their hens sit early. As to the latter if their hens laid well in winter, they ought to do and will do if fed and treated—there would be early sitters. As to the artificial hatching and rearing of early chicks, the exigencies of demand will force attention to the subject, particularly where farmers are near large markets.

The pullets will stand more forcing than the older hens. Indeed, the rearing that make pullets lay well will probably make older hens too fat. Again intelligence and observation must be called into play. Give a little cut bone or mash every day, perhaps a little of both every day. But be cautious. If found too stimulating decrease to mash three times per week and cut bone, or meat for remaining mornings. But it must be borne in mind that in order to have early laying pullets, or plump, hearty weight cockerels for market, the chickens must be carefully attended to and regularly fed from time of hatching, particularly during the first five weeks of their lives. Experience has shown that a chick neglected during that period so that it becomes "stunted," never afterwards completely recovers.

The above hints are briefly given in the hope of good results following. The enterprise and intelligence of your western farmers are proverbial. The markets for winter eggs and first class poultry are simply unlimited. Is the genius of the western farmer equal to his opportunities? Doubtless it is. Then be up and doing.

NEW WATER WORKS

Will be Completed in November and the City Will Have the Purest of Water.

NEW OFFICE AND RESERVOIR

Just Across G. N. Tracks on Robert Street—Work on These is Being Pushed Rapidly.

Superintendent Peterson, of the Crookston Water Works, Power and Light Company, is one of the busiest men in town these days. In addition to his usual duties of superintending the work at the Power House, that is, the work of pumping the water into the mains and the manufacturing of the electricity with which the city is lighted and much of its machinery run, he has now in charge several gangs of men all of whom are working upon the extensive improvements which are being made in the water works system.

The pipes from the infiltration gallery in Jerome's addition are now practically all laid and the connections are all made. The original intention was to run these pipes down to the old power house and, indeed, this idea was abandoned not many weeks ago. The mains from Jerome's addition come up Fletcher street and as soon as they crossed the Great Northern railway track were turned north and will be connected with the pumps at the new power house and uptown office which will be built near where the old Great Northern round house was.

At this place Mr. Peterson is now engaged in constructing a huge reservoir that will, when completed, have a depth of about forty-five feet and a diameter of forty feet, being capable of holding 250,000 gallons of water. A gang of about twenty-five men is now working upon this reservoir. The arrangement is a rather peculiar one but ingenious and is working satisfactorily. The brick sides or walls of the reservoir, circular in form, are from a foot to eighteen inches wide. In order to prevent the earth from caving in as the digging went on, the building of the walls began shortly after the digging commenced and when the centre of the reservoir is dug several feet below the bottom of the walls, the men are placed at regular intervals and the undermining of the walls begins, the sand and the surface water which accumulates at the bottom of the excavation is pumped out with a centrifugal pump which is run by a steam engine in a small shanty right at the side of the reservoir.

As soon as the reservoir is completed and the work on it is being pushed rapidly, the new power house and office will be erected just south of the reservoir. It is expected that water from the new intake pipe will be on tap in the houses of the city within the next eight weeks. When this is the case Crookston will be supplied with the purest of water as there is nothing better than the natural filter bed in Jerome's addition, through which all the water to be used in the city will flow.

THE SHELSTAD CONCERT.

The Violinist Delights a Crookston Audience with his Music.

Mr. J. Shelstad, the violinist, appeared before a Crookston audience last Tuesday evening for the first time since his return from Germany where he spent the last five years studying under specialists. The audience was not as large as Mr. Shelstad deserved to have but those who were present were more than satisfied with the entertainment. He is certainly a master of the violin, handling his chosen instrument with the ease and skill that belongs only to genius. The selections which he gave were of the most complex music but he executed them with a finish and smoothness that delighted his audience. Music lovers in the city will eagerly watch for announcement of Mr. Schelstad's next concert. Mr. Schelstad was ably assisted by Mrs. Riggs, pianist, and Miss Estenson vocalist.

Thomas Miller, of Jackson county, Minn., writes in the Farm, Stock and Home of "a yellow dent corn that if planted the middle of May will be out of the danger of frost by the 10th to 15th of August and one-third will be hard, and husk dry by that date. I practice level and clean cultivation and the average yield is 50 to 60 bushels per acre. This year it will be far above those figures.

THE DRUMS OF THE FORE AND AFT.

By RUDYARD KIPLING.

CONTINUED FROM LAST WEEK.

I kissed her in the kitchen and I kissed her in the hall,
Chi-hi-hoa, child'un, follow me!
Oh, golly, said the cook, he is gwine to kiss us all!
Ha-ha—ha-ha—haila ballelujah!

The Ghirkhas were pouring through the left gorge and over the heights at the double to the invitation of their regimental quickstep. The black rocks were crowned with dark green spiders as the bugles gave tongue jubilantly:

In the morning—in the morning by the bright light!
When Gabriel blows his trumpet in the morning!

The Ghirkha rear companies tripped and blundered over loose stones. The front files halted for a moment to take stock of the valley and to settle stray boot laces. Then a happy little sigh of contentment sonpghed down the ranks, and it was as though the land settled, for behold there below was the enemy, and it was to meet them that the Ghirkhas had doubled so hastily. There was much enemy. There would be amusement. The little men hitched their kukris well to hand and gaped expectantly at their officers as terriers grin ere the stone is cast for them to fetch. The Gurkhas' ground sloped downward to the valley, and they enjoyed a fair view of the proceedings. They sat upon the bowlders to watch, for their officers were not going to waste their wind in hamstring to rejoin a Ghazi rush more than half a mile away. Let the white men look to their own front.

"Hi, yi!" said the subadar major, who was sweating profusely. "Dam fools crawlers, stand close order! This is no time for close order; it's the time for volleys. Ugh!"

Horrified, amused and indignant, the Gurkhas beheld the retirement—let us be gentle—of the Fore and Aft with a running clatter of outraged commentaries.

"They run! The white men run! Colonel Sahib, may we also do a little running?" murmured Runbir Thappa, the senior jemadar.

But the colonel would have none of it. "Let the beggars be cut up a little," said he wrathfully. "Serves 'em right. They'll be prodded into facing round in a minute." He looked through his field-glasses and caught the glint of an officer's sword.

"Beating 'em with the flat—damned conscripts! How the Ghazis are walking into them!" said he.

The Fore and Aft, heading back, here with them their officers. The narrowness of the pass forced the mob into solid formation, and the rear rank delivered some sort of a wavering volley. The Ghazis drew off, for they did not know what reserves the gorge might hide. Moreover, it was never wise to chase white men too far. They returned as wolves return to cover, satisfied with the slaughter that they had done and only stopping to slash at the wounded on the ground. A quarter of a mile had the Fore and Aft retreated, and now, jammed in the pass, was quivering with pain, shaken and demoralized with fear.

"Get back! Get back, you cowards—you women! Right-about face—column of companies, form—you hounds!" shouted the colonel, and the subalterns drove aloud. But the regiment wanted to go—to go anywhere out of the range of these merciless knives. Isaways to and fro irresistibly with shouts and entreaties, while from the right the Gurkhas dropped volley after volley of cripple stopper Snider bullets at long ranges in to the mob of the Ghazis returning to their own front.

The Fore and Aft band, though protected from direct fire by the rocky knoll under which it had sat down, fled at the first rush. Jakin and Lew would have fled also, but their short legs left them 50 yards in the rear, and by the time the band had mixed with the regiment they were painfully aware that they would have to close in alone and unsupported.

"Get back to that rock," gasped Jakin. "They won't see us there."

And they returned to the scattered instruments of the band, their hearts nearly bursting their ribs.

"Here's a nice show for us," said Jakin, throwing himself full length on the ground. "A bloomin fine show for British infantry! Oh, the devils! They've gone an left us alone here! Wot'll we do?"

Lew took possession of a cast off water bottle, which naturally was full of canteen rum, and drank till he coughed again.

"Drink!" said he shortly. "They'll come back in a minute or two—you see."

Jakin drank, but there was no sign of the regiment's return. They could hear a dull clamor from the head of the valley of retreat, and saw the Ghazis shake back, quickening their pace as the Gurkhas fired at them.

"We're all that's left of the band, an we'll be cut up as sure as death," said Jakin.

"I'll die game, then," said Lew thickly, fumbling with his tiny drummer's sword. The rum was working on his brain as it was on Jakin's.

"Old on! I know something better than fallin' back, stung by the splendor of a sudden thought due chiefly to rum. "Tip our bloomin cowards yonder the word to come back. The Paythan beggars are well away. Come on, Lew! We won't get hurt. Take the fife an give me the drum. The old Step' for all your bloomin guts are worth! There's a few o' our men comin back now. Stand up, you drunken little defaulter! By your right—quick march!"

He slipped the drum sling over his shoulder, thrust the fife into Lew's hand, and the two boys marched out of the cover of the rock into the open, making a hideous hash of the first bars of the "British Grenadiers." —

As Lew and said, a few of the Fore and Aft were coming back sullenly and shamefacedly under the stimulus of blows and abuse. Their red coats showed at the head of the valley, and behind them were wavering bayonets. But between this shattered line and the enemy, who with Afghan suspicion feared that the hasty retreat meant an ambush and had not moved therefore, lay half a mile of a level ground dotted only by the wounded.

The tune settled into full swing, and the boys kept shoulder to shoulder, Jakin banging the drum as one possessed. The one fife made a thin and pitiful squealing, but the tune carried far, even to the Ghurkhas.

"Come on, you dogs!" muttered Jakin to himself. "Are we to play for ever?" Lew was staring straight in front of him and marching more stiffly than ever he had done on parade.

And in bitter mockery of the distant mob the old tune of the old line shrilled and rattled:

Some talk of Alexander
And some of Hannibal,
Of Hector and Lysander
And such great names as these!

There was a faroff clapping of hands from the Gurkhas and a roar from the highlanders that a Ghazi had never a shot was fired by British or Afghan. The two little red dots moved forward in the open ground to the enemy's front.

But of all the world's great heroes
There's none that can compare
With a tow-row-row-row-row-row,
To the British grenadier!

The men of the Fore and Aft were gathering thick at the entrance into the plain. The brigadier on the heights far above was speechless with rage. Still no movement from the enemy. The day staid to watch the children.

Jakin halted and beat the long roll of the assembly, while the fife squealed despairingly.

"Right about face! Hold up, Lew—you're drunk!" and Jakin. They wheeled and marched back.

Those heroes of seventy
Ne'er saw a reason half
Nor knew the force of pooder—
"Here they come!" said Jakin. "Go on, Lew!"

Ye scare their foes withal!

The Fore and Aft were pouring out of the valley. What officers had said to men in that time of shame and humiliation will never be known, for neither officers nor men ever speak of it now.

"They are coming anew!" shouted a priest among the Afghuns. "Do not kill them with stones; them alive and they shall be of our faith."

But the first volley had been fired, and have dropped on the focus. Jakin retood for a minute, spun round and collapsed, as the Fore and Aft came forward, the maledictions of their officers in their ears and in their hearts the shame of their abasement.

Half the men had seen the drummers die, and they made no sign. They did not even halt a shoot. They stabbed out straight across the plain in open order, and they did not fire.

"Get back to your colonel of Gurkhas softly, "is the real attack, as it ought to have been delivered. Come on, my children."

"Ulu-lu-lu-lu!" squealed the Gurkhas, and came down with a jaytril clicking of kukris' three vicious Gurkha knives.

On the right there was no rush. The highlanders, cannily commending their souls to God (for it matters as much to a dead man whether he has been shot in a border scuffle or at Waterloo), opened out and fired according to their custom, independent fort aforementioned, dropped shelf after shelf into the Gnsters round the flickering green standards on the heights.

"Chargrin is an unfortunate necessity," murmured the color sergeant of the right company of the highlanders.

"It makes the men sweer so, but I am thinkin that it will come to a charge if these black devils stand much longer. Stewart, man, you're firin into the eys of the sun, and he'll not take any harm for government ammunition. A foot lower and a great deal slower! What are the English doin? They're very quiet there in the center. Runnin again?"

The English were not running. They were bucking and bewing and stabbing, for, though one white man is seldom physically a match for an Afghan in a stampeding or washed coat, yet through the pressure of many white men behind and a certain thirst for revenge in his heart he became capable of doing much with both ends of his rifle. The Fore and Aft held their fire till one bullet could drive through five or six men, and the front of the Afghan force gave on the volley. They then selected their men and slew them with deep gasps and short hacking coughs and groanings of inner bells against strained bodies and realized for the first time that an Afghan attacked is far less formidable than an Afghan attacking, which fact old soldiers might have told them.

But they had no old soldiers in their ranks.

The Gurkhas' stoll at the bazaar was the noiciest, for the men were engaged —to a nasty noise, an of beef hoing cut on the block—with the kukri, which they preferred to the bayonet, well knowing how the Afghan hates the half moon blade.

As the Afghans wavered the green standards on the mountain moved down to assist them in a last rush. The charge was unwise. The lancers, chafing in the right gorge, had thrice dispatched their only subaltern as galloper to report on the progress of affairs. On the third occasion he returned with a bullet grazy on his knee, swearing strange oaths in Hindostanee and saying that all things were ready. So that squadron swung round the right of the highlanders with a wicked whistling of wind in the pennons of the lances and fell upon the remnant just when, according to all the rules of war, it should have waited for the foe to show more signs of wavering.

But it was a dainty charge, deftly delivered, and it ended by the cavalry finding itself at the head of the pass by which the Afghans intended to retreat, and down the track that the lances had made streamed two companies of highlanders, which was never intended by the brigadier. The new development was successful. It detached the enemy from his base as a sponge is torn from a rock and left him ringed about with fire in that pitiless plain. And as a sponge is chased round the bathtub by the hand of the bather, so were the Afghans chased till they broke into little detachments much more difficult to dispose of than large masses.

"See!" quoth the brigadier. "Everything has come as I arranged. We've cut their base, and now we'll bucket 'em to pieces."

A direct hammering was all that the brigadier had dared to hope for, considering the size of the force at his disposal, but men who stand or fall by the errors of their opponents may be forgiven for turning chance into design. The bucketing went forward merrily. The Afghan forces were upon the run —the run of wearied wolves who snarl and bite over their shoulders. The red lances dipped by twos and threes, and, with a shriek, up rose the lance head, like a spar on a stormy sea, as the trooper, cantering forward, cleared his point. The lancers kept between their prey and the steep hills, for all who could were trying to escape from the valley of death. The highlanders gave the fugitives 200 yards' law, and then brought them down, growling and chuckling as they could reach the protection of the bowlders above. The Gurkhas followed suit, but the Fore and Aft were lining on their own account, for they had peaned a mass of men between their bayonets and a wall of rock, and the flash of the rifles was lighting the wadded coats.

"We cannot hold them, Captain Sahib!" panted a rescaldar of lancers. "Let us let the ghazis. The lance is good, but it wastes time."

They tried the carbine, and still the enemy melted away—fled up the hills by hundreds when there were only 20 bullets to stop them. On the heights the guns ceased firing—they had to be sent out of ammunition—and the brigadier groaned, for the unsultry fire could not sufficiently smash the retreat. Just before the last volleys were fired the little men ran in force looking for the wounded. The battle was over, and there for want of fresh troops the Afghans could have been cut to pieces at their ease. As it was they counted their dead by hundreds, and nowhere were the dead thicker than in the track of the Fore and Aft.

But the regiment did not cheer with the highlanders, nor did they dance seuth dances with the Gurkhas among the dead. They looked under their brows at the colonel as they leaned upon their rifles and panted.

"Get back to your camp, you! Haven't you disgraced yourself enough for one day? Go and look to the wounded. It's all you're fit for," said the colonel. Yet for the past hour the Fore and Aft had been doing all that mortal commander could expect. They had lost heavily because they did not know how to set about their business with proper skill, but they had borne themselves gallantly, and this was their reward.

A young and sprightly color sergeant, who had begun to imagine himself a hero, offered his water bottle to a highlander whose tongue was black with thirst. "I drink with no comrade," answered the youngster huskily, and, turning to a Gurkha, he said: "Bye, Johnny! Drink water got it!" The Gurkha grinned and passe? his bottle. The Fore and Aft said no word.

They went back to camp when the field of strife had been a little mopped up and made presentable, and the brigadier, who saw himself a knight a few months, was the only soul who was complimentary to them. The colonel was heartbroken and the officers were savage and sullen.

"Well," said the brigadier, "they are young troops, of course, and it was not unnatural that they should retire in disorder for a bit."

"Oh, my only Aunt Maria!" murmured a junior staff officer. "Retire in disorder! It was a bally run!"

"But they came again, as we all know," cooed the brigadier, the colonel's baby white before him, "and they behaved as well se could possibly be expected—behaved beautifully indeed. I was watching them. It's not a matter to take to heart, colonel. As some German general said of his men, they wanted to be shooted over a little—that was all." To himself he said: "Now he's bloodied, I can give 'em responsible work. It's as well that they got what they did. Teach 'em more than half a dozen rifle flirtations that will—later—run alone and bite. Cheer up, old colonel, though!"

All that afternoon the heliograph winked and flickered on the hills, striving to tell the good news to a mountain 40 miles away. And in the evening there arrived—dusty, sweating and sore —a misguided correspondent who had gone out to assist at a Pharmpuy which burning and who had read off the message from afar, cursing his luck the while.

"Let's have the details somehow—as full as ever you can, please. It's the first time I've ever been left the pace paign," said the correspondent to the brigadier, and the brigadier, nothing loath, told him how an army of ammunition had been crumpled up, destroyed and all but annihilated by the craft, strategy, wisdom and foresight of the brigadier.

But some say, and among these ha the Gurkhas who watched on the hillside, that that battle was won by Jakin and Lew, whose little bodies were borne up just in time to fit two gaps at the head of the big ditch grave for the dead under the heights of Jagai.

FARM and GARDEN

GRAIN-BAG HOLDERS.

They Save Much Heavy Lifting and Keep Many Hands and Fingers From Getting Tired.

The old proverb, "Make your head save your heels," might well be extended to include fingers where grain bags are held by hand, as they very generally are. There is, perhaps, no form convenience so easy to make that will save so much lifting and so many tired hands and fingers as bag-holders. Here are several based upon the same principle.

The stationary one illustrated in Figs. 1 and 2 is made as follows: Take a piece of flat iron rod about six feet long, one inch wide and one-fourth of an inch thick, with some spring to it. Bend it till it takes the form shown in Fig. 1, with the short end A below the long one and sprung downward from it, so as to leave a hand's breadth between the two parts that would otherwise touch. Cut several notches half an inch deep and slightly more than a point B, six or eight inches from where the two ends cross, give the long end a twist and a bend downward as shown in Fig. 2. In the long end bore some holes for screws, and fasten the now complete bag-holder to a post, the side of a granary or bin, or other convenient object where the grain is to be handled.

When a bag is to be filled slip the mouth around the iron circle previously set by the last notch from the end A. Engage the cloth with the four short, blunt spikes C, C, C, C, that should be added to prevent slipping. Loosen the end A, and let another notch engage with the end B. It takes but a moment to put on or take off the bag, which is held firmly.

The same holder may be made portable in two ways; first, by the use of brackets such as shown in Fig. 3. These may be screwed to any convenient object in any place desired, the end B being slipped in and taken out at will. The second way is to make of a piece of gas or other iron pipe securely screwed to a plank, as shown in Fig. 4. The end should be slightly bent over the top. The advantage of this latter arrangement is that the bag-holder may be taken anywhere about the farm, even to the field when necessary.

One thing that must be borne in mind in making these bag-holders is that they must not be so high above the ground that the bag will be suspended. The bottom of the bag must rest upon the ground, else the weight and the jar will cause the grain to loose in a short time. The holder is for keeping the mouth of the sack open, not for lifting it any more.—M. G. Kains, in Farm and Fireside.

TALK ABOUT CLOVER.

How Rain and Excessive Soil Moisture Affects Its Value as a Food for Live Stock.

I have noticed recently that there have been some inquiries in regard to clover, as to whether it would cause scours when fed to young stock.

Of course in a very wet season, such as we have passed in 1899, any kind of season, clover, as well as grasses, would be inferior in nutrition compared with crops grown in a dry season, either fed dry or green. It may contain the properties when grown in a wet season that will cause scours. I am sure of one thing, that in a wet season clover does not contain very many fat producing constituents, for it is as much as stock can do to hold the fat they have gained, even when the clover and grass growth is luxuriant; while in a dry season, even with a shortage, stock will fatten.

Clover is the best foliage plant we have, notwithstanding the foregoing conclusions, especially for cattle. There is some objection to it for horse feed, but with a proper care in cutting at the right time, and curing without any exposure to dew or rain, this trouble can be entirely overcome. The objection to clover for horse feed is in the fine form on the leaves and stems of the plant, which is carried into the lungs of the horse by the breath while he is eating. I have learned of late by actual experience that if clover is cut early enough those particles will adhere to the stems and can be swallowed and digested without any bad effect whatever. To avoid this trouble clover should be cut before many of the heads begin to turn brown, and should not be exposed, when partially dried, to dews.—C. D. Bent, in Rural World.

In fertilizing pastures never neglect grass manure, which disgusts the cows. Use prepared fertilizers.

Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of fifteen hundred twenty-eight and 92-100 dollars, which is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Isabelle L. Chilcott and John Chilcott her husband, mortgagors, to George Q. Crosby mortgagee, bearing date the 7th day of June and with power of sale therein contained, which said mortgage was filed in the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 8th day of June 1895, at 11 o'clock a. m. In book 62 of mortgages, on page 40-42 and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in said mortgage, to-wit: Lots numbered one (1) and three (3) and four (4) of block numbered one hundred (100) in addition to the town site of Crookston, according to the recorded plat thereof on file in office of the Register of Deeds in and for Polk County and State of Minnesota in Polk County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Polk County at the front door of the court house in the City of Crookston in said County and State, on the 1st day of December 1899, at ten o'clock a. m. of that day, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash to pay said debt and interest, and taxes, if any, on said premises and fifty dollars, attorney's fee stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Admiral Dewey's Kindness.

Admiral Dewey, learning that a British gunner had been crippled by the explosion of a cannon while firing a salute in honor of the great sailor's arrival at Gibraltar, hastened to the cot of the wounded man, talked with him at considerable length, inquired as to his future, and left him a snug sum of money as a present from the Olympia's gallant crew. This kind act was as characteristic of the admiral's whole nature as was the dash into Manila bay, and was but another of the many incidents which have stamped George Dewey as among the truly great.

NEWS IN MINNESOTA

Two arrests have been made at Glyndon for blind pigging.

Work is to be commenced at once on a flax fibre mill at Moorhead.

The census of Buffalo, which has just been taken, shows the present population to be 1,078.

Willmar has a case of smallpox, imported from Montana. The man was found ill in the depot waiting room.

The state board of equalization has increased considerably the valuation of household furniture and office furniture.

The Honston County bank has received authority from the public examiner to increase its capital from $18,000 to $30,000.

A case of smallpox has appeared at the Presidio hospital in San Francisco. None of the Minnesota troops are likely to be affected.

Among the passengers on the White Star liner Oceanic was the Rt. Rev. James McGolrick, bishop of Duluth. He has been to Rome.

There is a project to construct a railway into the Rainy river gold district and develop the immense water power at Koochiching, Minn.

Captain H. S. Crossfield of Browns Valley has been appointed a captain for service in one of the ten regiments now being mustered for the Philippines.

Robert Stuart, in the general mercantile business at Wiudom, has filed a petition in bankruptcy. The assets foot up $16,126 and the liabilities $12,031.

The Bank of Spring Valley has been reorganized into a state bank and capitalized with $30,000. There are 14 stockholders, including the owners of the old bank.

Duluth school board has been economizing for two years and begins the school year with a $400,000 balance, instead of an overdraft, as it did two years ago.

Hon. J. F. Rousse, ex-judge of probate of Beltrami county, is dead. He was state senator from Winona some years ago and for 12 years was sheriff of Lyon county.

Nearly 200 United States senators and congressmen are expected to be of the party that will make a tour of the proposed national park in Minnesota, beginning Sept. 28.

Niles Grisard, aged 18, son of Engineer F. F. Griswold of the Great Northern, was accidentally shot and killed by a companion while hunting prairie chickens near Barnesville.

Burglars entered the postoffice at Parker's Prairie and made an unsuccessful attempt to blow the safe. They secured $3 in the out-side drawer and took some small articles of merchandise. No definite clue.

The railway commissioners have fixed upon Sept. 26 and 27 as the dates for examining the narrow gauge roads from Preston to Reno, and from Zumbrota to Wabasha, with a view to the enforcement of the law in relation to these two roads.

It is announced that the Eastern Minnesota will at once build an extension up the Mississippi valley, north from Dilden to Mississippi, the southernmost station of the extension on the Mesaba route. The new extension will be about 100 miles long and it will tap a heavily timbered section of territory.

Henry W. Stevens, the millionaire lumberman of Detroit, Mich., has disposed of a large tract of pine land in the Duluth district to the Northern Lumber company of Cloquet, Minn. There is said to be 35,000,000 feet in the tract. The consideration was $300,000, which was paid in one New York draft.

H. W. Oliver, James Gayley and C. D. Pearse of Pittsburg, heads of the new Carnegie iron ore railway and the Carnegie Mining company, are making a trip over the Minnesota ranges accompanied by Dr. N. P. Hulst, general manager, and T. F. Cole, general superintendent of the mining company. They have just closed a deal for the purchase of the Aurora mine and are looking for more.

A colony of about 75 families from the vicinity of Butterfield, this state, mostly Germans, have purchased 3,000 acres of land of the Omaha railway, a few miles east of Shell Lake, Wis. It will be called the Christian Social Organization, and all lands will be held in common. The land is now mostly cleared and houses and barns built. The railway company has put in a siding. The station and postoffice will be called Sarona.

Ten thousand of German Catholic Central societies and kindred organizations from various sections of the state joined in a monster demonstration Sunday afternoon at St. Paul. The marching hosts were viewed by thousands on the down town streets. As the opening feature of the annual convention of the German Catholic Society of North America the street parade was distinctively a great success, and one of the largest that has been seen in St. Paul.

An official of the Indian office will soon visit Cass Lake with a view of examining the land embraced within the present claim of Mrs. Lydick for allotments at that place. The secretary of the interior recently rejected a claim of Mrs. Lydick for allotments which touch a part of the townsite. The land involved was on part of section 15, whereas the present claim involves part of section 10 and another tract in the vicinity. The claims of the Lydicks have been indefinite, and it has been decided to send an official to investigate the matter.

Killed on a Thresher.

MINNEOTA, Minn., Sept. 20.—Martin Ashum, a thresher, living nine miles west of here, met with a fatal accident while oiling his engine. His coat sleeve caught in the gearing, which drew his arm between the gears and tore it out at the shoulder. The unfortunate man lived only a few hours.

Polk County Journal,
BY N. S. GORDON.

Subscription $1.50 per year in advance

Entered at the postoffice at Crookston, Minnesota, as second-class matter.

Cass Lake Times: N. S. Gordon, editor of the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL, is an optimist. He has fitted up his plant with an Optimus press and folder, and is making that old sheet blossom like a green bay tree planted by the rivers of water; yea, 'tis like old wine, improved with age. Indeed, it has reached that stage of improvement where it can be said that there is not a better-edited, cleaner and newsier weekly in the northern part of the state.

He is, indeed, a dashing individual who dashes off editorials for the Fargo Forum.

Or the two As, Atkinson and Aguinaldo, we have been wondering which the populists considered A, No. 1.

EX-SECRETARY of war, General Alger, has given it out that he will not be a candidate for the United States senatorship from Michigan. It looks as if Alger had had enough of politics.

C. A. PILLSBURY, the "Flour-King" died at Minneapolis last Sunday. He is universally spoken of as a kind hearted, generous man, and undoubtedly through his great business ability he did at least as much as any other man to build up the industrial life of Minneapolis.

THE editor of the Detroit Record through the columns of his paper is waging a vigorous campaign against the forces of evil in that city and in behalf of purity. The pen is mighty and in the hand of such a forcible writer and in such a good cause is sure to be productive of beneficial results.

THE pains that the state board of health were at to inform the local boards of health throughout the state that all children must be vaccinated have gone for naught, as the state attorney says the order cannot be enforced. The boys and girls, however, who were vaccinated do not consider that their pains amount to nothing.

PRYAN'S hope that he might win the electoral vote of the New England States at the next election is shattered, for leading democrats as well as republicans are of the opinion, after carefully inquiring into the matter, that New England as of yore will stand by the republican nominee for the presidency and this nominee will be William McKinley.

CROOKSTON is preparing for a big time of three days beginning with next Wednesday. Many and varied are the attractions which are in store for the thousands who will then congregate in the streets of Crookston. Harvest is over and the grain is garnered. The farmers, therefore, owe it to themselves and their families to take a few holidays after their hard summer's work. Come in and enjoy yourselves.

THE stock exhibit alone is well worth coming to the Street Carnival to see and inspect. Here will be a chance for the farmer to see what kind of stock is being raised in other localities near here other than his own. It is by comparing notes with neighbors that the farmer is enabled to progress, and where will he have a better opportunity to do this than at the Crookston Street Carnival? The best live stock in the valley will be here and no one interested in this should lose such a chance to obtain valuable knowledge on the stock question.

A LARGE and liberal premium list has been prepared by the managers of the Crookston Street Carnival and it will repay the farmers to bring in their stock and enter them. Not merely are the prizes liberal but a man gains a great deal by letting others know about the quantity and quality of his stock. It will be noised, too, that the prizes this year are cash prizes, which ought to be an incentive to every farmer to compete.

ADMIRAL DEWEY, two years ago, was a comparatively unknown man, today none is more prominent. Within this short period he has accomplished a great work and has done it well. Not merely the United States but the world justly honors him. But it ought to be remembered that during the preceding years he was storing up, so to speak, the strength and force of character which enabled him to do great deeds, when the opportunity offered, and win the plaudits of the world. The silent years behind him spoke most eloquently in Manila harbor.

PRESIDENT MCKINLEY is arranging to be in Minneapolis about Oct. 13, at which time the soldiers of the 13th Regiment, it is expected, will reach home. On this occasion Mr. McKinley will deliver one of those frank, clear-cut, forcible and statesmanlike addresses for which he is noted. Minnesota will be honored in this contemplated visit of the head of the nation and the state will do honor to him by tendering him a reception befitting the high office he holds and the dignity of our commonwealth.

AGUINALDO and his followers constitute but a small minority of the people of the Philippines and yet our demo-pop friends ask us to surrender ignominiously to these few. Supposing for the nonce we accept the misinterpretations of the doctrine of "the consent of the governed" which Atkinson et al have been making, it would prove a boomerang to these anti-expansionists, for the consent of a majority of the Filipinos would have to be had and in that case the government would not be placed in the hands of Aguinaldo for there are in the Philippine Islands more natives friendly to the United States than opposed.

THE streets in the business portion of Crookston will be paved with macadam next spring. The rock that will be used will be crushed this winter. Now the farmers in these parts who have rock on some portions of their land will do well to get this stone in such shape that they can handle it and haul it into the city after the snow comes. The rock will be bought from those at home, if they get it in here on time, otherwise the city will be forced to ship it in. A good price will be paid for this paving material and the farmers thus have a chance to make some money out of that which is useless to them.

A COUNTRY newspaper is usually local in its news and the very people who might make it bright and suggestive are those who complain most loudly of its meagre character. Short articles pertaining to local interests are always welcomed in its columns, and the men and women who most desire to make home life in the country rich and influential can best do so by contributing freely to its columns of what they have in mind. In some places this has been done and the result in the quickened life of the community has been gratifying.—Boston Herald. The JOURNAL is always glad to get contributions. If anything happens in your neighborhood send us word of it. Others will eagerly read the news and we will willingly publish it.

THE honor of Crookston should be upheld at all times. We do not like to see the banner of the Queen City trailed in the dust. Whether it is a horse trade, a land deal, a pugilistic encounter no matter what it is, we are anxious to see the representative of this city come out ahead. We are, therefore, much grieved over a little matter that recently occurred and in consequence we strongly advise a certain gentleman in the city when he next goes to the Twin Cities to put on his fighting clothes.

SAN LANGUM, who has been petted and pampered by the republican party for years far beyond his deserts, and who, like some others we wot of, believes that it is the duty of the party to always keep a fat office reserved for his own private use, has thus early announced his candidacy for the nomination for secretary of state next year. —Warren Register. Evidently there are others besides the editor of the Alexandria Post News who are opposed to Mr. Langum's candidacy and in their case it cannot even be said that they are sore because they were defeated by Mr. Langum for the presidency of the State Editorial Association.

THE present law is very stringent in the matter of the attendance at school of children between the ages of 8 and 16. Parents or guardians must allow children of school age to go to school. The penalty for the breaking of this law is very severe. The school board also may appoint truant officers whose duty it shall be to investigate all cases of non-attendance. The small boy, therefore, or large boy for that matter, who inexcusably absents himself from the school room will find his pathway strewn with even less flowers than of yore. The future welfare of the nation depends upon the education which the youth of the land receive. It is right, then, that the state should decree that the boys and girls, until they reach a certain age, shall go to school.

PROMINENT men from all parts of the United States met at Chicago, upon invitation of the civil federation of that city, to discuss the general question of trusts and trade combinations. Men of different views upon the subject were heard and some notable contributions to the literature upon trusts were made. While no definite action was taken the conference cannot but prove a source of education upon this all important question. A clear distinction must be drawn between monopolistic trusts, which tends to decrease production and shut off competition, and industrial combinations which are the outgrowth of the present trade conditions and which aim to increase production. Burke Cockran, of New York, proposed, as a remedy for the evil, that the light of publicity be let in upon all the doings of these monopolistic aggregations of wealth, while Mr. Bryan advocated the killing of the trusts by legislation.

Farmers and Threshers.

Four threshermen in this city claim that they were hired by a certain farmer near here for $2.25 a day, that they worked ten days and that the farmer would only settle for $1.10 a day, besides this charged the men twenty-five cents for a ride to and from the city. The men are indignant and if their claim is true, are righteously so. It is a very mean order of a human being who will in any way try to take advantage of threshermen in his employ.—Crookston Tribune.

It sometimes happens the other way. The JOURNAL knows of a case within a few miles of Crookston, where a farmer had his threshers all hired at $2 a day, everybody and everything in the field ready to begin, when suddenly the men struck and demanded $2.25 a day. The demand was granted as the delay occasioned by going after men would have cost more than the extra 25 cents a day.

WANTED—At the JOURNAL office a boy to learn the printer's trade.

Notes From Exchanges.

Faribault Republican: The sales of prison twine last year show a profit of over $8,000 to the state. Is it remembered what a howl was raised by the demo-pops over the mismanagement and corruption in the state prison twine department? Since the report was rendered that dog, as a dog, hasn't been of much account.

Ada Herald: Henry Henderson came up from Halstad this morning. He said he cut over several hundred acres of his grain which was struck by hail and managed to gather enough for seed next year. In answer to a question if he got enough to pay for the work of gathering and threshing he said if it had paid a farmer would not have to raise more than one or two crops to become rich.

Red Lake Falls Gazette: Red Lake Falls has the first branch of the Social Democratic party organized in Minnesota, and its charter, signed by no less a person than Eugene V. Debs, hangs in the office of the president, Frederick Geswein, where meetings are held every other Sunday. Wm. Randall is the secretary. The local branch has about twenty members and its officers say it is growing steadily.

Glencoe Register: The biggest, nastiest and most disgraceful blot on American journalism is the paper that claims to be "independent" in politics but sails under those colors for the sole purpose of levying blackmail on each and every candidate for office that happens along. But the politicians are gradually beginning to realize that the influence exerted by these papers is very small indeed and are being ignored to an extent that causes them to fret and fume. And it is well they are, for they never do any man good—nor harm either, for that matter.

Cass Lake Times: The Times is the possessor of a brand-new gun of the Winchester persuasion and lies in practicing preparatory to a terrible onslaught upon the game of the vicinity. We shall have plenty of meat now and fish will have no place in the ice box from now till the season closes. Ben shoots fairly well, but to insure immunity shots both eyes when he pulls the trigger, and we fear this habit, perhaps it should be called a precaution, will lose him much large game, especially moose and grizzlys.

Mankato Review: The State Dairy and Food department does not let up a minute in its determined efforts for the protection of the dairy interests and producers of food articles. The fourteen manufacturers of oleomargarine, capitalized by $46,000,000 of trust money, have doubled their product within the last year, tons on tons of which come into this state to rob the farmer and dairyman. The department is relentlessly pushing the adulteration of lard, with the determination, if possible, to let every pound of the bogus stuff out of Minnesota. There is not a great corporation operating this stuff in the state but has been proceeded against. Oleo and bogus lard have got to go.

New York Evening Post: Just how much a city can loose by the giving away of its franchises is seen in a recent experience in Detroit. It was proposed that the city buy out the street railways, and the price named was $17,000,000. It was generally conceded that the property could be duplicated for about $3,000,000, or, at the outside, $4,000,000. The great value was in the franchises that had been presented to the corporations, which offered to sell them to the municipality. The agitation was meant to lead to a trial of municipal ownership, but instead of doing that it served as an object lesson by teaching the citizens how they ought to value the rights and possibilities of their own property.

Pioneer Press: Except in very sparsely settled districts, it seems as if the whole list of fourth-class local postoffices must soon be wiped out—all local postoffices, in fact, except those which shall conveniently serve as centers from which the free delivery system shall radiate. For the postoffice on wheels—with its facilities not only for collecting and delivering letters, but for selling stamps, envelopes, postal cards and money orders—not merely saves to the dwellers in rural communities a vast amount of time heretofore spent in going to and returning from the local postoffice, but it affords many times the opportunity for communication enjoyed under the old system: making a daily mail, for instance, the practicable where formerly residents were served only once a week; and so multiplies correspondence, increases the sale of newspapers and magazines, brings the country into closer contact with city life and with the currents of national thought and activity. Naturally the extension of this new system of free delivery is bound up with the question of good roads.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Bain, Sr., left Wednesday evening to visit a daughter at Fremont, Winona county. The old people have lived here the past twenty-two years, they have jumped on their laps many who now have children of their own, and while they are only going on a visit, everyone regrets to see them leave.—Fisher Bulletin.

Elsewhere.

Two men escaped from jail in East Grand Forks last week by sawing the bars of the cage. This let them into the corridor and thence into the street.

George McIntosh, a traction engineer of Edna had one bone broken and his right hand badly smashed last week by getting it caught in a chain while moving his engine along the road.

Pat Dorsey, the man who a short time ago died from the effects of being burnt in a straw stack near Climax, was a skilled engineer and had driven a locomotive on the railway for seventeen years, but drink ruined him.

McINTOSH.

Mrs. Andrew Storen is reported to be ill.

Miss Klara Kuhn visit in McIntosh last week with L. Shmidbuck's.

Mrs. H. P. Dahl, with two children visited with the Reishus family last week.

Everett Southmayd has rented the new business structure erected by Mrs. P. O. Mouit.

Hanson & Reishus have engaged a shoemaker for the fall. J. Stolare, a former resident of Fosston.

The Great Northern Ry. Co. has placed J. P. Fleming from Crookston as night operator at this place.

K. Brekke's new residence, and also M. Jorgenso's are both nearing completion, and will be occupied soon.

Lots of our valiant nimrods are, during the present hunting season, having to prove the validity of their big talk of former exploits and stories of remarkable marksmanship.

Invitation cards are out for the wedding of Miss Gunda Oppegaard and Adolph Ulrick, date Oct. the 4. The will-be bride and bride-groom are both well known in the city and every body is ready to extend congratulations to them.

UNKNOWN MAN MEETS DEATH.

He Was Struck by an Engine as he Sat on the Track.

An unknown man was killed by a Great Northern train at Park River one day last week nearly in front of the depot. He was sitting by the side of the track and the engine whistled for him to get off, but he paid no attention to the warning, and before the train could be stopped the car step struck his head, making a terrible gash. He was drawn under the train, and both legs were cut off, one near the knee and one lower down. He lived about twenty minutes. No one knows him, and there is nothing on his person to identify him. He did not appear to be in liquor. He probably had been working with some threshing crew, judging from his appearance.

Changes in Tribune.

Jas. B. McCall, who for the past ten months has been publishing the Crookston Tribune, leaves this week for St. Paul, where he will engage in other business. The Times-Tribune Publishing Company will retain Mr. Hayford, who, indeed, throughout the past summer has had full charge of the editorial and city news departments of the Tribune. Mr. Hayford, during his short stay in the city, has made many friends who will be pleased at his merited success. The newspaper fraternity and other acquaintances of Editor McCall will regret his departure, but their best wishes go with him to his new field of work.

High School Notes.

The football boys are hard at work on the gridiron.

The freshmen are now thoroughly broken in. Formerly they made a rush for the door when time for the dismissal came, but now they march out like trained soldiers.

The senior literature class are reading Tennyson's poems; the juniors are reading Julius Caesar; the sophmores and the freshmen the De Coverly papers.

Manager Barrett of the foot ball team, has received a communication from the Moorhead Normal team, in which they express a desire to meet our boys on the gridiron in the near future. If suitable arrangements can be made, they will be accommodated.

Supt. Hitchcock had cards distributed Monday, which, when properly filled out by the pupils, will tell their course of study, favorite study, if they wish to attend college, and their trade or profession in future life.

Crookston Letter Carriers.

Word has been received from Washington that Charles B. Weller, William H. Norrie and William J. A. Millette have been appointed the regular letter carriers, Zotique A. Cadieux, substitute, at Crookston.

Oct. 1 is the day when the free delivery mail system will go into operation in this city. On the day before, the mail boxes, which are now here, will be put in place. All necessary arrangements for the new system have been made by Postmaster Elken. The special cases which will be used in the postoffice by the carriers are expected in a day or two.

Births.

LANTERMAN.

To Mr. and Mrs. Albert Lanterman on Saturday, Sept. 16, a girl.

COOPER.

To Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Cooper on Saturday, Sept. 16, a daughter.

Deaths.

SARGENT.

On Sunday afternoon Sept. 17, Maude Sargent, oldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. O. Sargent, died at her home in this city, of consumption. Deceased was born in Rice county in 1881. Nine years later she came to Crookston, which was her home up to the time of her death. For the last ten years she was engaged in teaching school. Last winter her health failing she went south and it was thought that the stay there greatly benefited her but early in the summer she grew worse, and gradually sank till she passed away last Sunday. She had many friends in Crookston and vicinity who greatly mourn her loss. The funeral took place from her late home at 706 South Ash street yesterday afternoon Rev. H. P. Fisher having charge of the services. Additional services were held by the Women's Relief Corps, of which organization the deceased was a member.

BARLOW.

On Monday, Sept. 18, at the home of DeForest Buckley in this city, Mrs. Sarah V. Barlow, sister of Mrs. Buckley. Mrs. Barlow came to Crookston several months ago from Missouri with the hope of regaining her health. She leaves a daughter, Miss Julia Halow, and one son. The funeral occurred yesterday morning, Rev. H. M. Green having charge of the services.

—Dr. Dampier is becoming quite an expert with the camera. He recently received second prize in a contest in a Minneapolis magazine which makes a specialty of amateur photography. The picture in question was one of several kittens and puppies eating from the same dish.

—Numerous are the accidents which are occuring around threshing machines this fall. Familiarity breeds contempt. The men become careless but they would do well to remember that machinery is utterly relentless and once in its merciless clutches there is little hope for them.

—A shooting party consisting of Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Williams, Mr. and Mrs. Terry McCoskar, and Messrs. H. Morris, F. H. Merril and Paul Janney, of Minneapolis, went up to Thief River Falls, yesterday morning in search of prairie chickens. They are equipped with the latest kind of guns and several first class dogs, and if they don't bring back a number of birds it will be because there are no birds up there.

—Two cases came up before Judge Watts in chambers last Monday. The one was a motion for a new trial in the case of Stephen Quesnell vs. Great Northern Railway. As the motion was denied the case will go to the supreme court. In the case of O'Neil vs. Great Northern the motion to set aside the judgment in favor of the plaintiff was not granted, but a new trial will be granted if O'Neil does not accept a reduction of several hundred dollars in the verdict given him.

CABINET IS CALLED

BRITISH MINISTRY TO CONSIDER THE TRANSVAAL DISPUTE.

Move Interpreted as a Scheme to Gain Time and Allow Troops Now on the Way to Reach South Africa — Both Sides Continue Preparations for Hostilities.

LONDON, Sept. 20.—Summons were issued here in the afternoon for a cabinet council, which, it is expected, will be held on Friday. This is regarded as the result of the visit of the premier, Lord Salisbury, to London, remaining at the foreign office from 2 to 3:30 p. m. Mr. Chamberlain was present in the building at the same time and it is supposed that the summons was the result of the meeting. It is by no means certain that the cabinet council will adopt extreme measures, in spite of the uncompromising nature of the Boer reply. This deliberation on the part of the government is interpreted not only in London, but in other European capitals, as a desire on the part of Great Britain to gain time while the transports are hurrying to Cape Colony.

In the meantime the movement of troops proceeds. The Royal West Surrey regiment left during the day for Malta, where it will replace the First Border regiment, which goes by the same steamer to Natal.

It is announced that the British first class armored cruisers Terrible and Powerful have both been ordered to the Cape. They have reliefs on board capable of forming a naval brigade of 1,000 men.

THE TRANSVAAL REPLY.

Kruger's Answer to the Latest Dispatch From Chamberlain.

PRETORIA, Sept. 18.—The reply of the government of the South African Republic to the latest dispatch from the British secretary of state for the colonies, Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, after acknowledging the receipt of the British note, proceeds in part as follows:

"The government deeply regrets the withdrawal, as the government maintains it, of the invitation contained in the British dispatch of Aug. 28, and the substitution, in place thereof, of an entirely new proposal.

"The proposals, now fallen through, contained in the Transvaal dispatches of Aug. 21, were elicited from this government by suggestions made by the British diplomatic agent in Pretoria to the Transvaal state secretary, suggestions which the government and after specially ascertaining whether they would likely be favorably accepted by the British government. This government can, by no means, an intention to raise again needlessly the question of its political status, but acted with the sole object of endeavoring to the end of the local British agent to put an end to the strained condition of affairs.

"This was done in the shape of a proposal which this government deems, both in regard to its spirit and forms to be so wonted as, relying upon information to this government, it would accept her majesty's government. This government saw a difficulty as to the acceptance of them proposals by the people and legislature of the Transvaal and also contemplated possible dangers connected therewith, but risked making them on account of a and because assured by Mr. Chamberlain that such proposals would not be treated as a basis of his proposals but would be settled on their merits.

Sincere Desire to Secure Peace

"As regards to joint commission, the Transvaal addresses to the question of the invitation thereunto given by her majesty's government and cannot understand such commission, which long before was deemed necessary to explain the complicated details of the seven years' franchise, should now be deemed unnecessary and which it should now be thought necessary to declare inadequate.

"Further there must be a misapprehension if it be assumed that this government was prepared to lay proposals for a five years' franchise and a quarter representation of the new population before the volksraad for unconditional acceptance. As to the language, this government never made any offer of such as is referred to, considering, as it did, such a measure both Unnecessary and Undesirable.

The proposed conference as opposed to the joint commission of inquiry, this government is likewise not unwilling to enter upon, but the difficulty is that an acceptance hereof is made dependent upon the acceptance, on the side of the Transvaal, of precedent conditions which this government does not feel at liberty to submit to the volksraad, and, moreover, the subjects to be treated at the conference remain undefined.

"This government ardently desires and gladly accepts arbitration, as far as first intention is to adhere to the terms to the London convention of 1884."

The reply concludes:

"If her majesty's government is willing and feels able to maintain this decision, a joint commission as at first proposed by Mr. Chamberlain, it would put an end to the present state of affairs and the hatred would decrease and die out, and the prosperity and welfare of the South African republic and the whole of South Africa would be developed and furthered and fraternization between the different nationalities would increase."

PARDON IN PRINCIPLE.

Action of the Council of Ministers Will Soon Liberate Dreyfus.

PARIS, Sept. 20.—The council of ministers has decided to pardon Dreyfus in principle. The pardon will take effect in a few days. Dreyfus has relinquished his appeal for a reversal of the judgment of the courtmartial.

It is said that Dreyfus will be sent abroad before the promulgation of his pardon, in order to avoid demonstrations.

The announcement that Dreyfus was to be pardoned had already been discounted by predictions and there was absolutely no excitement displayed along the boulevards when the newsboys ran along at about 9:15 p. m. with the first editions containing the statement that the cabinet had decided to pardon Dreyfus. The newspapers sold quickly, but there was no rush for them on the part of the boulevardiers.

Those who bought the papers sat down in front of the cafes and read the announcement without comment. Everyone expected it and the decision met with no opposition.

Drecie del Homme, the Socialist organ, said: "Our task remains the same after as before the liberation of Dreyfus, to continue the campaign against all those responsible for the lamentable affair."

"In principle" is an idiom some times used in semi-official announcements of forthcoming actions. It seems to have but slight bearing on the matter except perhaps that it implies the fulfillment of various formalities before the pardon.

DESIRE TO NEGOTIATE.

Filipinos Request Permission to Confer With General Otis.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 20.—A cablegram has been received by the war department from General Otis, relative to the American prisoners in the hands of the insurgents. General Otis says that General MacArthur has been approached by a prominent Filipino, who asked if he were willing to enter into negotiations with Aguinaldo for the release of American prisoners held by the Filipinos. He also asked whether General MacArthur would permit a Filipino army officer to pass through the American lines in order that he might confer with General Otis. While no names are mentioned in the dispatch it is inferred that included in the list of American prisoners to whom the negotiations relate are Lieutenant Gilmore and the 15 men of the Yorktown who were captured by the insurgents on the east coast of Luzon, Major Rockefeller, who was captured beyond the American lines one night shortly after his arrival in the Philippines, and about half a dozen private soldiers who have been reported missing.

PASSING OF THE PASS.

Railways Again Threaten to Abolish Free Transportation.

CHICAGO, Sept. 20.—It is probable that after Jan. 1 over 800,000 or more railroad employes in the United States will pay fare when traveling over any but the respective lines on which they are employed. Not only are all railroads soon to be barred from a time-honored privilege, but everybody else, not excepting the influential shipper, will be forced to pay for tickets.

At a meeting of the committee representing the largest six railway systems in the country in Chicago it was decided to recommend to a general meeting of officers of all the roads west of Chicago to be held in St. Louis Oct. 10 an entire abolition of passes and all forms of free transportation. The only exception to the radical action is employes traveling on business for their respective companies.

PILLSBURY IS DEAD

MINNEAPOLIS MILLIONAIRE MILLER PASSES AWAY.

Although in Ill Health for Some Time His Death Was Sudden and Unexpected—Was a Pioneer in His Line of Business and Prominent in the Northwest for Many Years.

MINNEAPOLIS, Sept. 18.—Charles Alfred Pillsbury, one of the leading men of the Northwest and conspicuous as one of the founders of the flouring milling center in Minneapolis, died at his residence in this city at 4:45 p. m.

Although Mr. Pillsbury's health has been known to be impaired for the past year, the suddenness of his death was a shock not only to his friends, but to the immediate members of his family. So sudden was it that relatives in other portions of the house than the chamber of the sick man did not reach the bedside until life had ceased away.

The illness which caused the death of Mr. Pillsbury dates back a year. He was overworked, his physicians said, and advised a trip across the Atlantic. In December Mr. Pillsbury left Minneapolis, and for six months traveled through most Europe and spent some time in Egypt. He returned benefited by the trip, but fully aware that he was suffering from fatty heart disease.

Mr. Pillsbury's Career.

Charles Alfred Pillsbury was born at Wormer, Merrimac county, New Hampshire, Oct. 3, 1842. At the age 21 he graduated from Dartmouth college, having diversified his collegiate studies with teaching as a means of partial self-support. He went to Montreal, where for six years he was engaged in mercantile pursuits, most of the time as clerk. Sept. 12, 1866, he married Miss Mary A. Stinson of Gardiner, N. H. Three years later he came to Minneapolis and soon afterwards bought an interest in a flour mill at St. Anthony Falls. Later Mr. Pillsbury associated with him his father, George A. Pillsbury, and his uncle, John S. Pillsbury. The firm continually added to its plant and before selling out to an English syndicate several years ago controlled four immense mills, one the Pillsbury "A" having a capacity of 7,000 barrels of flour per day. This was then, and is today, the largest mill in the world.

Mr. Pillsbury was state senator from Hennepin county for 10 years—the only political office he ever held.

Difficulties Over the Chicago Contractors' Labor Reach a Climax.

CHICAGO, Sept. 19.—The difficulties between the labor unions and the committee on arrangements of the Chicago fall festival reached a climax when instructions were issued from union headquarters suspending all preparations for the celebration until the difficulties with organized labor are definitely settled.

A letter was sent by Chairman Trautz to the various committee chairmen advising them to stop further payment of funds until it is definitely known whether the labor unions will carry out their announced intention of declaring a strike on the federal building and on the festival arches and other preparatory work unless the cornerstone to be used in the federal building is discharged and one cut by union labor substituted.

MR. BRYAN ON TRUSTS.

Democratic Leader Gives His Remedy for the Evil.

CHICAGO, Sept. 18.—In his speech before the trust conference Hon. William J. Bryan, in discussing the remedy for the trust evil, made the following suggestions:

One method for the annihilation of trusts has occurred to me, and to me it seems a complete method. It may recommend itself to you. It is this:

That congress should pass a law providing that no corporation organized in any state should do business outside of the state in which it is organized until it receives from some power of control on congress a license authorizing it to do business outside of the state; that when the license may be granted upon conditions which will, in the first place prevent the watering of stock; in the second prevent monopoly in any branch of business; and third, provide for publicity as to all of the transactions and business of the corporation.

A third condition, I suggest that this license shall not be granted until the corporation show that it has not had a monopoly and is not attempting a monopoly of any branch of industry or any article of merchandise; and that provision that if the law is violated the license can be revoked.

Now, I may be mistaken, but it has seemed to me that this method of dealing with the trusts would prove an effective method. I do not say that there shall be no private corporations but I say that no corporation is created by law, it is created for the public good, and it should never be permitted to do a thing that is injurious to the public good.

I have felt that these questions will be settled and settled right, but I want to protest against this doctrine that the trust is an natural outgrowth of natural laws. It is not true. The trust is the natural outgrowth of unnatural conditions created by man-made laws.

You cannot hide behind the doctrine that it is here and that we cannot get rid of it. I believe that the American people can get rid of anything they don't want that is not good.

Fifty thousand copies of the report are to be printed and distributed throughout the country. All those who did not attend the convention may have the advantage of the views expressed by leading economists, lawyers, politicians and thinkers from different sections of the United States. This Mr. Head deems highly important.

The Economist: The increase of fifteen per cent in the wages of the printing pressmen of the United States is a very significant and noteworthy incident. It is significant for two reasons, first, because the ability of employes of the plate workers to pay higher wages, or, indeed, to pay any wages whatever is wholly dependent and indisputably due to the operation of the duty imposed on foreign work on plate by republican legislation, and, second, because the printing plate industry is directed by a concentration of organized capital, which proves the folly of denouncing organized combinations as a type of all that is most dangerous and reprehensible in the line of industrial monopolies.

A RACE FOR GOLD

A NEW ENGLANDER'S ADVENTURES IN ALASKA

BY CAPT JAMES ROBINSON

[Copyright, 1898, by S. S. McClure Co.]

SYNOPSIS.

Chapter I.—Tom Scott, a New England farmhand, decides to go to Klondike in search for gold. In Boston he rescues a Miss Avery from footpads, and, as his new acquaintance is also going to Klondike, he sails in the same steamer. They become fellow ladies in accession. They ship on the barque the Seabird, a sailing vessel bound for Pylees.

Chapter II.—They board the vessel and find the captain, Obed Ridder, whom the captain had hired. Obed proves to be an old enemy of Tom's, who had once caused the latter of deserving the ship at Honolulu. The captain and taking with him several thousand dollars of the owners' in a gold. Tom's father had not been home since the accusation had been made, but Tom believed in him, and he did not believe it, and attempted to help Ridder to flight in order to right the matter. When the mate finds Tom aboard the vessel he vows to be avenged for the bungle.

Chapter III.—During the passage Mr. Avery is knocked overboard accidentally and Tom again saves his life by jumping into the ocean after him. The man is injured internally and about to die. He calls Tom to his bedside and tells him of a package of $2,000, and also his share in a gold region which his partners have discovered and where he was going to join them. He gives Tom a letter from one of them which gives direction for finding the territory, the possession of which and Avery's will Tom was as an identification when he gets there.

Chapter IV.—Rider hears the man's conversation with Tom and determines to get the papers and the gold which they entitle the holder to. In San Francisco Tom is waylaid and robbed by Rider of the paper and what money he had with him, but the majority of his cash was on board the Seabird. Tom, Miss Avery and her aunt go on the Seabird. Tom, leaving her aunt to search for gold, and taken to his lodgings. Rider escapes and starts for Dyea.

Chapter V.—At Dyea Rider meets Tom's father, who has been in the gold fields and is returning home with a fortune. He asks for his son and his brother, and is told that both are dead, saying that Tom died in Frisco and was buried by the captain of the Seabird. After giving Rider gold enough to start him for home the miner says: "I've father many for Frisco and find the sea captain, and from him learns that his son is not dead, but started for grass in the gold fields ten days before.

Chapter VI.—Green believes Rider has stolen Tom's paper and money, and they start on the trail.

Chapter VII.—In Lynn Canon Rider has cornered a passer-by with a pack and dog team. They leave Dyea in search for the hidden gold the day after Tom and Green reach thereand without them being aware of their presence. Tom rescues a woman from the hands of a tough and finds that she is the daughter of a brother of the man who believed him guilty of the crime of which he had been accused. She and her father are on their way to the mines for which his brother had started. Tom tells his story and also of his brother's death.

Chapter VIII.—In the meantime Rider and Bowers are on their way up the Dalton trail. They meet one of the partners of Avery and Clifton, who is also dissatisfied and secure what information they can from him after showing him the paper from Avery and telling their story, which he does not believe.

Chapter IX.—Tom and his party meet the same man a day or two later and Tom tells him of the wrongful blowing him of the fraud of Rider and Bowers and his own claims. As Tom's party have an abundance of provisions for all, the miner turns back instead of going on to Dyea. They reach the mine and give him the agreed upon signal.

Chapter X.—The partner who remained at the mine in Avery and Clifton's claim partner whom he had sent for to share in the discovery. Rider and Bowers arrive. They prove their good will by threatening him in the rocks to the soul where their diggings are and, his evil face lighted up with a look of triumph.

But Bowers found it no easy task to persuade his partner to go. It was now very dark, and as Rider had not dared to light a fire there was nothing to guide his companions, who trembled about as best he could, not daring to shout for fear he might alarm the party he had just been robbing of. He became hopelessly lost at last and was about to give up in despair when a flash of light when he heard a horse stamping.

Confident there was no one but Rider near him, he crept softly, and to his intense delight the sailor answered from a point not 20 yards away:

"Is that you, Bowers?"

"Yes," was the surly reply, as the big miner reached his side, "and I've had a devil time gittin' here, too. I'm starved."

"Shall I light a fire?" asked Rider. "I've got it all ready, but I was skittish about lightin' it till I found out what you had seen."

"You don't light no fire here," growled the other. "We've got ter put up with cold grub to-night. We've been regular fools, we have!"

"What's the matter?"

"Matter enuff! In the fust place, that Tarbox chap we see start for Dyea has met a party an' turned back. One o' 'em men is named Avery—"

"Avery!"

The mate's teeth chattered as he gasped.

"But I saw him buried at sea!"

"Rot! There may be more'n one Avery in the world! Didn't that letter say something 'bout a man named Bill that was to come? Course it did! Mebbe it's the old chap's brother or cousin or somethin'.

"Then there's two young chaps that looked like sailors, and a young gal that I take ter be Avery's darter by the way she stayed 'round him. They've routed out the old man now, the letter an' they've all gone into camp under a big cliff not more'n a mile from where we're sittin' this minit."

"The young men must be Scott and the second mate," said Rider, "and don't you see these papers are no good to us after all our trouble? We can't do anything now but give the thing up and make for the Klondike. We've got good out—"

"Shake fer nothin'!" was the savage interruption. "Them men hev got a gold mine right 'round here somewheres and I've as much right there as they hev if I can only find it. I'd like ter see 'em drive me off. You can go to the Klondike if yer like, but yer don't take any o' this stuff with yer. See?"

Like most bullies, Obed Rider was easily cowed by any show of bullyism himself, and he dared not make the reply which came to his lips. Instead he said:

"But I can't join these men after taking these papers from Scott. There'd be trouble."

"I didn't say I was goin' to jine 'em. Look here, Rider, yer ye scared or not? Here we are, two stout chaps with plenty of grub an' the horses. We knows just what them fellers are now, an' they don't know what we be. If we keeps our eyes open that's sure ter be chance for business. Will yer stick, ter me or not?"

Rider had little choice. He dared not demand half the outfit his ex-mate had purchased, and was forced to submit, so with a show of sincerity he exclaimed:

"Of course I'll stick, Bowers!"

"All right. Now, you keep watch the fust half of ther night an' I'll see for ther last. We're got ter be movin' bright an' early."

In five minutes the hardened rascal was snoring, while Rider stood guard. He had no occasion for fire, every company now, and would gladly have left him, but the miner had gained such an ascendancy over him that he dared not attempt to leave him now that he was asleep. He had meant to consult Tom Scott and take his papers, but his cupidity was inflamed, and he had been drinking then. He was sober now, and the evilest intention of his companion to attempt to bully or rob five armed men was quite another matter. Still, there was no help for it, and he tried to steel his cowardly heart to its work.

Bowers relieved him at midnight, and as soon as the first streak of daylight could be seen he aroused the mate and said:

"I'm off again. Stay here and keep in under this hill as much as you can till I get back."

Once more he made his way to the hovider and took up his station. From this hiding place he could see the different members of the party as they carried load after load out of sight among the rocks, but suddenly one of the men mounted a horse and drove the rest directly toward the hidden watcher.

"What's he drivin' at?" muttered Bowers to himself.

As he rider drew near the miner was forced to throw himself to full length on the ground to escape being seen, and he fingered his revolver nervously. The box was too busy with the horses to look very sharply about him, and soon turned back after giving the animals a few sharp blows, which sent them off at full speed.

Then he returned to his party, and at last they had all disappeared from sight.

Bowers waited until he was satisfied that they would not reappear; then he stretched his cramped limbs and hurried back to Rider, who was impatiently awaiting him.

"What are they doing?" asked the latter, eagerly.

"They've turned all their critters loose an' hid away somewhere," was the reply. "See here, Rider, I've got a scheme."

"A scheme?"

"That's what I said. It's a good one, too. Suppose you could find yer way back to Dyea?"

"Of course I could. Why?"

"I'm goin' ter ride it yer why. That's about a dozen good critters turned loose. They're worth $200 apiece in Dyea, I dunno but more. I'm goin' ter scem ter want ter put up a bluff an' jine this party. We'll ketch them horses an' run drive 'em back to Dyea an' sell 'em. Bring one spare critter back with yer fer me an' one fer ther swag. When yer git back come ter ther bet log where yer an' jest as ther sun is risin' show yerself a minit. That might be ther horses thar an' I'll jine yer. Understan'?"

"But what are you goin' to do?"

"That's my funeral. You do as I tell yer. Don't make any slip. It wouldn't be very healthy fer yer if yer went back on me. I'd foller yer all over kingdom come."

Rider jumped at the proposal. Whether he could get horses or not, the question he could settle later on. At present it was enough to be rid of the desperate man who cycled him as if reading his very thoughts.

"You'll come back. I shall have cold enough to make us both rich or else I shan't be 'bove ground. I'm takin' all the rock an' yer don't come back to me I shall probly miss yer. I'll do my part an' you see you do yours."

It was evident that he was about to engage in some desperate scheme, and Rider hastened to assure him that he would be back as fast as possible.

"You'll travel light an' you orter be back in 12 days," said Bowers. "I shall look fer yer 'bout that time. So long."

Rider started off on the back trail at once, and soon he is making his way to Dyea we must follow Hank Bowers as he rides around the hovider and approaches the spot where Tom Scott and his party had camped the night before.

He had no means of telling whether his approach was observed or not, but he rode boldly forward and soon reached the deserted camp. Here he dismounted and walked toward the cliff between the scattered rocks in the same direction he had seen the party carried.

"I'll swear this is the way they went," he said aloud as he paused before the face of the cliff and looked keenly about him. "They hain't got wings an' they must be here somewhere or they'd never drove off them horses. They're in some place horses couldn't be took, but whar is it? Tain't up ther valley, 'cause I seen 'em come in here with my own eyes."

For some time he paced about the spot, examining each howlder to see that there was no hiding place near it, but he could discover nothing and began to grow angry.

"Wouldn't it be slick if that cuss should sell the hosses an' skip out an' I shouldn't find these—Hello! What's that?"

His restless eyes at last noticed the mass of vines which covered the opening in the cliff, and with a wrench he tore it aside.

"I've got it now," he cried, as he entered without hesitation and made his way along the rocky passage. "What luck! No wonder they let the critters go. This hurts all I ever saw!"

Ahead of him was a sharp turn, and just before he reached it there was a crash like thunder, and an instant later the way was blocked by a massive rock which would have crushed him had he been a few feet further ahead.

In spite of his wonderful nerve Bowers was so startled that he uttered a shout of dismay, which reached the ears of the men above.

CHAPTER XII.

DIGGING A FORTUNE.

Hank Bowers did not for a moment suspect that the big howlder had fallen by accident. On the contrary he realized it had been purposely rolled there to prevent his escape. It followed, then, that he had been seen approaching the spot.

"There must be some sort of a critter behind this 'ere cliff," he concluded, as he stood measuring the distance to the top of the alarmating pinnacle with his eye, "an' that feller won't keep me out of it long."

With a confident air he retraced his steps to the opening and removed the packs from his horses. Then he took off all of the animals' ears and entered the cleft once more.

Bowers believed that a man who could use an expert with his knife. He had noticed a sharp spar on the upper side of the barrier, and with a determination he hooped his rope around it at the first attempt. Then with an agility really remarkable in so large a man he drew himself up about 20 feet, until he was able to secure a foothold and clamber over the top.

To his surprise he saw no one, and scanned the least sign of fear he climbed up the short distance remaining to be traversed and appeared before the astonished eyes of the little group, who were even then discussing the noise they had heard a few moments before.

"Hello, pards," he said, boldly approaching our friends. "Ye don't seem ter 'spect company, but I'm here. Now, what's ter be done? I ain't a very revengeful sort o' a cuss or I'd ask yer what yer meant by trying ter squash me with a couple o' ton o' rock like that now."

His impudence kept the others quiet for a moment, and then Tarbox stepped forward and said, sternly:

"You are not wanted here. You were kicked out of Ladue's for stealing, and your present partner is a thief and a would-be murderer. Where is he?"

"I've parted company with the lowdown skunk," was the ready reply as Bowers threw into his voice an exultant assumption of indignation. "He turned up his own critter that he'd stole when papers and dissent show his head sorter fer fear the man what owned 'em might hev passed us while we was on the trail. Told him ter git out an' leave the company, and he gone back ter Dyea. That's straight!"

His manner was so earnest that he made an impression and was quick to notice it. Before anyone had time to reply he went on:

"It's true I was kicked out o' Joe Ladue's, but I was drunk an' took some dust from a chap what was drunker'n I was. I had the worst end o' the row an' so' didn't more'n half know what I was doin'."

"Besides that," he continued, seeing that he was gaining ground, "I've got a claim myself over ter Dyea an' I don't ask no grub. I know you've struck it rich here an' here's the papers ter prove it. I took 'em from Ridder afore he started off. All I want is ter stay here an' make my pile. This is free ground anyway, an' you can't drive me off if I want ter stay. Even if yer did they are everywhere. Every hundreds o' miners here in no time by telling what I know. What is it, pards, stay or light out for Dyea and leave me ter work?"

As he paused for a reply the others looked blankly at each other. He had spoken the truth. He had a perfect right to stay. They could not murder him, and to drive him away would be to lose the news of their mine to the world.

Both Tarbox and Taylor realized that they had but one course to pursue. They pay streak was so crooked and shallow that it would be necessary to go over a large piece of ground to follow it, and should their discovery leak out they would be powerless to claim spaces where they now could pick and choose over the entire valley.

They watched them with an easy air as they spoke in low tones for a moment, for he knew well they could not decide one way. Presently Dick Taylor said, bluntly:

"What you say is true in regard to this place. We don't want you, but we are obliged to have you. Get your stuff up out of sight. We will help you do that for our own sakes. After that you will keep away from our camp and dig on the other side."

An hour later his outfit was in the valley, and as he busied himself putting up his tent he wore a self-satisfied expression that boded ill for the peace of the men upon whom he had forced himself as property.

But if Hank Bowers could have been present at a little conference that night he would not have congratulated himself so suddenly. He was a deep rascal, but he had different material to deal with in the sailor in whose company he had recently been.

Dick Taylor was a very shrewd sort of a person, and while he had been forced to receive the stranger into his camp he was determined he should not remain there after they were ready to have him go. To get rid of him in a way that would keep his tongue sealed in regard to the gold they had found was the problem and he had thought of a way when he hoped might answer their purpose.

That night he detailed his scheme to the others, and all agreed that it was the wisest course under the circumstances. That it was will develop later.

"I don't believe a word about his breaking with that Ridder," he added. "When the whole ground had been gone over. "There's no doubt in my mind that they've put up some job between them. There's five of us, anyhow, and while he's in camp we must keep an eye open nights. We'll divide the time up, and it won't come hard. We will stay in this tent, of course, and we won't let him know but what we're all asleep. He won't do anything until we have a bigger pile than we've got now."

Their plans being arranged, the little party separated for the night, but Avery shared the cave with his daughter, as he thought it safer. This was also the depository of some $10,000 worth of gold, which the two men had already taken from the spot.

On the following morning work was commenced in earnest, and the piles of dirt began to melt away before the vigorous attacks of the men, while Hank Bowers dog manfully by himself a short distance away, apparently satisfied to look on them at their work. He was an experienced miner, and his little pile of dust grew steadily.

That night the result of their combined efforts was nearly $1,000, and Tom Scott could hardly be contents to take the necessary time for sleep. It seemed to him that his fortune was already made.

Three days of unremitting toil followed, the average being a little less than the first day. Then Avery said, as they were starting out the fourth morning:

"My boy, we are digging in the wrong place altogether."

"The wrong place?"

"Yes, that's what I said. I've waited to see how rich this dirt is and I am not satisfied. Don't you see, Dick, you have been digging where a stream that runs now, but it isn't the stream that cut that big hole through the face of the cliff. That goes off in another direction altogether, you see.

"Where a hundred or a thousand years ago this stream wasn't running at all. Now, where must the bed of the stream be? Can you see it cutting its way through that rock? You can see it must have been over there on the other side of the ridge. I'll bet that old stream ran thousands of years before it dried up. It must have."

"But how do you know?" asked Tom, in wonder.

"Because it would take that long to wear through the rock as it did. It was a bigger stream than this by a good deal. See those big stones scattered all around in the bed. It must have been a powerful stream to start them, and there they are everywhere. Eh?"

"By thunder, I believe you're right!" cried Taylor, excitedly. "I can see it now. I ought to have known it myself, but we struck good paying dirt on this side, and didn't prospect any further. Come on, let's try over there!"

"Hold on a bit," replied Avery. "You're not headed for the best place."

The others looked at him to see if he was joking, but his face was very serious, and he went on:

"It makes lots of difference where we dig. We may be surprised here any day and can't hope to keep this process of ourselves a great while. We don't want to waste a day. Just look at that bend over there. It's the round pebbles are collected. There was a strong eddy just there. Under the ridge of sand a place is apt to be more gold than anywhere else. Let's try there first, and if we don't find gold I'm no prophet."

His words carried conviction, and the party seized their shovels and hurried off to the spot at once. They found it covered with shingle, the debris of centuries. Below was a little dirt, and then they struck a layer of big boulders.

Tom Scott was working with all his might. He had taken about a foot of gravel from the place about a yard square, when, as he drove his shovel down, it struck something which felt like rock. A moment later he had laid bare a few inches of rough, shaly surface. Each man stood back to look at a chance along this old river bed before anyone arrives. We are all rich men."

It seemed impossible to believe at that time, but the old miner's advice was good and they followed it, while Hank Bowers, who had not been aware of their discovery, soon understood that they were stuking out claims formally, and proceeded to do likewise on his side of the ridge.

When this had been accomplished, Avery said:

"Now, we must each work on his own claim to hold it. A claim can't go idle 72 hours on Canadian soil without forfeiting it. Of course as long as we are alone here it doesn't matter, but at any moment some one may come. That night over their might jump a claim if we didn't mark it, and he would have the law behind him."

What's he driving at?" muttered Bowers to himself.

As Tom had made the first discovery, he was given the claim nearest the cave, and he selected the hole he had started. Avery took the next, while Taylor, Tarbox and the second mate followed in the order named, and their combined holdings reached nearly to the creek.

They found the gravel next the bedrock rich with gold, and worked with a how they worked! They were saturated with perspiration, and their clothes plastered with dirt, but what cared they? It was like a grand tussle with Nature to wrest from her the choicest treasure. They felt injured when the sun went down and they were forced to desist. At the earliest dawn light they were up and at it again and day by day the golden store increased in the little cave.

In this region the summer days are very long and darkness has but a few hours, but it seemed to Tom that the days fairly flew. They ate their food on their claims, Chun Avery bringing it to each laborer, but spent much of her time near Tom, assisting him in washing when she had time to spare, and taking a woman's delight in watching his confusion when she was near.

For she had long ago read his secret, and, while he had never uttered a word of love to her, his eyes told her far better than words that he would not always remain silent.

And she?

This is not a love story, but we may spare space to say that many little daintiest feminine way that the broad-shouldered young farmer which did not appear in the bill of fare for the others.

The gold hunters had struck a bonanza in good truth, for they found that the old river must have run over a bed of solid rock which was only covered with a few feet of deposit. In some places the bed rock had been too smooth to hold the gold, and the labor was wasted, but in others they found it far beyond their wildest anticipations.

Where the surface of the rock was rough they found little pockets filled with a coarse, free gold, interspersed with nuggets, some of them as large as a walnut. Tom was particularly fortunate in this regard, but they all kept their findings together and agreed to divide the spoil at the end.

In this manner two weeks passed. They were not troubled by Bowers, who was apparently satisfied to wash away at the other side of the ridge. Whether he was doing well or not they had no means of telling. He was brought to their mind, however, by an accident.

Many little dainties found their way to the broad-shouldered miner.

Tom had gone to their work as usual one morning, when Chun Avery suddenly appeared on her father's claim and said:

"That man Bowers has just been up on the cliff. I never saw him there before, and I thought I'd tell you."

"What was he doing?" asked her father, straightening up.

"He seemed to be watching down on the plain," she replied. "After a minute he went back to his digging, and I heard him talking to himself."

"All right," said her father. "Keep your eyes on him. I guess we don't have to worry about him. We'll attend to him."

The girl returned to the cave, but although the watchful Bowers all he appeared to be very intent upon his work, working away as long as he could see that night.

Supper was the only meal they all ate together, and when it was ended the friends held a short consultation, and made certain arrangements in the cave. When they were completed the tired men threw themselves on their beds of boughs and were soon asleep, with the exception of Avery, who, as was stretched on his rude couch in the cave apparently in the same condition.

DUGDALE.

John G. Farrell has invested in a fine new top buggy.

Continuous rain here for several days has stopped threshing.

One of the men working for Chas. Oehler has been sick for several days but is now improving rapidly.

The Dugdale sports went up to Mentor the other night and made things in that burg quite lively for a time.

Arthur Adams and John Forsythe have bought Andrew Anderson's threshing rig and are doing work that is satisfactory to the farmers.

The results of threshing up to date show the yield of wheat to be about twelve bushels to the acre. The farmers are somewhat surprised at this as they expected twenty bushels.

Camp & Oehler Company have just received a large new line of dry goods which they will sell at cost during the next thirty days. Call and inspect their stock when you are in town.

John Ricke is one of the hustling farmers in this vicinity. His harvesting and stacking is done and now he is busy hauling manure out on his fields. If all the farmers would spread this fertilizer where they intend putting in crops the results in grain production would be much larger than at present.

In an interview with Tollef Farden the other day, he said that the telephone between his place in the Town of Tilden and Ole Johnson's farm in the Town of Grove Park, was in operation by the Power Company of Rock Rapids, Iowa, and the only cost to maintain it was a little hard feeling now and then.

J. K. Hanson's smoke house was robbed the other night by some two legged animal. This individual finds it easier to get a living by stealing than by hard work, but he had better look out, he may be caught at his thieving operations. Herman Camp was called from his work to search some houses, but the pantaloiner has not as yet been found.

MAPLE BAY.

We are having rainy weather.

C. W. Conklen and B. Tatrow returned from Crookston and Gentilly on Friday.

A social was given at Horton's on Friday evening.

Ole Olson from Caledonia, N. D. was here on business Saturday.

S. D. Felsing returned from Grand Forks Tuesday and there was a surprise for him, a little girl.

H. Wick is setting up the cigars. Its a girl.

Elle Gustavson went to St. Hilaire Sunday on business.

W. Godfrey shot a goose last week.

The school commenced Monday, Miss Minnie Matson teacher.

Dr. Anderson was called here Tuesday at Mr. Felsing's.

Mr. Bachen has now received his new stock of goods, and can supply you for winter.

Mrs. Th. Rustad's mother visited with her Saturday.

We had our first frost Sunday morning.

Dr. Nelson was called hear Saturday at Mr. Wick's.

C. W. Russell was here on business Monday.

Mrs. Dillon has been visiting a few days with her sister Mrs. H. Wick.

LOCKHART.

Mr. Palmer and daughter drove to Ada Saturday.

Miss Bradley visited the school of District 72 Tuesday.

C. W. Palmer, of Troy, N. Y. was here visiting S. D. Palmer Sunday and Monday.

Miss Anna Bond is on the sick list. It is thought heart trouble is the cause.

Lockhart has had very disagreeable weather for the last few days with plenty of frost.

The section house is almost finished and will be a great improvement to Lockhart.

The Lockhart school has started with five pupils. Lockhart can say "we have a school anyway."

Nearly all the shock-threshing is finished here. The crops were quite poor on account of being struck with hail twice. "Lightning never strikes in the same place twice" does it?

Dr. Stuart performed an operation on Eddy Smith, removing a piece of the smaller bone and scraping the larger one a little above the ankle. The child is improving and the Dr. says will soon be able to walk.

FELTON.

(Too late for last week.)

O. Donald and Perley are loading flax on the track.

Wheeler and Stephens take their grain to the new elevator.

Postmaster Mills visited the state fair and reports it to be better than any of former years.

The McHugh & Gardner elevator is now ready and is doing business. H. Bepperth, of Halstad is the buyer.

Our elevator man, Brandlet, is watching the skies now to see if it is going to rain before he gets his flax threshed.

Wheat averages around Felton from six to fifteen bushels to the acre and the thresher is now busy threshing from the shock before it gets rained on.

LENGBY.

John Newton was in town Thursday.

A. Kaiser of Fosston was in town Saturday.

Miss Ella Klass left for Duluth Thursday.

Anton Welte shipped a carload of wood Saturday.

John Stephenson of Fosston was in town Monday.

O. M. Olson shipped three carloads of wood last week.

Frank Johnson has returned to work on the section.

Z. C Steele and and O. Brager of Fosston were in town Sunday.

Pete Molestad went to Fosston Thursday and returned Friday.

Miss Munda Fredriksen went to Fosston Friday, returning Saturday.

Ole Lindberg went to Fosston Thursday and returned Friday.

Lena Ospelied who has been staying in Fosston returned home Friday.

Mr. and Mrs. Saterstrom were in Fosston Thursday attending the fair.

Albert H. Lillo came down from Spunding Friday and returned Sunday.

Miss Artie Noel, who has been staying in Hansville returned home last week.

Pat Glynn was in Fosston Sunday.

A. C. Kell of McIntosh was in town Sunday.

Henry Wiemer, who has been staying in McIntosh, paid a visit home Sunday.

L. B. Gibbs of Fargo, agent for the Pillsbury-Washburne Co., was here Thursday.

Mr. and Mrs. A. J Olson returned home Saturday from a visit to his parents in Brundswold.

WARREN.

Albert Olson was in Crookston Monday.

L. M. Rafferty spent Monday night at Crookston.

John E. Lund made a business trip to Crookston Monday.

The stone work was begun on the new Marshall county jail Wednesday.

George Bradley went to Crookston Monday to take a position in the Great Northern round house.

John Brudler went to Crookston last Friday and expected to go in the employ of the Great Northern as fireman.

J. Morck, of Crookston, late clerk in the office of the county treasurer of Polk county, spent a couple of days in Warren last week with his brother, S. Morck.

R. Hewitt, G. N. section agent at this place resigned the first of the week. Mr. Hewitt will give his attention to the telephone business in which he has been interested for some time, having an exchange here and he will put in another at Hallock.

A traveling menagerie called the "Oklahoma Snake Show" pitched its tent on the railroad right of way Friday and proceeded to gather in the loose dimes of the curious. Apparently it did a rushing business. A walleyed gypsy fortune-teller was a part of the outfit.

Rev. E. F. Spicer, who has been pastor of the M. E. church at this place for the past three years will deliver his farewell sermon next Sunday. Mr. Spicer does not know where the Conference will send him next, but expects to locate in the southern part of the state. The best wishes of the entire community go with Mr. Spicer and family to their new home.

FIFTY CTS. ON DOLLAR

Commissioners Offer to Compromise Thus With Ex-Treasurer Beaudry's Bondsmen.

VIEWERS OF DITCH NO. 15 NAMED

East Grand Forks Gets $500—County Jail to be Fixed—Other Important Proceedings.

The county board met in special session Thursday morning Sept. 21.

The Mentor school district, No. 249, embracing all of sections 15, 22, 27, and 34 in town 150, range 43 and Lake side Park township, being part of lots 7 and 8, section 4 and lots 2, 3, 4, and 5, section 5, and part of lot 8, section 4, town 148, range 43, was formed.

The bridge across the Snad Hill River in the town of Vineland, which was built by William Morris and Henry Nolan was accepted and the county auditor instructed to issue his warrant in the amount of $406.50 in favor of the contractors.

In future all bills and claims against Polk county will be referred to the committee on bills and claims for recommendations.

John D Knutson. Christopher Hanson and L. C. Converette were appointed viewers of county drainage ditch No. 15 which will be constructed through Kertsonville and Gentilly. The viewers will met Oct. 4 in Crookston preparatory to beginning work.

The taxes of Elizabeth Elkhoff for 1890 on lot 12, block 1, 'Clements' 3rd addition to the city of Crookston, in amount $42.17 were abated it having been shown that said taxes had been certified as paid in 1894. The taxes of O. Wigt. in amount $1.00, on lot 2 section 34, town 152, range 50, were abated, it having been shown that the same had been previously paid.

O. L. Haney was appointed to survey and establish lost corners in town of Sletten, the work to begin Oct. 23.

The auditing board submitted the following report, which on motion, was adopted:

To the Honorable Board of County Commissioners.

Gentlemen: The undersigned board of auditors of Polk county, Minn., respectfully report to your honorable body that we visited the office of the county treasurer of said county, on the 5th day of August, 1899, without having given him previous notice; that we examined his books and accounts, and that we counted the cash and vouchers found in his possession and also ascertained the amounts deposited in the different banks appointed as depositories, and found the following as shown at 12 o'clock m. on Aug. 5, 1899:

Respectfully submitted,

REMI FORTIER, Chairman.
JOHN GRAHAM, Co. Auditor.
E. E. LOMMEN, Clerk of Court.

The engineer was authorized to expend of the unexpended balance in ditch fund No. 10 up to but not to exceed $100.00 in lowering the centre of said ditch.

The following resolution was passed:

Resolved, That the taxes, including seed grain lien, for the year 1890, on swl, section 10, town 150, range 41, be and the same is hereby ordered cancelled—it appearing that said taxes had been paid—less the seed grain lieu—and cancellation upon the tax lisi omitted.

An additional appropriation of $489.45 was granted for clerk's salary in county treasurer's office and $300 for the same in the clerk of court's office.

The hearing upon the petition of T. Y. Drankey, asking for the formation of a school district was on motion postponed, until next meeting of County Board Oct. 16, 1899, pending a correction of the petition

A. J. and A. McKinnon were given contract at $485.25 to fix the county jail.

Commissioner Thompson offered the following resolution and it was adopted:

Resolved, That whereas there is a shortage in the accounts and money in the office of the ex-Treasurer John T. Beaudry, of Polk county, as follows, to-wit:

CARNIVAL POSTPONED

Storm Stops Festivities—Saturday, Weather Permitting, Parades and Fireworks Given.

THD CITY WASGAYILY ATTIRED

To Welcome the Big Crowds Which Would Have Been Here From Far and Near.

The rains descended, and the floods came and the winds beat and the snow fell and in consequence the Carnival festivities plaaaed for today and tomorrow are postponed till Saturday, which, the weather permitting, will be a gala day in the Queen City.

The decorations are on a grand scale. Across the streets in the business portion of the city are hung countless flags of all sizes which wave and dance in the breeze, making a very pleasing appearance. On Main streets at the corner of Second is the triumphal arch on which is inscribed the word "welcome." The columns on which the arch rests are eight feet square and 24 feet high. On the pillars are inscriptions setting forth the good wares and goods merchants in that part of town have in stock for the Carnival visitors.

FROM LIEUT. DECKER'S REG'T.

A Crookston Boy Writes of Army Life at the Presidio, Cal.

PRESIDIO, Cal., Sept. 12, '99.

Mr. Ole Sundin.

Friend Ole.—I promised to write you from the Islands when I arrived and shall certainly do it, but thought probably you would like to hear from me before that time, so will send you a few words from one of California's health resorts. To give you a fair understanding of how the soldiers are quartered and treated: This camp is about six miles from the main part of Frisco but is all in the same town. Five cent fare on the street cars but we are not allowed to use them unless we are out on pass, but it is easy to obtain a pass if a man does what is right. I had one last Sunday and went all over Chian Town and Frisco. It was quite a sight I tell you. We are drilling four hours per day at present so the work is not hard, but we have a lot of kickers just the same. I was promoted to corporal last week—but is that after one month's drilling. It is not very high but it is away ahead of a private in all respects. I only have to do my work and draw $2.40 per month more than they do. It is a kind of straw boss and drill instructor.

You know we went from Crookston to Fort Logan, Colorado, but I didn't like that country. It was too windy, sandy, and dry, but the mountains were magnificent in their beauty, though we had very little time to explore them. But the poorest country I have ever seen lies between Denver and Colorado Springs. Col. and Trecke, Col.; nothing but mountains and every thing seemed to be dying for want of water. There is however, some fine country around Sacramento in the valley of the same name, but my how cool it is here! It is now 2 o'clock in the afternoon yet we have fire on. It is the same every day and night, no change like Minnesota.

Well, I have no more to say this time but think we shall sail next Friday. At least those are the orders. We go to Honolulu, Sandwich Islands, so we shall see more sights there, but to what part of the Philippines I don't know. It is claimed that we have the best regiment of them all out here. They call it "McKinley's Own."

Yours,

CHAS. HANSEN,
Camp M., 34th Infty. U. S. V.

REV. ANDALSRUD TO RIO JANIERO

As a Seaman Missionary—Reception Tendered him by Synod Church.

Rev. O. Amdalsrud, who for a little over a year has been pastor of the Synod church in Crookston has said farewell to his parishioners and has gone as a seaman missionary to Rio Janiero. The members of the church tendered him a farewell reception last Friday night which time they prescnten him with a gift valued at $75.00. Mr. Amdalsrud during his stay in the city has built up the Synod church, clearing it of debt and largely increasing its membership and in other ways proving himself a very able minister whom his congregation were very sorry to have leave.

Mr. Amdalsrud goes to Rio Janiero as a missionary among the sailors and is sent out by the Mission church of Norway. He is an American from the fevers which are prevalent in that region.

NATIONAL PARK IN MINNESOTA.

Distinguished Party Will Visit the Proposed Park This Week.

The plan of establishing a National Park in Minnesota is almost sure of success. The original idea has been somewhat modified in respect to the extent of territory to be included but the project of setting apart as a great resort a portion of the venerable woods and beautiful sheets of water in Northern Minnesota, between here and Duluth is nearer of realization every day.

A committee consisting of Col. John S. Cooper, of Chicago, a prominent promoter of the National Park idea; Col. H. S. Fith, of Chicago, F. I. Whitney, general passenger agent of the Great Northern railroad, Thos. Shevlin, of Minneapolis, president of Crookston Lumber Co., and others recently made a trip to Walker and vicinity to make arrangements for an expedition into that region of a large party of distinguished men. Invitations have been extended to the president, his cabinet, the members of congress and others to join in this trip to the place where it is proposed to establish the National Park. The party will consist of from 100 to 150 men and will make the start from St. Paul tomorrow Sept. 29. Several days will be spent in exploring the vast region of forest and lake.

The original plan has been narrowed down to the Chippewa reservation lying along the Fosston line which is a territory of 1000 to 2000 square miles in extent and which is from one-third to one-half water. As far as the merchantable timber of the reservation is concerned it is proposed by a scientific plan of forestry to see to it that none of this goes to waste. One enthusiast in speaking of the park scheme says: We will have a park that people will come from Europe to see. It will discount the Yellowstone by the wealth of its attractions. I believe the Minnesota National Park, if established, will attract 250,000 people a year.

Corn Suited to Northwest.

Dr. Herbert J. Webber has discovered a new brand of corn which he thinks will double the crop in Michigan and in Minnesota, and, in fact, all that northern country where corn grows, but grows small. Dr. Webber is the agricultural department's scientific shark, who puts in his time studying seeds and producing all manner of wonderful hybrid things in the vegetable world. He has been working on corn for some time with the object in view of getting a species which will ripen early enough to mature in the short season of the northern states, and at the same time he a little larger than the pigmy ears which are now produced there. To this end he crossed the so-called flint corn of Nebraska. The result is a corn which has ripened early enough, and which is about twice as big as the flint corn. The ear is nearly a third longer and has sixteen instead of ten rows of kernels to the cob.

A Pleasant Evening.

The members of the choir of the Presbyterian church were the guests at tea last Thursday evening, of Mr. and Mrs. G. S. Chesterman. About eight o'clock a large number of the church members called and remained the rest of the evening. Mayor A. D. Stephens in an appropriate speech expressed the pleasure which the congregation felt when they learned that their pastor, Rev. F. L. Fraser, had decided not to accept the call to a professorship in Macalaster College. Mr. Fraser gave a fitting reply. All present voted rote Mr. and Mrs. Chesterman entertainers of the true blue.

Firemen's Annual.

The members of the Crookston Fire Department met last Thursday night and arranged for a big time on the second Thursday in October, the 12th inst. At this time will occur their regular annual parade, and inspection by the council, the election of officers and last but not least a grand ball. The firemen are famous for their entertainment and this year will outrank all previous efforts.

Harvest Home Festival.

Services very appropriate to the fall of the year were held at the Methodist church last Sunday. It was a Harvest Thanksgiving and the altar and choir loft were very tastily decorated with the fruits of the earth. Rev. A. E. Rowson, the pastor, preached in the morning and Rev. P. W. Fraser of the Presbyterian church occupied the pulpit in the evening.

POLKCOUNTY SCHOOLS

Show Progress During Past Year—I. I. Kasa Completes his Annual Report.

RAILROAD WRECK OUT EAST

Engine and Baggage Car Ditched—Engineer Rescued From Beneath his Locomotive.

County Superiateadeat Kaasa and Assistant County Superintendeat Gooler have completed their annual report of the schools in Polk county. It was a long and tedious piece of work but was out on time and is now in the hands of State Superintendent Lewis.

This report forms the basis upon which the state apportionment is made. This apportionment is not the special grants that are given to those schools which comply with certain conditions, but is the money accruing to the several school districts from the state school fund which fund is realized from the sale and rental of school lands. The apportionment this year will be more than $4 a scholar, an increase of more than fifty cents over last year, which will give Polk county $25,000 and upward. The report shows that there were 1742 scholars act entitled to apportionment. That is, this number of scholars had not attended school for forty days, which a scholar must do in order to receive the money. This is a state of affairs that ought not to exist. Find the law as to attendance been strictly enforced Polk county would have drawn almost $30,000 more than it did and 1742 pupils would have received at least two months of schooltraining.

In the personel of teachers in the common schools one important item is noticed, namely, that whereas last year there were only thirteen high school graduates among these teachers, this year there are thirty.

Mr. Kaasa informed the JOURNAL that during the past year an effort had been made to have more supplementary reading, that is English literature for the young people, placed in the common schools and this effort had been quite successful.

RESCUE OF ENGINEER

In a Wreck Near Floodwood on the Duluth Line.

The Great Northern train from Duluth due here at 4:30 p. m. on Monday last did not reach the city until 1 o'clock Tuesday morning. The cause of the delay was a bad wreck about three miles east of Floodwood, a small station east of Cass Lake.

The accident occurred on the Eastern Minnesota on that part of the line recently built. The rails spread beneath the weight of the engine, and engine, tender and baggage car left the track. The engine toppled over on its right side, and the fireman being on the other side of the cab, jumped and escaped uninjured. John Flaherty, the engineer, was caught under the locomotive and all that was to be seen of him was his head sticking out from a mass of wreckage, while all about him jets of steam were rising from broken pipes, the noise of the escaping steam being so loud that the man's cries for assistance were scarcely audible.

As it looked as if the boiler might burst at any moment the passengers hung back, for a space, from going to the engineer's aid, but among them was P. McDonnell, the paving contractor, and under his leadership the men set to work and finally rescued the engineer from his perilous position and strange to say, beyond a few bruises, he was not injured. Some of the passengers were well shaken up, as well as the baggageman and mail clerk, but no one was seriously injured.

HOW A BULLET TRAVELS.

Lessons the Soldier is Taught in Learning How to Shoot.

The soldier is taught that the bullet travels through the air in a curved line called the trajectory, and that three forces act upon it—first, the exploded charge, tending to drive it forward in a straight line along the line of fire; second, the force of gravity, and, third, the air resistance. At 200 yards, according to these forces, the bullet, traveling at the rate of 2,000 feet a second, will have fallen about two feet. In the excitement of firing at close quarters the aim will invariably be too high.

It has been established that when the enemy approaches within 300 yards the soldiers will instinctively fire as much as two feet or three feet above their heads. Now, it has been found by experiment that the fact of firing by hayonets will cause the bullet to drop a distance of about 2½ feet in 350 yards, and therefore when about this distance from the enemy soldiers are instructed to fix bayonets, in order to counteract the excessive elevation of their rifles.

The recruit learns that the mean extreme range of the bullet is 3,450 yards, and that the longest shot ever observed was 3,760 yards. He is taught the penetrating power of his weapon, a subject full of interest. To take one or two examples, rammed earth gives less protection than loose bullets easily find their way through joints of walls, while a concentrated fire of ninety rifle rounds at 200 yards will breach a nine inch brick wall.

Only experience can teach a soldier how much he must aim to the right or left of his mark to counteract the force of the wind. A side wind has more effect on the flight of the bullet than a head blowing directly toward the firer. The soldier must learn the incline of his rifle, since some shoot higher or lower than others. Every rifle, like every marksman, has its own individuality.—Pearson's Weekly.

AN INCIDENT IN HAITI.

Illustrating the Peculiar Treating Custom in Vogue There.

Of course there is in Haiti a small circle of native born citizens who are naturally born ladies and gentlemen, equitable in their courtly manners and quite desirable as friends. From the white men who are living there, as I have already mentioned, one learns that if they take a liking to you, all they have or can capture is yours. The following will illustrate this characteristic:

Miss host and a friend were walking through the building there before of one of the towns when the friend suddenly came to a standstill and, placing his long arms across his fellow countrymen's breast, asserting myself of the traits of his race (Haitian), he said:

"My dear boy, in here they make the best cocktails in Haiti. I have spent three fortunes in asserting myself of the traits of his race (Haitian), he said:

There was a prompt adjournment from the pathwalk to the interior of the building, a few minutes of delightful, expectant silence as the ingredients were shaken together, a mutual bow, followed by the guarantee of our friends.

Friend—How do you like that?

Miss Host—Delicious!

Friend—Let us have another.

Miss Host—Certainly, only this second one is on me.

Friend—Make no mistake, my boy; there are both on me.—Detroit Free Press.

It is the unexpected that happens, especially in Haiti the unknown.—Henry Sandman in Harper's Magazine

Chickens in Haiti.

The natives call them "Ee-ee-ee." Nearly every one I have met who can speak English at all drops the "h" and picks it up after the manner of the London costermonger and his cousins, the cockneys and "dirty boys. Apples in Eye-ee are apples. As a great chicken country, the variety of poultry depending chiefly on the color of the complexion of the incoming president. If he be yellow, the "raller legged" Dominique is permitted to disport alone in his glory. Every black legged chicken is killed, and any person caught harboring one is bound and shot. On the other hand, if the president be black only black legged poultry is in the fashion. The "raller legs" are destroyed. Similar conditions prevail in Santo Domingo.—Victor Smith in New York Press.

Smelling a Railway.

Do you know that a railway track has an odor? The fact was learned from a blind man who was walking with a friend amid strange surroundings in Westchester county recently.

"Is a train coming?" he asked.

"Why do you ask?" his friend inquired, for, though there was a railway track a few hundred feet ahead of them there was not the slightest sound to indicate its presence.

"I smell the rails," he answered.

He did smell them, and though his friend's nose was not nearly so sensitive, he could with his head within an inch of the rails detect an odor like that from slightly heated iron filings.—New York Herald.

THE STRANGE RIDE OF MORROWBIE JUKES.

BY RUDYARD KIPLING.

Alive or dead—there is no other way.—Native Proverb.

There is, as the conjurers say, no deception about this tale. Jukes by accident stumbled upon a village that is well known to exist, though he is the only Englishman who has been there. A somewhat similar institution used to flourish on the outskirts of Calcutta, and there is a story that if you go into the heart of Bikanir, which is in the heart of the great Indian desert, you shall come across not a village, but a town, where the dead who did not die but may not live have established their headquarters. And since it is perfectly true that in the same desert is a wonderful city where all the rich money lenders retreat after they have made their fortunes (fortunes so vast that the owners cannot trust even the strong hand of the government to protect them, but take refuge in the waterless sands) and drive sumptuous C spring barouches and buy beautiful girls and decorate their palaces with gold and ivory and Minton tiles and mother of pearl, I do not see why Jukes' tale should not be true. He is a civil engineer, with a head for plans and distances and things of that kind, and he certainly would not take the trouble to invent imaginary traps. He could earn more by doing his legitimate work. He never varies the tale in the telling and grows very hot and indignant when he thinks of the disrespectful treatment he received. He wrote this quite straightforwardly at first, but he has since touched it up in places and introduced moral reflections, thus:

In the beginning it all arose from a slight attack of fever. My work necessitated my being in camp for some months between Pakpattan and Mubarakpur, a desolate, sandy stretch of country, as every one who has had the misfortune to go there may know. My coolies were neither more nor less exasperating than other gangs, and my work demanded sufficient attention to keep me from moping had I been inclined to so unmanly a weakness.

On the 23d December, 1884, I felt a little feverish. There was a full moon at the time, and in consequence every dog near my tent was baying it. The brutes assembled in twos and threes and drove me frantic. A few days previously I had shot one loud mouthed singer and suspended his carcass in terrorem about 50 yards from my tent door. But his friends fell upon, fought for and ultimately devoured the body and, as it seemed to me, sang their hymns of thanksgiving afterward with renewed energy.

The light headedness which accompanies fever acts differently on different men. My irritation gave way after a short time to a fixed determination to slaughter one huge black and white beast who had been foremost in song and first in flight throughout the evening. Thanks to a shaking hand and a giddy head, I had already missed him twice with both barrels of my shotgun, when it struck me that my best plan would be to ride him down in the open and finish him off with a hog spear. This, of course, was merely the semidelirious notion of a fever patient, but I remember that it struck me at the time as being eminently practical and feasible.

I therefore ordered my groom to saddle Pornic and bring him round quietly to the rear of my tent. When the pony was ready, I stood at his head prepared to mount and dash out as soon as the dog should again lift up his voice. Pornic, by the way, had not been out of his pickets for a couple of days. The night air was crisp and chilly, and I was armed with a specially long and sharp pair of persuaders with which I had been rousing a sluggish cob that afternoon. You will easily believe, then, that when he was let go he went quickly. In one moment, for the brute bolted as straight as a die, the tent was left far behind, and we were flying over the smooth, sandy soil at racing speed. In another we had passed the wretched dog, and I had almost forgotten why it was that I had taken horse and hog spear.

The delirium of fever and the excitement of rapid motion through the air must have taken away the remnant of my senses. I have a faint recollection of standing upright in my stirrups and of brandishing my hog spear at the great white moon that looked down so calmly on my mad gallop and of shouting challenges to the camel thorn bushes as they whizzed past. Once or twice, I believe, I swayed forward on Pornic's neck and literally hung on by my spurs—as the marks next morning showed.

The wretched beast went forward like a thing possessed over what seemed to be a limitless expanse of moonlit sand. Next, I remember, the ground rose suddenly in front of us, and as we topped the ascent I saw the waters of the Sutlej shining like a silver bar below. Then Pornic blundered heavily on his nose, and we rolled together down some unseen slope.

I must have lost consciousness, for when I recovered I was lying on my stomach in a heap of soft white sand, and the dawn was beginning to break dimly over the edge of the slope down which I had fallen. As the light grew stronger I saw that I was at the bottom of a horseshoe shaped crater of sand, opening on one side directly on to the shoals of the Sutlaj. My fever had altogether left me, and, with the exception of a slight dizziness in the head, I felt no bad effects from the fall overnight.

Pornic, who was standing a few yards away, was naturally a good deal exhausted, but had not hurt himself in the least. His saddle, a favorite polo one, was much knocked about and had been twisted under his belly. It took me some time to put him to rights, and in the meantime I had ample opportunities of observing the spot into which I had so foolishly dropped.

At the risk of being considered tedious I must describe it at length, inasmuch as an accurate mental picture of its peculiarities will be of material assistance in enabling the reader to understand what follows.

Imagine, then, as I have said before, a horseshoe shaped crater of sand with steeply graded sand walls about 35 feet high. The slope, I fancy, must have been about 65 degrees. This crater inclosed a level piece of ground about 50 yards long by 30 at its broadest part, with a rude well in the center. Round the bottom of the crater, about three feet from the level of the ground proper, ran a series of 83 semicircular, ovoid, square and multilateral holes, all about three feet at the mouth. Each hole on inspection showed that it was carefully shored internally with driftwood and bamboos, and over the mouth a wooden drip board projected, like the peak of a jockey's cap, for two feet. No sign of life was visible in these tunnels, but a most sickening stench pervaded the entire amphitheater—a stench fouler than any which my wanderings in Indian villages have introduced me to.

Having remounted Pornic, who was as anxious as I to get back to camp, I rode round the base of the horseshoe to find some place whence an exit would be practicable. The inhabitants, whoever they might be, had not thought fit to put in an appearance, so I was left to my own devices. My first attempt to "rush" Pornic up the steep sand banks showed me that I had fallen into a trap exactly on the same model as that which the ant lion sets for its prey. At each step the shifting sand poured down from above in tons, and rattled on the drip boards of the holes like small shot. A couple of ineffectual charges sent us both rolling down to the bottom, half choked with the torrents of sand, and I was constrained to turn my attention to the river bank.

Here everything seemed easy enough. The sand hills ran down to the river edge, it is true, but there were plenty of shoals and shallows across which I could gallop Pornic and find my way back to terra firma by turning sharply to the right or the left. As I led Pornic over the sands I was startled by the faint pop of a rifle across the river, and at the same moment a bullet dropped with a sharp "whit" close to Pornic's head.

There was no mistaking the nature of the missile—a regulation Martini-Henry "picket." About 500 yards away a country boat was anchored in midstream, and a jet of smoke drifting away from its bows in the still morning air showed me whence the delicate attention had come. Was ever a respectable gentleman in such an impasse? The treacherous sand slope allowed no escape from a spot which I had visited most involuntarily, and a promenade on the river frontage was the signal for a bombardment from some insane native in a boat. I'm afraid that I lost my temper very much indeed.

Another bullet reminded me that I had better save my breath to cool my porridge, and I retreated hastily up the sands and back to the horseshoe, where I saw that the noise of the rifle had drawn 65 human beings from the badger holes which I had up till that point supposed to be untenanted. I found myself in the midst of a crowd of spectators—about 40 men, 20 women and one child who could not have been more than 5 years old. They were all scantily clothed in that salmon colored cloth which one associates with Hindoo mendicants and at first sight gave me the impression of a band of loathsome fakirs. The filth and repulsiveness of the assembly were beyond all description, and I shuddered to think what their life in the badger holes must be.

Even in these days, when local self government has destroyed the greater part of a native's respect for a sahib, I have been accustomed to a certain amount of civility from my inferiors, and on approaching the crowd naturally expected that there would be some recognition of my presence. As a matter of fact there was, but it was by no means what I had looked for.

The ragged crew actually laughed at me—such laughter I hope I may never hear again. They cackled, yelled, whistled and howled as I walked into their midst, some of them literally throwing themselves down on the ground in convulsions of unholy mirth. In a moment I had let go Pornic's head, and, irritated beyond expression at the morning's adventure, commenced cuffing those nearest to me with all the force I could. The wretches dropped under my blows like ninepins, and the laughter gave place to wails for mercy, while those yet untouched clasped me round the knees, imploring me in all sorts of uncouth tongues to spare them.

In the tumult and just when I was feeling very much ashamed of myself for having thus easily given way to my temper a thin, high voice murmured in English from behind my shoulder: "Sahib! Sahib! Do you not know me? Sahib, it is Gunga Dass, the telegraph master."

I spun round quickly and faced the speaker.

Gunga Dass (I have, of course, no hesitation in mentioning the man's real name) I had known four years before as a Deccanee Brahman lent by the Panjab government to one of the Khalsia states. He was in charge of a branch telegraph office there, and when I had last met him was a jovial, full stomached, portly government servant, with a marvelous capacity for making bad puns in English, a peculiarity which made me remember him long after I had forgotten his services to me in his official capacity. It is seldom that a Hindoo makes English puns.

Now, however, the man was changed beyond all recognition. Caste mark, stomach, slate colored continuations and unctuous speech were all gone. I looked at a withered skeleton, turbanless and almost naked, with long, matted hair and deep set, codfish eyes. But for a crescent shaped scar on the left cheek, the result of an accident for which I was responsible, I should never have known him. But it was indubitably Gunga Dass and—for this I was thankful—an English speaking native, who might at least tell me the meaning of all that I had gone through that day.

The crowd retreated to some distance as I turned toward the miserable figure and ordered him to show me some method of escaping from the crater. He held a freshly plucked crow in his hand and in reply to my question climbed slowly on a platform of sand which ran in front of the holes and commenced lighting a fire there in silence. Dried bents, sand poppies and driftwood burn quickly, and I derived much consolation from the fact that he lit them with an ordinary sulphur match. When they were in a bright glow and the crow was neatly spitted in front thereof, Gunga Dass began without a word of preamble:

"There are only two kinds of men, sar, the alive and the dead. When you are dead, you are dead, but when you are alive, you live." Here the crow demanded his attention for an instant as it twirled before the fire in danger of being burned to a cinder. "If you die at home, and do not die when you come to the ghat to be burned, you come here."

The nature of the reeking village was made plain now, and all that I had known or read of the grotesque and the horrible paled before the fact just communicated by the ex-Brahman. Sixteen years ago, when I first landed in Bombay, I had been told by a wandering Armenian of the existence, somewhere in India, of a place to which such Hindoos as had the misfortune to recover from trance or catalepsy were conveyed and kept, and I recollect laughing heartily at what I was then pleased to consider a traveler's tale. Sitting at the bottom of the sand trap, the memory of Watson's hotel, with its swinging punkahs, white robed attendants and the sallow faced Armenian, rose up in my mind as vividly as a photograph, and I burst into a loud fit of laughter. The contrast was too absurd!

Gunga Dass, as he bent over the unclean bird, watched me curiously. Hindoos seldom laugh, and his surroundings were not such as to move Gunga Dass to any undue excess of hilarity. He removed the crow solemnly from the wooden spit and as solemnly devoured it. Then he continued his story, which I give in his own words:

"In epidemics of the cholera you are carried to be burned almost before you are dead. When you come to the river side, the cold air perhaps makes you alive, and then, if you are only little alive, mud is put on your nose and mouth and you die conclusively. If you are rather more alive, more mud is put, but if you are too lively they let you go and take you away. I was too lively and made protestation with anger against the indignities that they endeavored to press upon me. In those days I was Brahman and proud man. Now I am dead man and eat"—here he eyed the well gnawed breastbone with the first sign of emotion that I had seen in him since we met—"crows and other things. They took me from my sheets when they saw that I was too lively and gave me medicines for one week, and I survived successfully. Then they sent me by rail from my place to Okara station, with a man to take care of me, and at Okara station we met two other men, and they conducted we three on camels in the night from Okara station to this place, and they propelled me from the top to the bottom, and the other two succeeded, and I have been here ever since, two and a half years. Once I was Brahman and proud man, and now I eat crows."

"There is no way of getting out?"

"None of what kind at all. When I first came, I made experiments frequently, and all the others also, but we have always succumbed to the sand which is precipitated upon our heads."

"But surely," I broke in at this point, "the river front is open, and it is worth while dodging the bullets while at night"—

I had already matured a rough plan of escape which a natural instinct of selfishness forbade me sharing with Gunga Dass. He, however, divined my unspoken thought almost as soon as it was formed and, to my intense astonishment, gave vent to a long low chuckle of derision—the laughter, be it understood, of a superior or at least of an equal.

"You will not"—he had dropped the sar completely after his opening sentence—"make any escape that way. But you can try. I have tried. Once only."

The sensation of nameless terror and abject fear which I had in vain attempted to strive against overmastered me completely. My long fast—it was now close upon 10 o'clock, and I had eaten nothing since tiffin on the previous day—combined with the violent and unnatural agitation of the ride, had exhausted me, and I verily believe that for a few minutes I acted as one mad. I hurled myself against the pitiless sand slope. I ran round the base of the crater, blaspheming and praying by turns. I crawled out among the sedges of the river front, only to be driven back each time in an agony of nervous dread by the rifle bullets which cut up the sand round me, for I dared not face the death of a mad dog among that hideous crowd, and finally fell, spent and raving, at the curb of the well. No one had taken the slightest notice of an exhibition which makes me blush hotly even when I think of it now.

Two or three men trod on my panting body as they drew water, but they were evidently used to this sort of thing and had no time to waste upon me. The situation was humiliating. Gunga Dass, indeed, when he had banked the embers of his fire with sand, was at some pains to throw half a cupful of fetid water over my head, an attention for which I could have fallen on my knees and thanked him, but he was laughing all the while in the same mirthless, wheezy key that greeted me on my first attempt to force the shoals. And so in a semicomatose condition I lay till noon. Then, being only a man after all, I felt hungry and intimated as much to Gunga Dass, whom I had begun to regard as my natural protector. Following the impulse of the outer world when dealing with natives, I put my hand into my pocket and drew out 4 annas. The absurdity of the gift struck me at once, and I was about to replace the money.

Gunga Dass, however, was of a different opinion. "Give me the money," said he; "all you have, or I will get help, and we will kill you!" All this as if it were the most natural thing in the world.

A Briton's first impulse, I believe, is to guard the contents of his pockets, but a moment's reflection convinced me of the futility of differing with the one man who had it in his power to make me comfortable and with whose help it was possible that I might eventually escape from the crater. I gave him all the money in my possession—9 rupees, 8 annas and 5 pie—for I always keep small change as backsheesh when I am in camp. Gunga Dass clutched the coins, and hid them at once in his ragged loin cloth, his expression changing to something diabolical as he looked round to assure himself that no one had observed us.

"Now I will give you something to eat," said he.

What pleasure the possession of my money could have afforded him I am unable to say, but inasmuch as it did give him evident delight I was not sorry that I had parted with it so readily, for I had no doubt that he would have had me killed if I had refused. One does not protest against the vagaries of a den of wild beasts, and my companions were lower than any beasts. While I devoured what Gunga Dass had provided, a coarse chapatti and a cupful of the foul well water, the people showed not the faintest sign of curiosity—that curiosity which is so rampant, as a rule, in an Indian village.

I could even fancy that they despised me. At all events they treated me with the most chilling indifference, and Gunga Dass was nearly as bad. I plied him with questions about the terrible village and received extremely unsatisfactory answers. So far as I could gather, it had been in existence from time immemorial—whence I concluded that it was at least a century old—and during that time no one had ever been known to escape from it. (I had to control myself here with both hands, lest the blind terror should lay hold of me a second time and drive me raving round the crater.) Gunga Dass took a malicious pleasure in emphasizing this point and in watching me wince. Nothing that I could do would induce him to tell me who the mysterious "they" were.

"It is so ordered," he would reply, "and I do not yet know any one who has disobeyed the orders."

"Only wait till my servants find that I am missing," I retorted, "and I promise you that this place shall be cleared off the face of the earth, and I'll give you a lesson in civility, too, my friend."

"Your servants would be torn in pieces before they came near this place, and, besides, you are dead, my dear friend. It is not your fault, of course, but none the less you are dead and buried."

At irregular intervals supplies of food, I was told, were dropped down from the land side into the amphitheater, and the inhabitants fought for them like wild beasts. When a man felt his death coming on, he retreated to his lair and died there. The body was sometimes dragged out of the hole and thrown on to the sand or allowed to rot where it lay.

The phrase "thrown on to the sand" caught my attention, and I asked Gunga Dass whether this sort of thing was not likely to breed a pestilence.

"That," said he, with another of his wheezy chuckles, "you may see for yourself subsequently. You will have much time to make observations."

Whereat, to his great delight, I winced once more and hastily continued the conversation: "And how do you live here from day to day? What do you do?" The question elicited exactly the same answer as before, coupled with the information that "this place is like your European heaven. There is neither marrying nor giving in marriage."

Gunga Dass had been educated at a mission school and, as he himself admitted, had he only changed his religion "like a wise man," might have avoided the living grave which was now his portion. But as long as I was with him I fancy he was happy.

Our local dramatic talent rendered the farce "Outwitted" last Monday night under the auspices of the Ladies Aid Society, and under the direction of J. H. Hebert and wife.

The audience was a fairly large one but did not quite meet the expectations. The rendition of the play was excellent, and deserved a better house. Another play will probably be put on for next Tuesday.

A little girl of H. T. Thorsen's experienced a very remarkable and narrow escape on a violent death Friday last week. The parents were away, she had got hold of a loaded revolver, a 38 calibre Smith & Wesson. Laughingly (as she said afterwards) she had loaded down the barrel and gun and pulled the trigger. The ball passed between her teeth, slightly grazed the tongue, and passed through the neck without touching a large or an artery. The girl never lost consciousness, but a good deal of blood flowed down her throat, which she vomited up again. She talks, eats, drinks, and feels no pain whatever.

A CHILD'S FANCY.

Explanation of What Seems Precocious Keenness in Imaginative Children.

"An active, healthy imagination is one of the happiest gifts a child can possess," is the theory advanced by Florence Hull Winterburn, the well known publicist, in The Women's Home Companion.

"If we watch an intelligent child, four or five years old, when he has just self-unnoticed we will probably be astonished at the richness and fertility of the fancy which can give life and color to dull, commonplace things and weave the stories and dramas around the simple toy that means nothing more to us than what it plainly stands for. But we will perceive that when his wildest romances found themselves upon many a block, tree and frolicsome as imagination may appear, it is subject to its laws. It deals with real things in a real way. If outrageous paints, molds, but it must have its material, its basis in actual life.

"What we call creative ability is really nothing but the power to reconstruct, perhaps to connect several separate plans or patterns into a whole which seems different from the original. We find in an artist who daubs on his colors boldly, without any sense of the absurdities he may commit, and so he gives produces effects that surprise others as well as himself. Many of the acts that seem so precocious because we expect them to be the product of a well considered plan are really happy accidents, not devoid of the merit of originality, but neither to be overpraised as a work of genius. Childhood is one unbroken succession of experimentings."

A Much Abused Word.

The way certain words are misused and abused should appeal to one. It is a fact that if any word has tried to exist itself to every possible and impossible situation "grand" is the one that has made the attempt. A person needs but walk about any city to be confronted with Grand, hotels and Grand View houses. Sometimes it fits the house which it adorns, sometimes it seems but a sardonic attempt to make them seem the more forlorn. It rises to the sublime and describes the mountains, it descends to the level of everyday life and appears as a descriptive term when the weather is mentioned. On the lips of the milliner it lures on to her doom the woman who without the support of a friend is selecting a hat, and the "doesn't she look grand in that!" causes her to depart with the hat in her possession. One hears about "grand" dinners and "grand" times, but the last straw is when the shopwoman says, "That coat fits you something grand."—New York Sun.

Kind Lunacy.

In a New England village rich in quaint and amusing characters John Sabin has secured for his ability to hold his tongue. The gift approached genius, but John was keenly alive to what considered its incompleteness, although of course he said nothing about it.

He made mattresses for a living, and one day a native of the village came into his shop and said:

"John, what's the best kind of a mattress?"

"Husks," said John and said no more.

Twenty years later, so the tradition runs, the same man came again to the shop and asked what, in Bates' opinion was the best kind of a mattress.

"Straw," said John.

"Straw? You told me husks was the best!"

John gave a despairing sigh. "I've always ruined myself by talkin," said he.—Youth's Companion.

The German Catholic church at Shakopee was broken into by burglars, who did not carry away any valuables but who cut the fringe and tassels off all the different society banners, church flags and vestments worn by the priests. An attempt was made to open the tabernacle with a hatchet and screwdriver which proved unsuccessful. A valuable gold chalice is kept in the tabernacle. The hatchet and screw driver were left on the altar.

State Auditor Dunn has filed the duties and taxes for fall and winter in the following counties: Buffalo, Oct. 23; New Ulm, Oct. 24; Minneapolis, Oct. 25; Henderson, Oct. 26; St. Peter, Oct. 27; Stillwater, Oct. 28; St. James, Oct. 30; Windom, Oct. 31; Worthington, Oct. 31; Laverne, Oct. 31; Pipestone, Oct. 27; Slayton, Oct. 28. He will conduct his sales on the double header plan this year, selling lands in this instance in the central and southwestern parts of the state on the same dates.

The schools of the state are to be benefited this year by the prosperous condition of the permanent school fund. When the apportionment is made the various districts the first Monday in October it will be found that they have about $200,000 more to their credit than they had a year ago, and they will receive in round numbers $900,000 instead of $700,000, the amount received last year. Based on the number of pupils reported at the last apportionment, this will allow in the neighborhood of $2.85 per pupil.

TURNED OVER GUNS.

Minnesotans Hand Over Arms Previous to Muster Out.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 27.—The Thirteenth Minnesota volunteers, now at the Presidio, have turned over their guns to Governor Lind of Minnesota. They will be kept under guard and forwarded with the troops, so that they may carry them when they parade on their arrival in St. Paul and Minneapolis. The guns will then be returned to the United States government at the Rock Island arsenal.

LIFE AND LOVE.

True love is of a birth sublime;
It knows not space, it knows not time;
It has a garden from above,
For love is life, and life is love.

You, with your tongued gift of charm,
Would seek to make me love by art?
Yet know where'er your wish may rove
That love is life, and life is love.

You front new loves before my eyes,
I note them with a scorn supreme;
You cannot spoil the memory vows
That love is life, and life is love.

We mortals are compact of charms,
We have a thought of wandering eyes—
For boy and girl, for man and wife,
Yet life is love, and love is life.

Let's well to judge by human skill
What warmest service true love can do.
It stands, through all your wretched ends,
That life is love, and love is life.

I reach remembrance with your cheek,
The truth may silence your reply,
The truth may be a heart asked kisses,
Yet life is love, and love is life.

Fate love is like the flowers that spread
Fresh in more and brighter ways,
The shelter where you once met move
Brothers is life, and life is love.

—Walter Herries Pollock in Longman's Magazine.

A WORLD OF TROUBLE.

Why the Apartment House Manager Had a Case of the Blues.

The manager of the apartment house, a well fed, well featured, well dressed man, was standing in the main doorway of his establishment, which, by the way, is owned by an out of town capitalist, who is the most generous provider in the world and insists upon the flat being conducted upon the most economical lines. The manager was not happy, however for he may have appeared to the eye, and he heaved a long drawn sigh as a friend approached and greeted him.

"What's wrong?" inquired the newcomer.

"Oh, we've all got our troubles!" was the vague and ingubrious reply.

"You oughtn't to have any."

"But I have, just the same."

"What, for instance?"

"Well, I'm worried sick because I haven't got an enemy in the world."

"There shouldn't be any difficulty in removing that trouble, I should say."

"Maybe it is. I've tried it and can't get one to suit."

"You must be very hard to please."

"It isn't that," sighed the manager. "I'm all right, but it's this way. The old man insists on having the elevator boy wear a uniform, and he furnishes it. Uniforms cost money, and when the lad referred to left a brand new uniform, and the old man won't get another. That's the rub. I can find plenty of boys of sufficient intelligence, ample experience, industrious habits, good moral character and fine address, but I'll be darned if I can get one that the uniform will fit, and there you have it. Now what the deuce am I to do? Ain't that enough trouble for any one man?"—Washington Star.

A Painful Discovery.

"It was about the witching hour," said the subscriber. "I had left the station some distance behind me and was on my way up the road toward home. I had got pretty well lost by that time, and the charming influence of the starlit night was on me and made me feel at peace with all the world. Nor did the fact that I and my new suit had made a hole in the friends I had been visiting detract from the fullness of my self satisfaction.

"I was just well within sight of a street crossing my road. At the corner was a street lamp, which from some cause was not lit, and there this lamp fluttered what seemed to be a lantern. Now I know I am a little bit near sighted.

"I reached over to take it, but it was touched by the wind and waved just beyond my grasp. I reached over farther, leaning full against the lamp post. This time I was successful, and I found that the supposed handkerchief was a piece of paper on which was written in bold sprawling letters the legend 'Fresh Paint.'"—Philadelphia Inquirer.

The Real Reason.

Long ago he had taken the resolution always to be perfectly honest with his children.

"My son," he accordingly observed, "I am boating you with this trunk strap not for any cross grain in me because I am not under the collar! No, it does not by any means hurt me more than it hurts you!"

In the face of such a luminous example it would be strange if a boy did not grow up to be an honest man.

It was perhaps possible to overdo this thing and render a boy so honest that he would be unable to see anything in any of the learned professions. But that difficulty, if it existed at all, was theoretical rather than practical.—Detroit Journal.

With Pleasure.

McSwatters—I always love to hear that girl next door play "The Star Spangled Banner."

McSwatters—Well, when she plays "The Star Spangled Banner" as a sign she's got through.—Syracuse Herald.

How It Happened.

Jones—What a funny looking house that is across the street.

Smith—Isn't it an oddity, though? I understand the owner instructed the contractor to follow all the plans suggested by his wife.—Ohio State Journal.

Men quite incapable of writing themselves down fools in the old way do it very readily with the help of a stenographer.—Detroit Journal.

There are many people who will never grow rich, because their habits is to spend all they got.—Evening Wisconsin.

DEFECTIVE PAGE

Polk County Journal,

BY N. S. GORDON.

Subscription $1.50 per year in advance

Entered at the postoffice at Crookston, Minnesota, as second-class matter.

Argyle Banner: The POLK COUNTY JOURNAL has put in a new "Optimus" press and made other improvments, which go to produce one of the finest newspapers in the state.

ADMIRAL DEWEY arrived off New York at dawn Tuesday morning two days ahead of time. He was welcomed not merely by the people of New York but by the entire nation. Glory untold has been added to the flag by his deeds and a great and mighty people are justly honoring the hero of Manila.

POPOCRATIC organs are very free in charging trusts to the republican party, and as the offspring of a protective tariff. Free-Trade England is the real home of trusts, and in this country democrats invest in trusts. There are as many democrats as republicans belonging to trusts.

MR. PERCIVAL, the defaulting Northern Pacific station agent of Gilby, N. D., has been brought back from Montana and will stand his trial. His is another of those terrible cases where drink ruins a man. He confesses that he was crazed with liquor when he took the money and tried to escape with it.

NOT much wheat is being marketed here at the time, which is a good sign. The farmers are in such a prosperous condition that they do not need to sell their wheat as soon as it is threshed but can hold it till the price is higher and thus they are enabled to go on with their fall plowing without interruption.

IN view of the fact that nothing but national questions are dealt with in the Ohio democratic platform the campaign in that state will have a national interest. The republicans held their first meeting last week and they had as their principal speaker Geo. Roosevelt. Of course the democrats will be turned down even if they have McLean's barrel from which to draw.

GOV. PINGREE is to come to Minneapolis Oct. 12, and thence goes to points in North and South Dakota. Grand Forks will make an effort to have Mr. McKinley visit that city. What is the matter with Crookston persuading the president to come this way and stop off for a short time at the town which organized the first McKinley Club during the last presidential election?

A WOMAN from Red Wing, who was a delegate to the recent W. C. T. U. State Convention in this city, has written in the Red Wing Republican some of her impressions of Crookston. She says "two commercial clubs and a town improvement society could find work here for six months in cleaning up." She laughs at the names of some of our streets, states that "much of the land is given over to weeds and pasturage" and that "against the churches are twenty-eight saloons, giving the city a revenue of $14,000, which may have helped to build for the bridges, but left nothing for sidewalks," etc. These statements and others in the article referred to are gross exaggerations. While the city is not perfect it deserves no such condemnation, and least of all from a delegate to the W. C. T. U. Convention. But then, one can usually find in any place what he is looking for. We prefer to prefer to look for signs of prosperity and progress and these can be seen on every side in Crookston by the seeing eye.

"ANTI" is evidently the watchword of the democratic party. They are bent on opposition and destruction. But such a policy cannot have weight with the people. What the people want is something positive.

"SO long as there is one gun pointed at American soldiers, so long as there is an amed enemy assaulting our flag, so long must patriotism and loyal Americans uphold our position, affording protection, tranquility and pence to all who recognize our lawful occupation". Such is the declaration of the Nebraska republican state convention and it certainly voices the opinion of the vast majority of Americans.

'Tis given out that A. G. Bernard is to start a newspaper in Cass Lake. Well, Bro. Bernard, there's lots of room here for another paper; the country is in great need of more newspapers, and there is just as much room here as anywhere. Come right along. Are there any others?—Cass Lake Times.

The Times can well afford to be indifferent to the coming of another paper to Cass Lake. Editors Ives and Strawbridge publish such a neatly printed, well edited, and newsy sheet that there is no likelihood of their losing any patronage in case a rival paper comes to the town.

"FIFTY per cent of the silver republicans in my state who went out of the party several years ago have come back", says Senator Heitfield, of Idaho, "and I believe more of them will come in right along. They cannot go with the democrats on the administration's expansion policy, even for the sake of free silver, and probably are glad to have this excuse to get back." So if the republican party have lost a few of the Altgeldes et al type they are gaining back old republicans and this taken together with the fact that many of the best democrats are with us goes to show that the G. O. P. will be stronger than ever next year.

THE democrats have been attempting to catch the German and Irish vote by charging that a secret Anglo-American Alliance existed. In answer to these charges Secretary Hay wrote a letter to the chairman of the republican state committee of Ohio and among other things he said: "There is no alliance with England, nor with any other power under heaven, except those known and published to the world—the treaties of ordinary international friendship for purposes of business and commerce. No treaty other than these exists; none has been suggested on either side, none is in contemplation. It has never entered the mind of the president nor of any member of the government to forsake, under any inducement, the wise precept and example of the fathers, which forbade entangling alliances with European powers." Some democrat now will have to put his brains in steep with a view to getting some new plank for his party's platform.

A GOLDEN JUBILEE edition of the St. Paul Pioneer Press will be issued next month to commemorate the completion of fifty years of its existence as a newspaper. The progress which the state has made along all lines during the past half century will be set forth by both pen and picture. Joseph A. Wheelock, editor-in-chief, is editing this special edition. Mr. Wheelock went to St. Paul in 1850 and during most of the time since then has been editor of the Pioneer Press. As an editorial writer he has no superior in the Northwest. Many of the progressive movements in the state owe their existence and success to his forcible and ready pen, and when he writes in condemnation of the actions of anyone which he cannot approve of, scathing indeed, are his remarks. To the republican party he has been a tower of strength and for the influence which that party wields in Minnesota today he is in no small degree responsible. We await with pleasure this "culminating issue" of the Pioneer Press.

EVERY year the farmers pay hundreds of thousands of dollars for freight charges upon dirt shipped in the wheat. This startling statement is made by the Duluth Board of Trade. But not merely do the farmers give away this enormous sum to the railways, they also lose this dirt which could be profitably used at home. There is no economy in this. Let the farmers clean their grain before selling it. True, there is considerable trouble in this, but it is by paying attention to the little things that money is made.

Oleomargarine comes out ahead of butter. Judge Lochren, of the United States court decides that the law passed by the last legislature is unconstitutional in so far as it applies to the sale of oleomargarine in the original package.

At present England has 489 ships in her navy, representing an outlay of $540,000,000. These ships carry 2,071 guns, manned by 50,000 officers. In addition there are 27 ships now being built and their cost will make the grand total $725,000,000.

General Shafter reaches the age limit next month and hence will then cease to be a member of the regular army. It is reported, however, that the president intends to keep him in the volunteer service as a major general of volunteers as long as the present Philipine trouble continues.

E. C. Huntington, of Wisdom, president of the Minnesota State Editorial Association was presented by the editors, while they were in Canada, with a handsome opal ring as a slight expression of the gratitude of the association for the favors he had secured for it.

Ex-Congressman Jerry Simpson was hooted off the platform in Wichita, Kansas, last Friday while he was addressing a local G. A. R. reunion. His remarks about Aguinaldo—among others he said, "I believe John Brown's soul is marching with Aguinaldo"—were thus warmly resented.

The real logging operations of the season will begin in the middle of October. Then the firms will get their camps started, their roads built and operations started on a small scale. As soon as the snow flies the operations will be on a larger scale than for a long time and things in the woods will hum. The estimated cut in Duluth-Superior sawmills district is anywhere from 360,000,000 feet to 400,000,000 feet.

J. Adam Bede in the last Budget gives a column of reasons why he should be the republican candidate for congress in the 7th district. Among other reasons is this one: Because he was reared a republican and has always believed in the principles which will be embodied in the next national republican platform—the gold standard, expansion of trade, a tariff that covers the difference in cost of production, anti-trust, Cuba libre, the flag unfurled, reunion of the north and south, good will to all the world. and also the re-election of McKinley.

SHOT BY AN OFFICER.

Deputy Fullerton, of Cass Lake Co., Brings in his Dead Prisoner.

Deputy Sheriff Breeze, of Cass county, and another deputy named Fullerton, brought in to Bemidji last Thursday from Lake Port, 22 miles south of that place, the dead body of Nelson Daughres, who was shot by Fullerton just before the train came along.

Daughres was a fugitive from justice and had taken to the woods at Lake Port. Deputy Fullerton came on him unexpectedly and demanded that he surrender. Daughres in reply pulled up his rifle and drew a bead on Fullerton, but the latter was too sudden for him and shot him through the body. The train coming along at the time he was carried to the station, where he was put aboard in hopes that his life might be saved, but he died before arriving in Bemidji. Both deputies are much agitated over the event.

CLEAN YOUR WHEAT.

Much Money Spent in Transporting Tons Upon Tons of Dirt.

The Duluth Board of Trade has sent out the following circular for the benefit of the farmer:

The farmers of the Northwest little realize the enormous sums of money contributed to the railroads and elevators by shipping dirty wheat and other dirty grains to market.

It would seem that if they did, steps would be taken to clean grain on the farm, and even though it were not possible to feed the foul seeds it would appear as though it would pay to clean the grain and burn the screenings.

During the year ending August 31, the average freight rate of 14 cents per 100 lbs. there was paid in freight $300,000.

Now than two-thirds of this stuff was burned here to get rid of it; the balance about 2,000 cars, or 40,000 tons, was sold to feeders as screenings, netting about $150,000.

Here is a value of $300,000 yearly contributed by the country to waste. Probably the figures for Minneapolis would run up as much more.

$1,000,000 seems too large a sum to be wasted in that way.

Wheat Outlook Along the N. P.

President Mellen, of the Northern Pacific, in reviewing the crop situation along his road, recently said:

We can expect normal receipts until after Oct. 15. By that time the plowing will be under way, and then receipts at terminals should be heavy. Yields that are being reported along our line would indicate 14 or 15 bushel crop for North Dakota, and 13 bushel crop for North Dakota, which is about an average crop. The quality varies widely in different localities. Wheat in the Red River Valley is in good condition, and barring smut, of which there is considerable, will grade largely No 1 Northern; on the other hand, some localities are turning out very poorly. Heavy rains at harvest time caused much wheat to bleach and some of it to sprout. It is more or less shrunken, on account of hot winds, and is grading in a great many instances as low as No. 3 or rejected. Aside from smut, wheat is very free from dirt and foul stuff this year.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

ABSOLUTELY PURE

Makes the food more delicious and wholesome

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

Notes From Exchanges.

Ada Index: The farm telephone costs only $25 a mile to put up, including one telephone. Each additional instrument costs $10. No other outlay would prove as profitable to the farmer. If he could talk from his home with the business man, lawyer or doctor it would be a wonderful convenience.

Halstad Reporter: O. S. Huge threshed about 1000 bushels of wheat, yielding about 13 bushels. He has 45 acres more to pick up on his half stricken field, which according to former experiment will also yield 13. He says his field was very heavy and partly lodged before the hail, so that's what partly saved it. The wheat which is yet uncut has lost nothing in quality or color.

Warren Register: W. H. Bradley and family, who were among the pioneer settlers of Farley township in Polk county, have tonight for sale a farm which will hereafter be their home and where Mr. Bradley expects to engage in the business of stock raising. The neighbors and friends of Mr. and Mrs. Bradley regret exceedingly their departure, and trust that health and prosperity will attend them in their new home.

Willmar Tribune: L. J. Boudette, of Kandiyohi, claims the banner for raising oats, and we believe no one in Kandiyohi county can successfully dispute it. He threshed 830 bushels from 8 acres, making a yield of 103½ bushels to the acre. The oats were from seed imported from Michigan a few years ago. Mr. Boudette is having many calls from his neighbors who wish to purchase seed from this great yielding oat.

Thirteen Towns: Fosston should have a flax mill. One of these mills at Moorhead grinds up sixty tons of flax straw daily. The product is then shipped to eastern paper mills and made into pure linen paper. Here where power could be obtained readily and cheaply from the municipal power plant, there is a grand opening for such an institution as this. Large quantities of the raw material now being raised in this vicinity.

Minneapolis Journal: In Preston, Iowa, the town social, the kissing bee and other hilarious social events will have to pay for notices. As a direct result of the organization of the Fillmore county editorial association notices have been made taboo and a charge of 5 cents a line established. Weekly papers all over the state are getting down to this cash basis. Why not? Nobody ever heard of the stores giving away their wares; why should the village newspaper donate its space?

Elk River Star-News: Gov. Lind is evidently preparing a nice little whip saw on the grain inspection business. It is noticed that the only changes made are in the heads of departments. The people who do the work are all republicans yet and it is not likely they will be changed before the crop is inspected. If the grain turns out more satisfactory than heretofore, he will point to the fact of changes in the heads of departments as the cause; if the grade continues unsatisfactory, it will be laid to the republican understrappers.

Anoka Union: If I should be required to pick out a thousand of the biggest liars in the State of Minnesota, without a moment's hesitation I should seek the newspaper offices and ask the privilege of looking over their subscription lists, and I'd mark those subscribers who are away back in arrears. The Old Nick himself would be put to shame besides them, and they tell the worst kind of lies, too. Never subscribed for the paper; have paid a part and never got credit; pay next month without fail; told me I needn't pay because of favors performed; and a dozen or more quite as ridiculous. Hardly think I would have a hard task to furnish the thousand, do you?

Cass Lake Times: When we saw him ("Doc" Rutledge) dodge out the back door, a few mornings ago, and take a freight train to the county seat, we suspected that there was something important, and when he returned at night, his face wreathed in catching smiles, it was apparent that things had gone his way. Yes, "Doc" has bid adieu to bachelor life and has joined the benedicts, and The Times heartily approves not only his conduct in taking the important step, but fully approves and admires the object of his choice; and we assure his Crookston friends that the maiden was not born in a wigwam, nor does she dress her pedals in moccasins. Mrs. Rutledge is a sensible, fair-looking lady, and the friends of the happy groom can safely congratulate him and—send their congratulatory gifts.

Moorhead News: The act of James J. Hill, president of the Great Northern Railroad company in tendering free colonist sleepers to the old soldiers and their families going to national encampment, G. A. R., held at Philadelphia, was one of great generosity and saved the comrades many dollars. It also had the effect to reduce the fare, that had been agreed upon between the various lines, the amount of the fare on such colonist sleepers, or about $6.00, so that the generous act not only affected those who rode on Mr. Hill's colonist sleepers, but all comrades and others who went to Philadelphia to attend the encampment.

Pioneer Press: The postoffice department at Washington will ask congress to appropriate $1,000,000 for rural free delivery next year, and a recommendation will be made that $150,000 be immediately available. This year's appropriation of $300,000 has been practically allotted to stations now established, and unless funds are made available soon after congress meets the extension of the service will be seriously interfered with. Mr. Machen, superintendent of the free delivery service, said that his report will be conclusive as showing the success of rural free delivery. He believes there will be little delay in allowing the additional amount needed.

The Farmer: No dairyman who makes a study of his business is satisfied with ranning his herd once a day. If his cattle can be induced to drink two or three times a day he is glad of it. All the cattle may not be equally thirsty at the same time. Cows require an immense amount of water, as every farm boy has noticed. Experiments have shown that the average milch cow needs about 81 pounds of water a day while in milk—this is nearly ten gallons—and over 30 pounds while dry. Of this the cow in milk takes rather more than two-thirds as drink and the rest in her food, while the dry cow takes rather less than two-thirds as drink and little more than one-third in her food.

Deaths.

BARNESS

On Sunday Sept. 24, at his home about seven miles east of Crookston C. T. Barness, aged 71 years, of heart disease. The funeral was held yesterday morning the services being in charge of Rev. Mr. Jamison. The interment took place in the cemetery near the deceased's late home.

HOLSTEAD.

At Brainerd, Tuesday, Sept. 26, Mrs. N. Holfstad, mother of G. J. Holfstad, of this city. Mr. Holfstad had gone to Brainerd the first of the week to bring his mother back with him to Crookston but she died unexpectedly a short time after he reached there. She has been ill for years.

CORNELIUS

Miss Mary Corcelius, aged 28 years, died at her father's home three miles east of the city, last Friday morning. The deceased has for years been suffering from the dread disease consumption and though one winter was spent in the south the benefits resulting were only temporary. The funeral took place from her late home Sunday. She was laid to rest in Oakdale cemetery.

A STRINGENT FOOD LAW.

Prohibits the Use of Arsenic or Alum in all Articles of Diet.

The law enacted by the Missouri legislature, a copy of which was recently published in our columns, and which prohibits the manufacture or sale of any article intended for food or to be used in the preparation of food, which contains alum, arsenic, ammonia, etc., places that state in the lead in the matter of sanitary legislation.

Laws restricting the use of alum in bread have been in force in England, Germany and France for many years. In this country, in Minnesota, Wisconsin, Michigan, Ohio, Kentucky and several other states, direct legislation in reference to the sale of alum baking powders has also been effected. In several of these states their sale is prohibited unless they are branded to show that they contain alum, and in the District of Columbia, under the laws of congress, the sale of bread containing alum has been made illegal.

Following are the names of some of the brands of baking powder sold in this vicinity which are shown by recent analysis to contain alum. Housekeepers and grocers should cut the list out and keep it for reference:

BAKING POWDERS CONTAINING ALUM:
K. C. } .....Contain Alum.
Manf. by Jaques Mfg. Co., Chicago.
CALUMET.....Contains Alum.
Manf. by Calumet Baking Powder Co. Chicago.
PALACE.....Contains Alum.
Manf. by Palace Baking Powder Co., St. Paul.
CAMEO.....Contains Alum.
Manf. by Cameo Baking Powder Co., Chicago.
RON BON } .....Contain Alum.
HOTEL }
Manf. by Grant Chemical Co., Chicago.
RENOWN.....Contains Alum.
Manf. by Griggs, Cooper & Co., St. Paul.
ATLAS.....Contains Alum.
Manf. by Reid, Murdock & Co., Chicago.
CHAPMAN'S CHICAGO YEAST } .....Contain Alum.
Manf. By Chapman & Smith Co., Chicago.
BUDY'S.....Contains Alum.
Manf. by Eddy & Eddy, St. Louis.
SUPERIOR.....Contains Alum.
Manf. by Superior Baking Powder Co., St. Paul.
UNRIVALLED.....Contains Alum.
Manf. by Sprague, Warner & Co., Chicago.
PUBLIC SWEET BISCUIT...Contains Alum.

The housekeeper should bear in mind that alum makes a cheap baking powder. It costs but two cents a pound while cream of tartar costs thirty. The quality of the powder is therefore usually indicated by the price.

DEWEY IS RESTING

NOT COMING ASHORE UNTIL AFTER THE NAVAL PARADE.

The Admiral Says He Feels a Little Tired but Is Looking Exceedingly Well—Has Nothing to Say on Political Questions and Disowns All Published Interviews of That Nature.

NEW YORK, Sept. 27.—The United States cruiser Olympia, with Admiral Dewey on board, which arrived in American waters at dawn Tuesday, remains at anchor near Saady Hook lightship. The programme had been for the battlesbip Texas to meet the Olympia and escort her into the harbor, but the early arrival of the cruiser disarranged all plans. The marine observers along the coast had sighted the Olympia in the first light of the morning. The shore batteries of Fort Hancock, manned by gunners called from breakfast, let loose 17 guns. The flagship replied with 21 and let go her anchors not far from where the cup challenger Shamrock is moored.

To an Associated Press reporter, who went aboard the Olympia shortly after she came to anchor, the admiral said:

Cannot Express His Appreciation.

"It almost saddens me to see what my people are doing for me. The pride and gratification is immense and I cannot express the appreciation I feel. I didn't know, I didn't really perceive until this morning, the splendid welcome that my countrymen are giving me."

The admiral stroked the head of a tawny-haired dog and continued:

"Bob, here, is not well. He yearns to be ashore. He is sick to get a little grass and to scamper around. I feel a good deal that way myself. I am mighty glad to get home. It isn't good for a man any more than a dog to live on shipboard for 23 months."

The admiral said that he felt tired, but he did not look so. His complexion is clear bronze, his hazel eyes bright, his bearing brisk and rather jaunty.

Not Discussing Politics.

The admiral's manner is gentle and kind, but he is exceedingly wary and did not permit himself to wander off into politics or to exercise those positive views he no doubt holds about the Philippines and American affairs there. His attention was brought to interviews in which he is described as going rather fully into the character of the Filipinos and their capabilities for self-government.

"I cannot stand for any interview giving my opinions on political subjects and the Philippines. I disown any views ascribed to me on those subjects."

Alluding to his arrival two days ahead of the time he was expected Admiral Dewey said he was sorry, but that it was better to be two days ahead than a day behind.

The Olympia in Good Shape.

The Olympia looks as smart now as a yacht. The anchors were hardly down before details of the crew were washing the ship's white sides and touching up the stains with paint.

The admiral's first business was to send an officer ashore with telegrams for the navy department, Mayor Van Wyck and General Butterfield announcing the arrival. He then spent most of the morning in looking over newspapers and receiving reporters. He was just finishing a midday breakfast when Sir Thomas Lipton called on him. With Sir Thomas were Dr. Mackay and other visiting Englishmen.

DISTINGUISHED CALLERS.

Admirals Sampson and Philip Among the Early Visitors.

Admiral Dewey then had a succession of notable callers. Rear Admiral Sampson, with Captain Chadwick, his chief of staff, and Lieutenant Commander Winslow, his flag lieutenant, came on the Dolphin. When the dispatch boat was a mile away it began firing an admiral's salute and the Olympia replied with a rear admiral's salute of 13 guns. The Dolphin anchored near the Olympia and Rear Admiral Sampson and his staff went on board. They were received by Admiral Dewey, Captain Lamberton, Lieutenant Brumby and the officer of the deck, the full marine guard and band being paraded. The officers went to the admiral's cabin and remained on board for more than an hour. Admiral Philip, accompanied by Commander Kelly, called later in the day.

Eleven Cases of Typhoid.

Dr. Sanborne of the port physician's staff, visited the Olympia and looked at her papers. Eleven of the crew of 375 men have typhoid fever. Some of the cases are convalescent and all of them are of a mild type. With this exception the sailors and marines are well.

The admiral, about 5 o'clock, returned Sir Thomas Lipton's visit. Lieutenant Brumby and the admiral's son, George J. Dewey, were with him. Sir Thomas met the admiral at the starboard gangway with his first officer and the entire party went to the after cabin, where the health of the admiral, the Shamrock, and, of course, the Columbia, was drunk amid enthusiasm.

Admiral Dewey purposes, unless his plans shall be changed by the reception committee, to bring the Olympia up the lower bay and anchor inside the harbor with the squadron of United States warships off Tompkinsville, of which squadron he is now in superior command.

DIAZ NOT COMING.

Illness of His Wife Compels Him to Abandon the Trip.

CITY OF MEXICO, Sept. 26.—President Diaz cannot go to Chicago on account of the illness of Mme. Diaz. He has appointed Ignaz Marschall, minister of foreign affairs, to go as his representative.

OHIO CAMPAIGN OPENS.

Roosevelt, Nash and Others Explain Matters Political to Buckeyes.

AKRON, O., Sept. 25.—The Republican state campaign was opened here with one of the largest crowds known in the history of politics in Ohio.

Judge Nash arrived from Columbus at 7 a. m., accompanied by Colonel Charles Dick, Secretary of State Kinney and others.

Governor Roosevelt and his escort, the Tippecanoe club of Cleveland, did not arrive until after 12 o'clock. An immense crowd greeted them at the station and the party was taken to the Hotel Buchtel. From here, Judge Nash, Governor Roosevelt, Senator Hanna, Colonel Dick and other distinguished guests went to the Elks club rooms where they ate dinner with the newspaper men. This was an entirely nonpartisan affair. Afterwards Judge Nash and Governor Roosevelt received the college delegations, of which there were several large ones present.

The parade moved at 2 o'clock. It was in six divisions and in charge of Captain A. Wagener, as general marshal.

The most conspicuous features were the escorts of Governor Roosevelt and Judge Nash, the one of veterans of the Spanish-American war and the other of veterans of the Civil War. The speaking was held at Grace Park, within whose confines 25,000 people were gathered, only a small portion of whom could get within range of the speakers' voices. Judge N. B. Tibbals, presided; President Ira Priest of Buchtel college offered prayer and the Columbus Glee club of 100 voices sang. Judge Nash was the first speaker and was followed by Governor Roosevelt.

FOR THE GOLD STANDARD.

Republican Caucus Committee's Financial Bill So Provides.

CHICAGO, Sept. 23.—Congressman Joseph W. Babcock of Wisconsin, a member of the Republican caucus financial committee, which this summer drew up a financial bill, said at the Auditorium:

"The bill agreed upon by the committee and to be introduced at the next session is in my possession. It provides for a formal declaration in favor of the gold standard. If it becomes law the country will be avowedly and explicitly upon the gold basis. The senate committee has not yet concurred, but there will be no practical difficulty between the committees of the two houses. The bill is likely to pass both houses."

THE PRESIDENT'S TRIP.

Will Leave Washington on Oct. 4 and Return About the 19th.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 27.—Tuesday's cabinet meeting discussed the itinerary of the president's trip and the following programme was agreed upon: Leaving here on the 4th the party will proceed to Quincy, Ills., arriving there on the 6th. They will go to Galesburg on the 7th and to Chicago the next day, reaching that city at 3:30 p. m. On the 11th they will be in Evansville, on the 12th in St. Paul and Minneapolis, the 13th in Duluth and later the same day in Fargo, the 14th in South Dakota, the 15th in Sioux City, the 16th and 17th in Milwaukee and the 18th in Cleveland.

A FIENDISH WEAPON.

It Would Kill and Leave No Mark to Tell the Tale.

"I have handled a good many outlandish weapons," said a New Orleans curio dealer, "but here is a little instrument that for pure diabolism beats anything I ever saw in my life. I bought it the other day from a Norwegian sailor, who tells me it was given to him by a Jap at Yokohama—a story that you may take for what it is worth."

As he spoke he opened a show case and took out what seemed to be an ordinary Chinese marking brush of rather large size. The handle was some ten inches long and the diameter of a lead pencil. By giving it a sharp twist it separated about a hand's breadth from the end, after the manner of a sword cane, and attached to the small end was a slender glass rod with a needle point. The rod was not much thicker than a knitting needle, and with the handle it had the effect of a very small and delicate stiletto.

"I should think that would break if it were used to stab with," remarked the visitor after examining the contrivance.

"Certainly it would," replied the dealer, "and that is where the fiendishness of the thing comes in. Look closely at the glass rod and you will see a tiny groove filed around it about two inches from the hilt. Suppose that it was driven into the body of a man, it would be certain to break at the groove and would leave at least three inches of glass buried in his vitals. The puncture would be so small that it would close when the stump was drawn out, and I doubt exceedingly whether a single drop of blood would follow. In other words, the victim could receive his deathblow without knowing exactly what had happened to him. He would feel a shock and a pang, but find no wound, and meanwhile the assassin would stick his brush together and go about his business.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Mutual Aid.

From the time that the mother binds the child's head till the moment when some kind assistant wipes the damp from the brow of the dying we cannot exist without mutual aid. All, therefore, that need aid have a right to ask it from their fellow mortals. None who hold the power of granting aid can refuse it without guilt.

True It Is.

"Gur-rnls are niver satisfied," mused the janitor philosopher. "Whin they are in short skirts, they are crying fer long wans, an whin they git long wans they have to hold thim up."—Chicago News.

OF NATIONAL SCOPE

CHICAGO CIVIC FEDERATION TO BROADEN ITS FIELD.

Object of the Organization Is to Provide for the General Discussion of Current Problems and Try and Secure Desirable Legislation — Work Which Has Been Accomplished.

CHICAGO, Sept. 25.—The executive committee of the Civic Federation of Chicago has authorized its president, Franklin H. Head, to appoint a committee of 25 to organize a national civil federation. The committee is to be composed of men representing different sections of the country and different phases of social, economic and political activity. The object of such an organization is stated to be to provide for a thorough discussion and consideration of questions of national import affecting either the foreign or domestic policy of the United States; to aid in the crystallization of the enlightened public sentiment of the country in respect thereto; and to promote necessary legislation in accordance therewith. The leaders of the Chicago Federation for some time, deeming it essential if the national work were to become anything more than educational.

Have Contemplated This Move

In January, 1898, the Chicago Civic Federation called a national conference on primary elections and municipal reform which was held in New York and was attended by representatives of over forty of the largest cities of the United States. The impetus given by this conference to primary election reform legislation resulted in both New York and Illinois securing new laws at the following sessions of their respective legislatures. But beyond this and the publication and distribution of proceedings, the Chicago Federation has found it impracticable to go.

In August, 1898, it called, at Saratoga, a national conference on the

which after two days of animated debate by the leading men of all parties unanimously agreed upon some broad general principles which called for further effort to render the action of permanent value to the country. This work could not be followed up by the Chicago organization.

The four days' trust conference recently held in Chicago was not expected to agree upon general principles, but it was believed the free discussion by the representatives of so many schools of thought would furnish material and a basis for thorough work hereafter. It is to make it possible to follow up the practical lines suggested by the conference that the National Civic Federation is projected.

REPORTED BY WATSON.

Says the Insurgent Fire Was Heavy, but Poorly Aimed.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 25.—Acting Secretary Allen of the navy department has received a cable from Rear Admiral Watson giving a brief account of the engagement at Subig bay. It says:

"Mandora discovered heavy gun mounted opposite Kalaklaa point, Subig bay; exchanged shots with Charleston. Sent Charleston, Monterey, Concord and Zafiro with detachment of marines and sailors from Baltimore to capture and destroy. Attacked insurgent position 23d; after bombardment, landing party carried entrenchments, routed enemy and destroyed one 16-centimeter Krupp gun. William Shepherd, apprentice, second class, Charleston, seriously wounded. Insurgent fire heavy, but poorly aimed. Enemy's loss unknown. Full report mailed."

The important feature of the engagement is the fact which is disclosed that the insurgents have been able to obtain Krupp guns. It was known at the time of the outbreak of the insurgents against the Americans that the artillery of the insurgents consisted of a few obsolete guns captured from the Spaniards.

DESTROYED A GUNBOAT.

Crew of the Urdaneta in the Hands of Filipinos.

MANILA, Sept. 26.—4:30 p. m.—The insurgents have captured the United States gunboat Urdaneta in the Orani river, on the northwest side of Manila bay, where she was patrolling. One officer and nine of her crew are missing.

The United States gunboat Petrel, sent to investigate the matter, has returned and reported that the Urdaneta is beached opposite the town of Orani on the Orani river. She was riddled with bullets and burned, and the following guns, with their ammunition, were captured:

A 1-pounder, one Colt automatic gun and one Nordenfeldt 25-millimetre gun.

The crew of the Urdaneta are prisoners or have been killed. Further details are lacking.

CADET WOOD KILLED.

Admiral Watson Informed of the Fate of the Urdaneta Commander.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 27.—A dispatch has been received at the navy department from Admiral Watson saying that he is informed through insurgent sources that Naval Cadet Welborn C. Wood was killed in the action when the gunboat was captured by the insurgents. Wood was appointed from Georgia and had not graduated from the naval academy.

The name and rate of Americans of the crew of the Urdaneta who all of them were attached to the Oregon, are as follows:

Benjamin James Green, coxswain; William Mitchell, seaman; Samuel Tilden Herbert, ordinary seaman; Edward Burke, ordinary seaman; George Daniel Powers, apprentice first class; Arthur William Drummond, machinist first class; John James Farlay, fireman first class; Thomas Grey, fireman second class; Samuel Stone, seaman.

QUICK ACTION URGED

MOVEMENT OF BRITISH TROOPS ALARMING BURGHERS.

Want the Government to Warn England That Further Mobilization of Troops Will Be Regarded as an Unfriendly Act—Official Text of the Latest Note of Secretary Chamberlain.

LONDON, Sept. 26.—A special dispatch from Pretoria says that the members of the volksraad, believing that the British notes are intended to gain time for the concentration of troops, urged the government to adjourn the raad immediately and to send Great Britain a note delaring that further mobilization will be regarded as an unfriendly act.

Trenches, earthworks and sandbag defenses are being erected at all available approaches to the capital.

LONDON, Sept. 25.—The Transvaal situation presents no new features. Dispatches from Johannesburg report a complete dislocation of the Rand mining industry. The exodus continues and all the mines are closing.

The Bloemfontein correspondent of the Manchester Guardian, a pro-Boer organ, says:

"Both President Steyn and Mr. Fischer of the Orange Free State executive inform me that the volksraad is absolutely unanimous that the two republics should stand or fall together. President Steyn said:

"'Suppose we remained neutral and the Transvaal were conquered it is not likely that we would long be permitted to stand outside British control. Let a rich gold field be discovered and what would become of us?'"

CHAMBERLAIN'S NOTE.

Tells Kruger Further Negotiations on Old Lines Are Useless.

LONDON, Sept. 26.—The officials of the foreign office have given out the text of the letter of the secretary of state for the colonies, Mr. Chamberlain, to the British commissioner in South Africa, Sir Alfred Milner, dated Sept. 22. The British reply expresses regret that her majesty's offer of Sept. 8 had been refused and says:

"The object her majesty's government had in view in the recent negotiations has been stated in a manner which cannot admit of misapprehension, viz.: To obtain such substantial representation for the outlanders as will enable them to secure for themselves that just and fair treatment which was formally promised them in 1881, and which her majesty intended to secure for them when she granted privileges of Self-Government to the Transvaal.

No conditions less comprehensive than these contained in the telegram of Sept. 8 can be relied on to effect this object. The refusal of the South African government to entertain the offer thus made, coming as it does after four months of protracted negotiations, themselves the climax of five years of extended agitation, makes it useless to further pursue the discussion on the lines hitherto followed, and the imperial government is now compelled to consider the situation afresh and formulate its own proposals for a final settlement of the issues which have been created in South Africa by the policy constantly followed for many years by the government of South Africa. They will communicate the result of their deliberations in a later dispatch."

TRANSVAAL SITUATION.

Believed the British Parliament Will Assemble Shortly.

LONDON, Sept. 27.—The Transvaal situation presents few new features. It is increasingly probable that parliament will meet about the middle of October, and it is again asserted that General Sir Redvers Buller, who is to have supreme command of the British forces in South Africa in the event of hostilities, will start for the Cape on Oct. 7. Nothing, however, has been officially made known on either point.

The Transvaal government was in constant telegraphic communication with Bloemfontein all day on the reply to Mr. Chamberlain's dispatch. It is believed the reply will protest against the constant dispatch of British troops as a menace to the Transvaal.

The Pretoria Volksstem, the organ of the Transvaal government, declares that the Transvaal executive ought to give Great Britain at the most 48 hours to reply to the Transvaal's demand that no further troops be landed, pending the receipt of British proposals.

VICTORY IN CEBU.

Seven Forts and Several Cannon Are Taken.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 27.—A dispatch has been received from Manila by the war department stating that General Snider attacked the position of the insurgent five miles west of Cebu and destroyed seven forts and quite a number of smooth-bore cannon. The insurgents were utterly routed and Snider returned with his force to Cebu. The Tennessee regiment was already aboard transport to come home, but disembarked to take part in the engagement.

SYNOPSIS.

Chapter I.—Tom Scott, a New England farmhand, decides to go to Klondike to search for gold. In Boston he rescues a Mr. Avery from footpads, and as his new acquaintance is also going to Klondike, he helps him to accompany him, and the lawful ing is accepted. They take passage on the Seabird, a sailing vessel bound for Dyea.

Chapter II.—They board the vessel and meet Capt. Dyea Bill Dyea, whom the agent of the line had secured, proves to be an old enemy of Tom's. Tom had accused his father of deserting the child which he was captain and taking with him the money and some dollars of the owner's gold. Tom's father had not been home since the accusation had been made, but when then a child not believe it, and attempted to whip the man. A fight ensued, broke the mate's head. While the mate finds Tom on board the vessel he vows to be avenged by the Skipper.

Chapter III.—During the passage Mr. Avery is knocked overboard accidentally and Tom again saves his life by jumping into the ocean after him. They help is injured internally and about to die. He calls Tom to his side and tells him all he owns, $2,000, and about him there is a rich gold region which his partner has not discovered and where he was going to join them. He gives Tom a letter from one of them which gives direction for finding the territory, the possession of which and Avery's will be his proof or identification when he gets there.

Chapter IV.—Rider hears the man's conversation with Tom and determines to get the papers and the gold which they entitle the holder to. In San Francisco Tom is waylaid and robbed by Rider of the paper and what money he had with him, but the majority of his cash was on board the Seabird, which is found by the second mate on the Seattle Queen, who has left the sea to search for gold. Tom takes passage on her to Juneau.

Chapter V.—At Dyea Rider meets Tom's father, who has been in the gold fields and is returning home with a fortune. He asks for his name and his brother, and is glad that both are dead, saying that Tom died in Prince and was buried by the captain of the Seabird. After giving Rider good advice as to his future conduct he sails.

Chapter VI.—Rider believes Rider has stolen Tom's paper and money, and they try to find him.

Chapter VII.—In Dyea Rider has formed a partnership with Bowers, whom he knows. They leave Dyea in search for the golden gold the day after Tom and Green reach Sheridan without them being aware of their presence. Tom rescues a woman from the hands of a tramp and finds that she is the daughter of a brother of the man who bought his father's farm, and whose name he had been unable to recall. She tells them on her way to the diggings of the death of her brother and uncle. Tom tells his story and also of his brother's death.

Chapter VIII.—In the meantime Rider and Bowers are on their way on the Dalton trail. They meet one of the natives of the country and trade with Dyea for provisions and secure what information they can about him after hearing him tell his story. Avery and telling their story, which he does not believe.

Chapter IX.—Tom and his party meet the same man a day or two later and have some trouble in convincing him of the truth of their story. They reach the gold mine, Avery's partner receives a handsome donation of provisions for all, the miner turns back instead of going on to Dyea, and Tom reaches the mine and give him the agreed upon signal.

Chapter X.—The partner who remained at the mine meets in Avery an old California partner whom he had known in the days of the wild romance of the Klondike strike. They mutually trade goods through a concealed hole in the wall of the cabin, which the two discharge are and cover with a stone. Rider and Bowers have in the meantime lost their way. Bowers overtakes the Avery party by the fire which they had built, and after resting Rider lurks in the bushes with their horses, he attempts to get into the rich territory. The first attempt is a heavy loss, and finding that the small entrance in an effort to block the passage Jim Bowers is smothered.

Chapter XI.—Recounts the experiences of Rider and Bowers in their efforts to reach the hidden wealth.

Chapter XII.—Bowers succeeds in climbing over the obstruction by use of a rope and assistance, to the partners that he had found Rider had stolen the papers which he had given to Tom Scott, and that Dyea and all were anxious to catch him and granted by force of circumstances. In the other section of the hidden district found that which they had been working the partners had immense gold deposits and soon all are wealthy.

CHAPTER XIII.

ROBBING THE CAVE.

Hank Bowers had been keenly aware of what was going on about him. He had worked steadily at his claim, and would have considered himself a lucky dog had he not seen the men opposite him carrying their findings to the cave each night in a heavy canvas bag, of which they had a large supply.

"They're digging for me."

This was his secret consolation and apparently it satisfied him. His plans bode fair to come out right and the other kept his word and returned. This was the only disturbing thought. It was the fear that his associate might fail him that induced him to delve with all his might in order that he might have gold of his own honestly if he could get it no other way.

On the morning of the twelfth day he saw the others were all at their work before he made his way to the top of the cliff. Although he knew the young girl would see him, he did not suppose she would attach any particular importance to the matter.

The sun was just showing above the horizon as he glanced sharply toward the diseased bowlder, where a man's figure stood out in plain sight. Even as he looked it disappeared.

"He's got more sand than I thought," muttered Bowers as he made his way back to his claim and worked away with feverish energy. "I must finish it to-night or never!"

He retired to his tent as usual that night, but not to sleep. He had other work to do. As soon as he was satisfied the rest were asleep he made his way cautiously to the cleft in the rock which led to the plain below. On one shoulder he carried the results of his two weeks' labor in the shape of a weighty bag of gold, while in his hand was a rope ladder which he had fashioned at his leisure.

To fasten the last to the top of the obstructing bowlder was an easy task, added by the light of a match, which could not be seen outside. Down the rope he let his way, and after some trouble reached the plain, where the starlight made the rest of the way comparatively easy.

As he approached the rock he saw a dark figure hastening to meet him and a moment later Obed Rider stood before him, saying:

"Is it you, Bowers?"

"Yes, Rider, it's me an' yer a brickt Right on time!"

"I got here yesterday. Sold the horses for $150 apiece and put the coin in a safe place there. Got three horses for the whole here. What are you going to do?"

"Uh, the hosses an' fuller not" said Bowers, hurriedly. "I'll explain later on."

Rider obeyed, and as they made their way across the plain he asked again what his companion intended to do.

"All we've got to do is ter wait where I put yer an' do as I tell yer, an' to-morrer you'll be a rich man," replied Bowers, mysteriously.

When they reached the base of the cliff he fastened the animals securely and led the way into the narrow passage, saying:

"Hold on to my coat. It isn't far."

Then they came to the rope ladder he struck a match and whispered:

"Shet here till I come an' pass somethin' down ter yer. Take it out an' fasten it on the hoss an' come back. If yer hear any shootin' come up an' glimme a hand!"

Without waiting for Rider to reply he ascended the ladder, leaving the latter in the dark passage and in no enviable frame of mind.

"I'm in for gold," he muttered, as he crept silently toward the cave.

It was a perfect night, and the stars overhead gave sufficient light to enable Bowers to see objects quite a distance away. He was obliged to move very carefully over the broken ground to avoid a fall, but he seemed entirely at home at this sort of work, avoiding rolling stones as if by instinct.

In order to reach the cave he must pass close to the tents, and as he drew near them he redoubled his caution, for his only hope of success lay in stealth. Avery never could recover but he would hear the heavy breathing of the occupants, and for fully five minutes he stood motionless, every sense on the alert.

Apparently the entire party was asleep, and with noiseless step he stole past the two tents and fixed his eyes on the mouth of the cave. The twelve-inch arrival he had managed to peep inside unobserved, and only that morning he had seen the pile of ten ounce bags on the ground to the left. He had also noticed that the boughs and blankets upon which Avery and his daughter slept were on the opposite side.

The hour was within ten feet of the entrance, and after a long pause gazing at the tents behind him he dropped to his knees and crawled deliberately up to it.

Again he paused.

Yes, they were both asleep. He could hear the long-drawn breathing at the right, and plainly distinguish that of the father from the softer one.

Then, like some huge black spider, he crawled into the inky darkness, and was lost to view.

Inch by inch he advanced, guiding himself by the glimpses he had fixed in his mind of the place, until his hand rested on the treasure. The bags were heavy, and he moved them with difficulty in his recumbent position, but he had come prepared.

Thrusting his hand into his bosom, he produced a short, thick thong, with which he fastened two of the largest together, bound after a time he certain he had not disturbed the sleepers.

When this was done he hung them over his arm in such a manner that they swung clear from the floor. His next move was to stuff two small bags into his shirt. Then, with infinite patience, he worked his way back to the door and through it.

His breath came hard as he reached the open air, for the strain had been tremendous. Detection meant almost certain death, and even his iron nerve had not been proof against the situation.

When he had somewhat recovered, he crept slowly by the tents, until satisfied that all was well on the bowlder.

It was the work of a moment to fasten the thong to a rope and lower it down, at the same time whispering loudly to his confederate:

"Are you there, Rider?"

"Yes," came the answer. "What's all this?"

"Hold, you fool!" hissed Bowers. "Lash it on one of the critters, quick!"

For a moment he hesitated. Should he join his partner and make good his escape?

Apparently cupidity won the day, for he began to retrace his steps toward the cave. His first success had made him more confident, and he was well aware that he had not secured half the bags he had just touched.

Again he reached the entrances without noise and crawled to the spot where the gold was piled against the wall.

This time he could only stuff two or three small bags inside his buckskin shirt and grip one in his teeth.

He reached the open air safely and was just rising to his feet when Avery appeared in the mouth of the cave, revolver in hand, shouting:

"Thieves! Thieves! Take that, you robber!"

But before the words were fairly out of his mouth Bowers had dropped the bag which he had brought out in his teeth like a retriever and sprung away in full flight.

Crack! Crack!

He heard the bullets sing over his head.

As he dashed by the tents a man darted out with suspicious promptitude and tried apparently pointblank at his back, but missed him.

A few seconds more and he had reached the rocky cleft and darted out of sight. Down the rope ladder he scrambled, then with great presence of mind he stopped long enough to jerk it free from the spur where it was fast and let it fall.

Rider had not yet returned from his errand and Bowers felt his way rapidly along the passage until he emerged upon the plain.

Running quickly to the horses, where Rider was at work, he cried:

"Jump up! Jump lively an' let's git out o' this! Vamose!"

He set the example by throwing himself on one of the horses and seizing the bridle of the one upon which Rider had been carefully securing the stolen gold. The latter needed no second invitation and a moment later they were hurrying the beasts along the back trail as rapidly as the poor light and the nature of the ground would permit.

For fully two hours they made their way in silence except for an occasional oath from Bowers at the unevenness of the route, then, apparently reassured that they had made good their escape, he exclaimed:

"This is the biggest night's work one man ever done in this 'ere country, Rider. I took big chances an' I won out! It was a great plant!"

"How did you manage it?" asked Rider, eagerly. "Is it all gold to them bags?"

"It ain't nothin' else!"

With great pride he now narrated to his companion the whole villainous scheme, and then added, complacently:

"All they've got ter do is ter dig out some more gold. There's plenty of it ter other like any. They hogged all the best claims, but I'm up ter them now!"

"But they'll be after us, won't they?" asked Rider, fearfully.

"They hain't got no hosses, hev they?" retorted Bowers. "Besides that, they don't know the direction we started for some chap might jump 'em. It's a wonder nobody's struck that place afore."

The two men did not draw rein until day light. When the sun was fairly up they paused on the top of a hill to breathe their horses for a long distance of the route they had traversed, but there was no sign of pursuit.

"I told yer so," said Bowers, triumphantly. "They can't chase us. Let's get some grub an' rest the hosses a bit. If we take 'em into Dyea in any kind o' shape they'll sell for a tidy figger."

Their meal dispatched, they once more assured themselves that no one was in sight behind them, then mounted and headed in a northerly direction.

That night they went into camp just before dark, and Bowers proceeded to unload their ill-gotten gains. The first bag he removed chanced to be the one he had himself filled in his two weeks of toil. As he lifted the second he noticed a very perceptible difference in the weight, although the two bags were of the same size.

"That's d—n strange!" he growled.

But he couldn't her washed their gold very clean."

As he spoke he untied the second bag and thrust his hand within, then with a yell of rage and disappointment he dashed the bag to the ground and stamped upon it like an infuriated animal, when Rider stood aghast, fearing the man had suddenly gone mad.

With a bound Bowers sprang to the pack horse and seized another bag. One fierce slash of his knife rent it its entire length and then Rider comprehended.

Out of it dropped a mass of damp clay and gravel.

Hank Bowers was silent while he laid open the rest of the bags. When he was certain that his own was the only one containing a particle of gold he burst forth in a torrent of blasphemy so terrible that even Rider trembled lest some retribution might instantly follow and declare himself to the truth.

"Sold! Took in like a tenderfoot!" raved his companion, kicking one of the bags in his fury. "What's that?"

As he spoke he picked up a folded paper which had dropped from the bag.

Tearing it open he read the following lines:

"We were too smart for you. Remember that if we find you have given away our secret we will give an account of you to the Canadian police and have you driven out of the country. If you show yourself here we will fill you full of lead."

CHAPTER XIV.

A SECRET NO LONGER.

As the reader is aware, there was no pursuit made after Rider and his companion. The whole matter had been arranged by Avery, who had seen the world-be robber deceived in a similar manner in his younger days. He had been awake through it all, and there had been no intention to shoot the thief. They had purposely aimed wide of the mark.

When he had disappeared they all indulged in a hearty laugh at his discomfiture when he should discover the fraud, then retired to rest with a feeling of relief at the success of their counter-plot.

Freed from the necessity of watching Bowers, they now redoubled their labors and for another fortnight they took only barely sufficient time to sleep. They were constantly in dread lest some prospector should appear, but day after day passed and left them undisturbed.

The unusual labor, however, began to tell on the older men, and one evening Dick Taylor declared, as he threw himself wearily down on his couch:

"I'm about ready to quit. Let's reckon up how we stand."

They had a very indefinite idea of their wealth, as they had made no calculation up to that time, devoting every moment to work. Now they watched eagerly as he produced his scales and began to estimate the weight of the numerous bags containing the result of their arduous toil.

Bag after bag was laid aside in silence until the last had been weighed.

Then came a rapid mental calculation the miner said:

"Well, I make it that we've got about $150,000 worth now. That's about $30,000 apiece, and a very tidy month's work. But I'm tired. I haven't got a great many years to live and I guess I want to enjoy the rest of my days. We can sell our claims here for a big pile any time, and I more that we do it."

"But who is to buy them?" asked Tom, while Avery merely nodded his approval of his friend's sentiments.

"There'll be dozens of capitalists and speculators in Dyea by this time," replied Taylor. "We've got a good deal more here now than we went to carry out on our backs. I move that the rest of you keep on digging here and that I go to Dyea, and find out what kind of a trade I can make. Besides that, the claims must be registered before we can sell them."

"I agree that is the right thing to do," agreed Avery. "We shall be rich enough, and I confess I am anxious to see those claims registered before we leave. Suppose you start to-morrow. I think you'd better start right off, Dick. The season is very short, and it'll take some time to settle the whole thing up even if you find some one right off who wants to buy."

The others were of the same opinion, and it was soon decided that Dick Taylor should start the following morning for Dyea on his unpartnered mission, the rest delegating to him full power to dispose of their interests to the best advantage and to bring the would-be buyers back with him.

Accordingly he started bright and early the next day, the little party watching him from the top of the cliff until he vanished his hand at a turn in the trail and disappeared from view.

With fastless steps the party turned to their work, but the labor of the past few weeks seemed to make itself felt all at once, now that their thoughts had been even temporarily turned toward civilization They had been slaving like beavers each day, their minds intent on adding to their golden store, while at night they slept that sleep of utter exhaustion which only follows hard labor. Suppose we break up a few of the smaller pieces? If we find gold there we shall have something to sell and no mistake."

They had no implements heavier than axes and found below water for a time an hour's disappointing labor the old cry of gold was heard, and a piece of quartz about the size of an egg, the surface of which was a bright yellow, had the appearance of a honeycomb, the cells being filled to overflowing with gold.

As the others gathered about him he exclaimed:

"We've struck it! It's the richest vein I ever saw!"

The heavy lump was passed from hand to hand for examination, and Avery said excitedly:

"If Dick had only known this! This ledge is full of gold!"

"Then I guess we'll better locate here," said a strange voice near the little group.

With a start of surprise they turned to see two roughly-looking miners who had approached them from the wooded side of the valley, their packs on their backs, and who were gazing at the treasure in Avery's hand with greedy eyes.

For a moment our friends were too astonished to speak; then Tarbox

The old man gave a shout of triumph.

stepped forward with extended hand, saying:

"Hello, Mitchell! Where did you come from?"

"Why, it's Joe Tarbox!"

One of the strangers shook his hand warmly and then asked, eagerly:

"What's the show here, Joe? That's a beauty nugget you have there!"

"Are there any more of you?" said Tarbox.

"No; Bill and I are all."

"How did you happen to find us?"

"Saw your smoke last night before dark. We thought it must be somebody out prospecting, and so we took a look over this way this morning. Struck it rich?"

"Yes; we've been here all winter. You see where our claims are staked out. Dick Taylor has gone to register them. Better stake out before anyone else comes. I guess you'll find plenty of room above us. I don't mind telling you we've made our pile here, Bill. We're just found that this quartz ledge is a mine of wealth. See that your claims take in a slice of it."

Before the words were fairly out of his mouth the two men were tearing up the valley like madmen, and before long they had staked out their claims, and were hard at work, bent on the one absorbing quest for gold that had braved the rigors of an arctic winter, thus far without success.

Half an hour later they had scraped away the soil and moss, and sampled the rich gravel just above the lightly covered bed rock. The first pan of gravel was washed out, and a moment later the men Tarbox had accosted as Bill came running up, with a beaming face, crying:

"God bless you, Tarbox, for giving us a straight tip! Look at this! We'll be rich in no time! Look!"

The perspiration was dripping from his face, his clothes were torn and full of mud, but what reeked he of such things? In the pan he held joyously forth was a little heap of coarse gold, which was worth fully $200.

Then, as if remembering that he was wasting time, he turned on his heel and dashed back again like a schoolboy, throwing his arms about his partner and hugging him in the excess of his joy.

Meanwhile Tom and his friends had returned to their diggings. With their crude implements it would be a waste of time to attack the ledge, and they determined to stick to the gravel until Taylor returned. They had only dug down a very small part of their claims as yet.

The following day Tarbox saw a thin column of smoke several miles away, and said to Avery:

"There's more of them coming."

"I guess they may not be coming here," replied the old miner.

"Yes, they are," was the confident rejoinder. "Those two men have seen fire and followed it up. That party off there probably has been following their smoke, and so it goes. There are enough of them to get, you know, others by the score. The only wonder is that we have kept the place to ourselves so long. There'll be a hundred men here before fortnight and a thousand in a month."

About sundown that night a party of fourteen men appeared from the woods, and after a few words with the latest comers staked off claims and went into camp.

Day by day they continued to arrive, but as yet there was room for all. There was no rush, because all who came on found gold so plenty that they remained, and at the end of three weeks there were not over three-score men on the ground.

It was now time for Dick Taylor to return, and our friends began to be anxious about him. Their fears were groundless, however, for one morning he made his appearance, mounted on a horse and leading half a dozen others. With him were two well-dressed strangers, who looked keenly about them as they rode down the valley.

After greeting his friends, he introduced the strangers to the party and said:

"I have brought these gentlemen out to look at our claims. They represent a syndicate of rich capitalists."

He then pointed out the exact location of the claims, after which he took the men to the cave and showed them the bags of gold.

"We want to sell out the whole business," he said, bluntly. "There's what we have taken out. We haven't begun to dig one-quarter of the claims. Take it or leave it, and make up your minds."

"Wait a moment," said Avery, stepping forward with the piece of quartz they had spit open. "See here, Dick, we took this out of that ledge the day you went away. Let them look at it before they make any offer."

"Let me see that!" exclaimed one of the men, quickly, extending his hand. "You found that here?"

"Come and I'll show you the spot."

They followed him in silence and the younger man produced a small hammer with which he chipped off a piece of the rock and examined it closely. Then he gave the other a look which was not lost on our friends and said, with an affectation of carelessness:

"There may be paying quartz here and may not. It would cost a fortune to get machinery here and find out."

But he was not dealing with ignorant men, as he soon found out, for Taylor remarked, quietly:

"That specimen doesn't lie. That ledge of quartz is where all this gold we've been digging came from. It's worth a million to-day. Now, gentlemen, I have no time to waste haggling over the matter. We are no hogs, but you mustn't take us for greenhorns. We've done well here and want to get out. Make us an offer to-morrow. We will give you until to-morrow night to look around and see what you are buying."

His friends gave a prompt assent to this proposition, and the two capitalists had no choice but to acquiesce as gracefully as possible.

The following noon they came to Dick Taylor and offered him $50,000 for the five claims. He laughed and replied:

"Do you think we are foolish? They are worth five times that amount."

An hour later they offered $75,000 and were refused.

Seeing that he was determined, the elder man said:

"We are only authorized to expend $100,000. Will you take that?"

After a short consultation the offer was accepted and preparations were at once commenced for the journey to Dyea, where the formal transfer was to be made.

The youngest of the buyers was to remain at the spot to look after the claims while the other would go to Dyea with them.

The following morning they loaded their wealth on the horses and started for civilization.

RATHER EMBARRASSING.

The Sad Case of the Young Woman Who Wanted to Talk.

A most embarrassing experience was that of a certain West Philadelphia young woman who a few evenings ago attended a reception, in which a number of well known clubwomen participated. It so happened that among these were several who had found their matrimonial yoke an unwelcome one for various reasons and had obtained legal separation from their husbands. To one of these women, quite unwittingly, having just been introduced, the young woman, who is nothing if not vivacious conversationalist, addressed the question:

"By the way, Mrs. R., don't you think divorces is wrong?" The woman, reddening slightly, replied:

"My dear, there are two sides to that question." Perhaps you have not heard my story."

The questioner, embarrassed beyond measure, murmured an excuse and walked away. To the first woman she met she confided her trouble, saying: "Oh, dear! I have just made a most unfortunate remark. You know Mrs. R.? Well I spoke to her about divorce, and she's divorced, you know."

"So am I, my dear," was the smiling reply, and once again the young woman wished that the floor would open under her. She felt so bad that she went to one of the women in charge of the reception and, taking her aside, told her the whole story, asking her advice as to what she should do.

"Do nothing at all, Miss L.," was the reply. "I really don't think there have any horror of the subject so long as it's innocently called up. I know I would not. And I, too, am divorced."

Whereat the conversational mist dropped her hat, and, fearing to say on other word, went home in a hansom.

A Modest Smoke.

The Pittsburg Times is responsible for this tale of black smokes who loved not wisely but well. The organization of the ophidians became so proficient in musical knowledge that he created into a band which was composed of snakes, wiggled up on the organ bench, pushed back the bench their end, grasped with his tail the lever that controls the water motor and proceeded to play the organ with their heads, varying the monotony by crawling over the keys. He secured the choir nearly into his one Sunday by extending the service time.

One Bad Turn Deserved Another.

"Your experience in vaudeville, then, was not very pleasant?" Mr Tragerdy was saying.

"No," replied Lowe Country; "at Oshkosh they threw rocks at each one of us as we came on, for one act."

"Pretty severe way of showing their disapproval."

"Yes; in their efforts to impress us with their utter disgust they left no turn unstoned."—Catholic Standard and Times.

—Supt. J. F. Ketler, of the public schools of Buxton, N. D., came over to Crookston Saturday to meet Mrs. Ketler, who was on her way back from Philadelphia, and other eastern cities.

—W. A. Case, deputy head consul for the Modern Woodmen of America, was at Fertile last week in the interest of that society, but he was unable, at that time, to effect the organization of a lodge.

—Wheat tickets if cashed by a bank must have on them a revenue stamp, but if cashed by an employee of the company issuing the ticket no stamp is needed. So says Deputy Collector Johnson.

—J. E. Flemming, of the township of Lowell, has erected a large square house 24x30, two story. Also a new barn 28x48. He farms a section of land and has plowed 400 acres so far this fall.

—Tom Shaughnessy, foreman of the Warren Register, came down from Warren Monday night and will take in the Carnival. He is temporarily laid up with a sprained hand the result of being thrown from a buggy.

—Clare Young, aged about nine years, fell on a post near the merry-go-round Tuesday night and hurt himself considerably. He, however, is up again and taking in the various sights of the carnival.

—Mrs. Robt. Ray left last Thursday evening for Chicago, where she will visit her daughter Miss Marguerite. She was accompanied by Robt Ray, Jr., as far as Minneapolis, where he will continue his medical studies.

—Seven of the fifteen young men who relied the civil service examination in Crookston last August passed, that is three besides those appointed regular and substitute carriers. These three were Chas. Ahlerlund, Chas. Suhre and A. A. Lommen.

—A. Klinger, of the town of Lowell, just half way between Crookston and Fisher, has put up a neat and attractive granary and feed-mill combined. Size of granary 20x32, and feed shed 12x20. He has also erected an Aermoter windmill.

—Crookston will soon have the telegram call box system. Those business houses sending on an average of about one telegram per day will have one of these boxes which will be connected with the central office and a messenger boy will then call for the telegrams as soon as they are ready.

—J. W. Archbeveolgh, who resides five miles west of Crookston, on the banks of the Red Lake river, has erected a barn this summer the dimensions of which are 30x100 feet. It contains room for fifty head of stock and 150 tons of hay. He has also put up a feed-mill, the power for which is furnished by his wind-mill.

—Mike Flaisiky, living a mile and a half southeast of Fisher, has commenced the erection of a barn 40x60 feet. It will have a cement floor and an asphalt covering on the roof to take the place of shingles. It will be done in about one month. It will be remembered that Mr. Flaisiky's barn was struck by lightning last July. He has been quite successful in experimenting with sugar beets this summer.

—George Holland and James Robinson are inmates of the county jail brought here from East Grand Forks. They will remain the guests of Jailer Lawrence for 30 days. When arrested at East Grand Forks the men were found to be armed with revolvers of good make, worn in holsters strapped around the body in true western style. They also had a very fine selection of skeleton keys. One man had a bundle of new silver spoons and knives of Rogers' make.

—Mike Wentzel, one of Lowell's prosperous farmers, six miles west of Crookston, has built a large barn this summer. Size, 44x100 feet. It will have four rows of stalls with room for 112 head of horses and cattle. It will hold about 200 tons of hay. He built a barn last summer, which is nearly as large as the new one, the dimensions of which are 30x100 and every stall but one is occupied. The two barns cost $5,000, and improve the looks of his place quite materially.

—H. B. McDonald, of Duluth, was robbed of some valuables at Grand Forks last Thursday. As he was boarding the train for Crookston the same evening he noticed several men get on whom he thought might possibly have stolen his watch, etc. He seated himself near them in the coach and pretty soon one of the men pulled out Mr. McDonald's goods. All got off at Crookston where he soon had his man behind the bars. He recovered his property but did not prosecute the thief.

High School Notes.

School will be dismissed this year at the regular time on Friday, instead of at 3:30, as heretofore.

The scholars were greatly pleased to learn that there would only be two days of school this week, as this will save lots of hookey playing on the part of the boys and very probably the girls too.

Miss Roney's classes, with the exception of the advanced algebra, which is reciting to Supt. Hitchcock, are not reciting this week. Miss Roney was called away by the sickness of her father.

The football boys are so enthusiastic that they wear their suits to school in the afternoon so as to get an early start after school. This is the right spirit and should be encouraged. An attempt will be made to get a game with a pickup team on next Saturday.

VOL. XXIII. CROOKSTON, MINNESOTA. THURSDAY, OCTOBER 5, 1899 NO 26

CARNIVAL CAME OFF

On Friday, But Crowd Smaller Than Would Have Been Had There Been No Storm.

LADIES PARADE MOST ARTISTIC

Illuminated Fire Run—The Soldier Girls and Crookston Bachelors—Grand Fireworks.

The Carnival closed Friday night with the fireworks on the river. The crowds in the city were not as large as they would have been had the storm not come just when it did.

During the afternoon of Thursday the vaudeville and other performances took place in the Opera House. In the evening occurred the illuminated run of the Crookston fire company and this was a fine sight. Two of the company's fire wagons were loaded with firemen and the horses came dashing down Broadway at full speed, each fireman all the while sending off Roman candles and rockets and along side in a single rig galloped Chief Morris and Charley Hitchcock.

Friday was bright though a little cold and on this day was given all the entertainment that had been planned for Thursday and Friday. All day long the Crookston, Fosston and Argyle bands kept playing and wherever they went the people followed. Both in the morning and afternoon Prof. Clark leaped from the high tower on the Northern Pacific railroad bridge into the river.

In the afternoon was the traveling men's and firemen's parade in which also were floats of business establishments. It was headed by the Argyle band, which assuredly is an agreeable of musical artists. After them marched Tom Morris and his fire extinguishers, followed by Thos. Johnstone with the long fire wagon drawn by A. J. McKinnon's black team dressed in white harness. Next came the Crookston band, which is certainly an organization Crookston has reason to be proud of and never did they play better. These were followed by the traveling men, who were appropriately dressed to represent many different characters. The two drummers taking the part of policeman captured many spectators and made them march in the middle of the parade. The roughriders were unique. Instead of war chargers the rode hobby horses and their effect was comical. The Northwestern Marble works had two floats and six carriages, the latter containing their canvassers. The first float, on which were three monuments near which three young ladies dressed in white, apparently a part of the marble monuments, stood. was indeed very pretty. Then came the Fosston Juvenile band. These dozen or more boys are indeed a remarkable company of juvenile musicians and they have been prime favorites since the time they struck town. Vance & Stone in their successive wagons showed that they had cool wood and sand. The Crookston Steam Laundry had an extremely neat and clean float symbolic of the kind of work that is done there. The parade ended with Clydale's Bakery rig, and floats of J. S. Malm & Co. and H. F. Brown.

Friday evening came the ladies' parade and it was assuredly a thing of beauty. The flower float in which were the Queen of the Carnival, Miss Lottie Anglim and her attendants, Misses Blanche Montague, Olive Fortier, Johnson, Chandler, Filiatrault and Maggie McKinnon, was indeed a bower of loveliness and appliause greeted the young ladies all along the line of march. Uncle Sam's soldier girls in their red, white and blue suits, was another of the attractions and as they marched along in true military fashion bouquets of praise were thrown to them. The Knights of Pythias, the Elks, the Workmen and the W. C. T. U., all had beautifully trimmed and painted floats each fitted up in such a way as to be emblematic of the order. The bachelors of the city in evening dress with black silk hats and canes, and carrying banners on which were inscribed mottoes such as "Unmatched Remnants", "Rejected but Still Hopeful", etc., presented a swell appearance. The twenty-five carriages bedecked and garlanded with flowers were as elegant and pleasing a turnout, in the way of a parade, as perhaps the city ever saw. Neither pains nor money had been spared in the preparation of these fancily festooned rigs, and the rich gowns of the ladies, who were in the carriages, added not a little to the gorgeousness of the array. And not the least attractive feature of the parade was the little tots in the pony carts. Their joyous laughter was music of a higher grade than even the harmony produced by the three bands which on Friday evening as at all other times during the Carnival played most entertainingly.

After the parade the crowds congregated near the bridge leading to Jerome's addition whence down the river they could see the burning of Manila. The fort was stormed and finally burned and verily the Carnival closed amid brilliant colors and a sea of fire.

MINNESOTA PUBLIC SCHOOL.

Hans J. Jager Talks, at Congregational Church, of the Work Done.

Hans J. Jager, who represents the Minnesota state public school located at Owatonna, spoke at the Congregational church in the city last Sunday night. Referring to the history of the institution, the kind of work it is doing, etc., he said: The school was opened thirteen years ago and has received since then, 2,000 children. Of these, 1,400 have been placed in good homes, though 1,200 of these 1,400 are still under the care, to a certain extent, of the state school, while the remaining 300 have either become self-supporting or have been legally adopted. Children are received at the school at the rate of twenty to twenty-five per month, and homes are secured at about the same rate, so that the enrollment is kept at about 250, ranging in age from a few months to 18 years. To care for all the departments of the school fifty people are employed. The average expense of keeping a child in the school is $150 while the average expense for the whole number of children in homes and in the school, is only $33.

It is a great and far-reaching work the state of Minnesota is engaged in. Its system is acknowledged as the best in the country, and with the cooperation of the people in finding homes for the little ones great good is bound to be the outcome.

My Friend From India.

An incident in the career of a well known comedian is worthy of record. During the run of "My Friend from India" in New York, on his arrival at the theatre Mr. Walter Perkins, who was then in the height of his popularity as the theosophical barber in that lively comedy, was handed a package, and upon opening it found it to be decight a full set of gold collar buttons with the following note, the original of which he treasures in his scrap book: Having enjoyed your acting last night and hearing you enquire for a collar button, I take great pleasure in sending you a full set." Mr. Perkins has now under consideration the advisability of some day presenting the gold one to a diamond ring. The result of his venture is awaited by a few choice spirits with the utmost anxiety. At the Grand tonight.

Common School Apportionment.

There is $800,000 to distribute in the October apportionment among the common schools of the state, and about 326,000 children entitled to share in it—one county still estimated. The per capita is $2.72.

The October apportionment last year yielded $2.15 per capita, and the year before $2.50. In '96 it was higher, $2.90 but there are 30,000 more children to share it now than three years ago. The sum available for distribution is $40,000 larger than it was that year. So the school population is growing even faster than the school fund.

Stations at Shelly and Perley.

The Hon. P. M. Ringdal, one of the members of the state railroad and warehouse commission, drove in from Shelly and Perley last Tuesday night and after looking over the business of the Northwestern Marble Works, left yesterday morning on the Duluthrain.

Mr. Ringdal came up to Shelly and Perley to see about the new railway stations these people are asking for and are really in need of. He had with him a civil engineer, who surveyed the site for the stations and Mr. Ringdal will report the conditions to the commission and recommend that the railway be ordered to build a station at both these places. He says that the chances are all in favor of these towns getting stations and that the excuse of the railroad that they could not get a contractor to erect the building was only a subterfuge.

FREE MAIL DELIVERY

Established in the Queen City as Postoffice Receipts are More Than $10,000 a Year

TWO DELIVERIES EVERY DAY

To Business Houses—Three Main Routes—21 Mail Boxes—Mail Collected Twice a Day.

Free delivery of Mail has been established in Crookston and so far everything is running smoothly, thanks to the efficient and hard work of Postmaster Elken and his clerks and mail carriers. In getting the new system started the work naturally has been more difficult than it will be later. The mail carriers have to hustle to get around their routes but they do it just the same. The entire force gets to work at half past six o'clock in the morning and the office does not close till 10 o'clock at night.

It gives the city quite a metropolitan air to have the twenty-one letter boxes placed in different parts of the city and to have Uncle Sam's letter carriers in their handsome gray suits distributing and collecting letters, packages and papers, etc. It is very convenient too, especially for those in the residence portion of the city. That Crookston has so early secured free delivery is much credit is due to Congressman Eddy and Postmaster Elken.

That the citizens of the city may the better understand the workings of the new system Postmaster Elken has prepared a statement with reference to the subject which we herewith publish:

The entire city has been divided into three carrier routes.

The first route embraces the business district south of second to Loring street and east of Main street, including Houston avenue, Ash street from the avenue to Second street, and all of Jerome's addition, and the carrier assigned to this route is Chas. B. Welter who has been designated as Carrier No. 1.

The second route includes all that portion of the city north of Second street, together with Simpson's addition and Chase's addition west of the Great Northern tracks. W. H. Norrie will be the carrier, designated as Carrier No. 2.

The third route includes the west side of Main street from Second south to the river, thence east on Loring to Broadway, south at street to the river, and all the territory south of Houston avenue, including South Crookston and Cormack. William Millette, to be known as Carrier No. 3, will have charge of this route.

The carriers leave the postoffice at 9 a. m., and continue the delivery as speedily as possible until all the morning mails are delivered.

The business portion of the city will be given two deliveries each day, and possibly three if time allows. The residence portion will have one delivery in the forenoon, and so far as possible another in the afternoon.

Twenty-one mail boxes have been placed at convenient interval about the city in a manner to accommodate the greatest number of inhabitants, and therein will be placed all letters to be dispatched.

Mails will be collected from these boxes in the morning when the carriers reach them in the course of their distribution and also in the afternoon, in time for the carriers to reach the postoffice on their return not later than 6 p. m. For postmasters the printed instructions may be consulted on the letter boxes.

Carriers are not allowed to deliver mail to parties whom they meet on the streets, as the mail is so arranged on leaving the office that delay will be caused in so doing.

Carriers will be allowed to carry a limited amount of stamps to accommodate the citizens, but must be tendered correct change to avoid delay.

Any complaints as to service must be made direct to the postmaster at once.

No delivery of mails will be made on Sunday. The carriers each have a window in the postoffice designated by their respective numbers, where patrons will call for their mail. The hours for Sunday delivery will be from 9 to 10:30 a. m. instead of from 12 to 1, as heretofore. Patrons will note the change in time.

Mails arriving later than 5 p. m. are not distributed until the following morning, as carriers are busy collecting at that time.

Those renting lock boxes can get all mail that arrives up to 9 p. m. by calling at the office, the doors of which will be open as late as 10 p. m., except during the hour from 8 to 9 p. m.

Patrons of the office are cautioned to remember that they must receive their mail direct from the carrier or in lock boxes. Parties receiving their mail from the carrier will not be served at the general delivery of the office, as all mail matter when received at the office is placed in the carrier's charge and must be delivered by him.

A "drop letter" is defined by the postal laws as a letter which is addressed for delivery to a person within the delivery of the postoffice at which it is posted.

Heretofore such letters have been allowed to go through the office carrying a one cent stamp. Such letters must now be mailed at the rate of two cents each per ounce or fraction thereof. This ruling includes all bills, statements, invoices or letters of any kind sealed or unsealed. It will be important that patrons bear this fact in mind.

ANDREW EIKEN,
Postmaster.

MAY HAVE ELOPED

John Wittenberg Disappears and Also a Well Known Young Lady.

John Wittenberg, who has, for the past some years, been working for farmers in Western Polk county and just lately for Louis Klinger in the town of Lowell, disappeared from these parts a week ago last night. It seems that he and Mr. Klinger had bought a threshing outfit together and the week Wittenberg collected about $300.00 due from farmers and went south.

Thursday evening Miss Emma Klinger, who is about 15 years old, is supposed to have gone south also and it is thought that the couple arranged to meet perhaps in St. Paul and get married. Miss Klinger had been working for J. P. Marcum for a few weeks and asked for some money. Mrs. Marcum supposing that she wanted some money to spend at the Carnival paid her in advance. Some of Miss Klinger's girl friends now remember that she asked many questions about when and where to buy a round ticket but at the time they thought nothing about the matter.

Knappen Appeals to District Court.

The case of C. C. Knappen vs the Polk county board came up before Judge Mcleran last Monday and the case was decided against the plaintiff who will appeal to the District Court.

The suit was brought by Mr. Knappen to collect $60.00 the value of blanks furnished to county officers who ordered the same from him and used them. The court held that the order should have been endorsed by the county board's purchasing committee and that such an order could only be filled by the order of one of the five papers to which the county printing was given and that Mr. Knappen had no right to do the county printing when he sold the Fisher Bulletin. Mr. Knappen claims that such orders as the above have usually been filled by St. Paul firms and that any way when he sold the Fisher Bulletin he reserved the right to do job printing for the county. The fact that three county officials gave the order to Mr. Knappen would go to show that they were in the habit of doing this and the county records and officials has accepted the work, acknowledges that it was properly done, and has used the blanks. It would certainly seem as if Mr. Knappen were entitled to the $60.00

Schubert Concert Company

We have it on good authority that negotiations are under way for a return performance in our city about Oct 17, by that pleasing musical organization, The Schubert Symphony Club and Lady Quartette of Chicago. Many of our readers have heard this popular company and no doubt every one knows of the high favor in which its eight years of success has placed it. The great variety and popular character of this company's program has endeared it to the hearts of American music-lovers, until today it stands undoubtedly first in their affections. Their new program is said to be the best they have ever presented, and no doubt their house will be large here if they are favored for an entertainment.

Kertsonville Ditch.

John D. Knutson, of the town of King, Chris Hanson, of Lowell, and Captain Couvrette, viewers of the Kertsonville county ditch, met yesterday at the court house and elected Mr. Knutson chairman and Captain Couvrette secretary. They adjourned till Oct. 16, when they will go out and inspect the course of the proposed ditch.

NEW RAILWAY DEPOT

Work Already Begun—to be Completed Jan. 1, 1900—Passenger Part on Second Street.

Y. M. C. A. SUNDAY SERVICES

Several Speakers From Abroad—Mass Meeting in Afternoon—Union Meeting in Evening.

The New Great Northern railway station at this place is to be completed by January 1, 1900, at least the contract calls for the work to be finished then. This is an edifice that Crookston has long been in need of and now that it is an assured thing every body in the city is pleased and is saying a good word for Jim Hill.

Therefore such letters have been | The contract has been given to Reardon & Cameron, of St. Paul, and Tuesday morning W. A. Cameron, A. Swanson and W. J. Whitney reached the city and at once they began staking out the ground where the station will be built. The building west of the tracks owned by Jas. E. Morrisey has been secured by the contractors and will be used as an office and store room. The tearing up of the platform around the old station was begun yesterday and this building will be moved south of Robert street and remain there while the new one is being built. The work of putting up the passenger station and freight depot will be pushed rapidly as the building must be up in 90 days. Forty men, mostly those from Crookston and vicinity, will be given employment.

The size of the building and the material to be used in its construction were given in the JOURNAL two weeks ago. One change has been made in the original plans, namely the passenger part of station will be on Second street instead of on Robert street as was at first intended.

Y. M. C. A. SUNDAY.

Services in Churches—Change of Secretaries—Mass Meeting for Men

Next Sunday will be an important day in the history of the Young Men's Christian Association of Crookston. On that day the religious services in most of the English speaking churches will be in the hands of representatives of the Y. M. C. A. Immediately Harry Tuttle, general secretary at Grand Forks will speak in the morning at the Baptist church, E. W. Peck, state secretary for Minnesota, at the Presbyterian church, P. M. Hill, assistant state secretary, at the Congregational church and John Orchard, general secretary at Fargo, at the Methodist church. In the afternoon at 3 o'clock there will be a mass meeting for men only at the Methodist church, and at the same place in the evening there will be a union meeting, regular services in the churches mentioned above being withdrawn.

At the afternoon and evening meeting addresses will be made by the visiting secretaries and by others. At the former meeting a male quartet will sing and at the latter there will be a union choir.

This will be a grand rally day for the Y. M. C. A. and much good is expected to result therefrom. An interest in this work will be aroused and the young men hope to secure a large number of associate members. The citizens are sufficiently interested in the project to help it along financially the young men expect to fit up the basement of the Crookston College building for their headquarters. Here they will have a gymnasium, bathrooms and reading rooms and the use of the College chapel hall for religious services has already been offered by Professors Nalin & Sathre. A gymnasium and bathrooms to the extent that these will be—bathrooms are something that Crookston lacks and ought to have and the JOURNAL heartily approves of the idea and wishes the young men success. And then if the further plans of Mr. Amos and his co-workers are realized, a permanent secretary will be secured for Crookston, a man who can act as director of the gymnasium as well as superintend the religious work.

Marriage Permits.

During the last seven days licenses so wed were issued by Clerk of Court E. E. Lommen to Joseph Kresl and Miss Mary Capek, of Tabor; John Adolph Ahlek, and Miss Gunda A. Oppegaard, of McIntosh; Ingehigt T. J. Sethen and Miss Rachael M. Seten, of Minnewaukon, Benson county, North Dakota; and John Wheatley and Miss Walborg Constance Simonsen, of Crookston.

COUNCIL MEETING

Macadam 12 Inches Deep—Levy Next Year Will be 30 Mills.

The city council met last Saturday evening in the council room at the city hall. The Steam Heating Company that was granted, some weeks ago, the right to put in a plant in the city filed their formal acceptance of the ordinance.

The council decided to have the macadam pavement twelve inches deep instead of nine. The bids for the laying of the paving will be considered at the next meeting of the council at which time the streets and bridge committees, to whom the matter has been referred, will report.

As Architect Strassburger is suing the city for $500 which he claims is due him for work done on the city hall as architect and superintendent of the building, the city attorney was instructed to fight the suit to the bitter end.

The city tax for next year will be 30 mills, one third of which is for the paving. Last year the levy was 28 mills.

Assessment rolls for the repairing of the sidewalks and the construction of sewers were considered.

Resolutions of Sympathy.

Whereas, At all wise Providence has seen fit to remove from our midst our beloved sister Maud Sargent.

Be it resolved, That Col. Cobham W. R. C. has been weakened by the loss of one more link from its ever narrowing chain. One more of its youth, and loyal and faithful, members called to that "bourne from which no traveler returns."

Be it further resolved, that our sister will be sorely missed from our meetings, and that we extend our loving sympathy to the bereaved parents and sister.

Land Office Business.

During the month of September there were at the United States land office in this city 40 homestead entries, 20 timber culture, 26 on the reservation, 18 final homestead proofs, 2 final timber culture, 15 cash entries. The total receipts for the month were $8,818.48. During the last quarter ending Sept. 30 there were 209 homestead entries, including 37,280 acres, 18 final homesteads, 10 final timber culture, 73 cash entries. The total receipts were $27,451.56.

Notes From Exchanges.

Grand Forks Herald: The failure of recent conference committees to obtain from President Hill redress of what are held to be grievances has produced a feeling of intense dissatisfaction among employes, and, while there is no open threat of a strike, the subject is discussed quietly among railroad men, and such an event is believed by many of them to be inevitable. Some of the men argue that the management expects a strike in the near future, and is bracing itself for the struggle. As evidence of this it is pointed out that many old and experienced men are being removed, and new men are being put in their places. It is stated that five capable freight conductors on the northern division will either resign or be discharged within the next few weeks, and their places will be filled by new men. Those who see in the numerous changes prospects of a strike think that in the event of a walkout, the new men, having been but lately promoted, will be more likely to remain at work than older employes who have grown familiar with controversies of this kind.

Moorhead Independent: J. P. O'Connell, for the past two years cashier for the Great Northern, left on Wednesday morning for Warren, where he becomes agent for the same company. Warren is one of the best stations on the line of the Great Northern and Mr. O'Connell is to be congratulated upon his promotion. C. D. Weightman, day operator for the Great Northern, succeeds Mr. O'Connell as cashier for the company in Moorhead.

East Grand Forks Courier: Congressman Frank M. Eddy may not be as ostentatious and swelled up as many men who represent the circumscribed constituencies of the Eastern and Middle States, but it is noticeable that when he has considered and digested the merits of a question has utterances are sensible enough to be quoted all over the nation. Eddy is not in the habit of going "on parade," either at home or abroad; yet his constituency and his state are fast realizing that he is of that sturdy grit and grain that went under any sort of test. The Seventh Minnesota district is hardly more proud of Frank Eddy than the balance of Minnesota is.

DEFECTIVE PAGE

THE STRANGE RIDE OF MORROWBIE JUKES.

BY RUDYARD KIPLING.

Here was a sahib, a representative of the dominant race, helpless as a child and completely at the mercy of his native neighbors. In a deliberate, lazy way he set himself to torture me as a schoolboy would devote a rapturous half hour to watching the agonies of an impaled beetle or as a ferret in a blind burrow might glue himself comfortably to the neck of a rabbit. The burden of his conversation was that there was no escape "of no kind whatever," and that I should stay here till I died and was "thrown on to the sand." If it were possible to forejudge the conversation of the damned on the advent of a new soul in their abode, I should say that they would speak as Gunga Dass did to me throughout that long afternoon. I was powerless to protest or answer, all my energies being devoted to a struggle against the inexplicable terror that threatened to overwhelm me again and again. I can compare the feeling to nothing except the struggles of a man against the overpowering nausea of the channel passage—only my agony was of the spirit and infinitely more terrible.

As the day wore on the inhabitants began to appear in full strength to catch the rays of the afternoon sun, which were now sloping in at the mouth of the crater. They assembled in little knots and talked among themselves without even throwing a glance in my direction. About 4 o'clock, as far as I could judge, Gunga Dass rose and dived into his lair for a moment, emerging with a live crow in his hands. The wretched bird was in a most draggled and deplorable condition, but seemed to be in no way afraid of its master. Advancing cautiously to the river front, Gunga Dass stepped from tussock to tussock until he had reached a smooth patch of sand directly in the line of the boat's fire. The occupants of the boat took no notice. Here he stopped and, with a couple of dexterous turns of the wrist, pegged the bird on its back with outstretched wings. As was only natural, the crow began to shriek at once and beat the air with its claws. In a few seconds the clamor had attracted the attention of a bevy of wild crows on a shoal a few hundred yards away, where they were discussing something that looked like a corpse. Half a dozen crows flew over at once to see what was going on, and also, as it proved, to attack the pinioned bird.

Gunga Dass, who had lain down on a tussock, motioned to me to be quiet, though I fancy this was a needless precaution. In a moment, and before I could see how it happened, a wild crow who had grappled with the shrieking and helpless bird was entangled in the latter's claws, swiftly disengaged by Gunga Dass and pegged down beside its companion in adversity. Curiosity, it seemed, overpowered the rest of the flock, and almost before Gunga Dass and I had time to withdraw to the tussock two more captives were struggling in the upturned claws of the decoys. So the chase—if I can give it so dignified a name—continued until Gunga Dass had captured seven crows. Five of them he throttled at once, reserving two for further operations another day. I was a good deal impressed by this, to me, novel method of securing food and complimented Gunga Dass on his skill.

"It is nothing to do," said he. "Tomorrow you must do it for me. You are stronger than I am."

This calm assumption of superiority upset me not a little, and I answered peremptorily: "Indeed, you old ruffian! What do you think I have given you money for?"

"Very well," was the unmoved reply. "Perhaps not tomorrow nor the day after nor subsequently, but in the end and for many years, you will catch crows and eat crows, and you will thank your European God that you have crows to catch and eat."

I could have cheerfully strangled him for this, but judged it best under the circumstances to smother my resentment. An hour later I was eating one of the crows and, as Gunga Dass had said, thanking my God that I had a crow to eat. Never as long as I live shall I forget that evening meal. The whole population were squatting on the hard sand platform opposite their dens, huddled over tiny fires of refuse and dried rushes. Death, having once laid his hand upon these men and forborne to strike, seemed to stand aloof from them now, for most of our company were old men, bent and worn and twisted with years, and women aged to all appearance as the fates themselves. They sat together in knots and talked—God only knows what they found to discuss—in low, equable tones, curiously in contrast to the strident babble with which natives are accustomed to make day hideous.

Now and then an access of that sudden fury which had possessed me in the morning would lay hold on a man or woman, and with yells and imprecations the sufferer would attack the steep slope until, baffled and bleeding, he fell back on the platform incapable of moving a limb. The others would never even raise their eyes when this happened, as men too well aware of the futility of their fellows' attempts and wearied with their useless repetition. I saw four such outbursts in the course of that evening.

Gunga Dass took an eminently businesslike view of my situation, and while we were dining—I can afford to laugh at the recollection now, but it was painful enough at the time—propounded the terms on which he would consent to "do" for me. My 9 rupees 8 annas, he argued, at the rate of 3 annas a day, would provide me with food for 51 days, or about seven weeks—that is to say, he would be willing to cater for me for that length of time. At the end of it I was to look after myself. For a further consideration—videlicet my boots—he would be willing to allow me to occupy the den next to his own and would supply me with as much dried grass for bedding as he could spare.

"Very well, Gunga Dass," I replied. "To the first terms I cheerfully agree, but as there is nothing on earth to prevent my killing you as you sit here and taking everything that you have"—I thought of the two invaluable crows at the time—"I flatly refuse to give you my boots and shall take whichever den I please."

The stroke was a bold one, and I was glad when I saw that it had succeeded. Gunga Dass changed his tone immediately, and disavowed all intention of asking for my boots. At the time it did not strike me as at all strange that I, a civil engineer, a man of 13 years' standing in the service, and, I trust, an average Englishman, should thus calmly threaten murder and violence against the man who had, for a consideration, it is true, taken me under his wing. I had left the world, it seemed, for centuries. I was as certain then as I am now of my own existence that in the accursed settlement there was no law save that of the strongest, that the living dead men had thrown behind them every canon of the world which had cast them out, and that I had to depend for my own life on my strength and vigilance alone. The crew of the ill fated Mignonette are the only men who would understand my frame of mind. "At present," I argued to myself, "I am strong and a match for six of these wretches. It is imperatively necessary that I should, for my own sake, keep both health and strength until the hour of my release comes—if it ever does."

Fortified with these resolutions, I ate and drank as much as I could, and made Gunga Dass understand that I intended to be his master, and that the least sign of insubordination on his part would be visited with the only punishment I had it in my power to inflict—sudden and violent death. Shortly after this I went to bed. That is to say, Gunga Dass gave me a double armful of dried bents, which I thrust down the mouth of the lair to the right of his, and followed myself, feet foremost, the hole running about nine feet into the sand with a slight downward inclination, and being neatly shored with timbers. From my den, which faced the river front, I was able to watch the waters of the Satlej flowing past under the light of a young moon and compose myself to sleep as best I might.

The horrors of that night I shall never forget. My den was nearly as narrow as a coffin, and the sides had been worn smooth and greasy by the contact of innumerable naked bodies, added to which it smelled abominably. Sleep was altogether out of question to one in my excited frame of mind. As the night wore on it seemed that the entire amphitheater was filled with legions of unclean devils that, trooping up from the shoals below, mocked the unfortunates in their lairs.

Personally I am not of an imaginative temperament—very few engineers are—but on that occasion I was as completely prostrated with nervous terror as any woman. After half an hour or so, however, I was able once more to calmly review my chances of escape. Any exit by the steep sand walls was of course impracticable. I had been thoroughly convinced of this some time before. It was possible, just possible, that I might in the uncertain moonlight safely run the gantlet of the rifle shots. The place was so full of terror for me that I was prepared to undergo any risk in leaving it. Imagine my delight, then, when after creeping stealthily to the river front I found that the infernal boat was not there. My freedom lay before me in the next few steps!

By walking out to the first shallow pool that lay at the foot of the projecting left horn of the horseshoe I could wade across, turn the flank of the crater and make my way inland. Without a moment's hesitation I marched briskly past the tussocks where Gunga Dass had snared the crows and out in the direction of the smooth white sand beyond. My first step from the tufts of dried grass showed me how utterly futile was any hope of escape, for as I put my foot down I felt an indescribable drawing, sucking motion of the sand below. Another moment and my leg was swallowed up nearly to the knee. In the moonlight the whole surface of the sand seemed to be shaken with devilish delight at my disappointment. I struggled clear, sweating with terror and exertion, back to the tussocks behind me and fell on my face.

My only means of escape from the semicircle was protected with a quicksand!

How long I lay I have not the faintest idea, but I was roused at last by the malevolent chuckle of Gunga Dass at my ear. "I would advise you, protector of the poor" (the ruffian was speaking English), "to return to your house. It is unhealthy to lie down here. Moreover, when the boat returns, you will most certainly be rifled at." He stood over me in the dim light of the dawn chuckling and laughing to himself. Suppressing my first impulse to catch the man by the neck and throw him on to the quicksand, I rose sullenly and followed him to the platform below the burrows.

Suddenly and futilely, as I thought while I spoke, I asked, "Gunga Dass, what is the good of the boat if I can't get out anyhow?" I recollect that even in my deepest trouble I had been speculating vaguely on the waste of ammunition in guarding an already well protected foreshore.

Gunga Dass laughed again and made answer: "They have the boat only in daytime. It is for the reason that there is a way. I hope we shall have the pleasure of your company for a much longer time. It is a pleasant spot when you have been here some years and eaten roast crow long enough."

I staggered, numbed and helpless, toward the fetid burrow allotted to me and fell asleep. An hour or so later I was awakened by a piercing scream—the shrill, high pitched scream of a horse in pain. Those who have once heard that will never forget the sound. I found some little difficulty in scrambling out of the burrow. When I was in the open, I saw Pornic, my poor old Pornic, lying dead on the sandy soil. How they had killed him I cannot guess. Gunga Dass explained that horse was better than crow, and "greatest good of greatest number is political maxim. We are now republic, Mr Jukes, and you are entitled to a fair share of the beast. If you like, we will pass a vote of thanks. Shall I propose?"

Yes, we were a republic indeed—a republic of wild beasts penned at the bottom of a pit, to eat and fight and sleep till we died! I attempted no protest of any kind, but sat down and stared at the hideous sight in front of me. In less time almost than it takes me to write this Pornic's body was divided, in some unclean way or other. The men and women had dragged the fragments on to the platform and were preparing their morning meal. Gunga Dass cooked mine. The almost irresistible impulse to fly at the sand walls until I was wearied laid hold of me afresh, and I had to struggle against it with all my might. Gunga Dass was offensively jocular till I told him that if he addressed another remark of any kind whatever to me I should strangle him where he sat. This silenced him till silence became insupportable and I bade him say something.

"You will live here till you die like the other Feringhi," he said coolly, watching me over the fragment of gristle that he was gnawing.

"What other sahib, you swine? Speak at once, and don't stop to tell me a lie."

"He is over there," answered Gunga Dass, pointing to a burrow mouth about four doors to the left of my own. "You can see for yourself. He died in the burrow as you will die and I will die and as all these men and women and the old child will also die."

"For pity's sake, tell me all you know about him. Who was he? When did he come, and when did he die?"

This appeal was a weak step on my part. Gunga Dass only leered and replied. "I will not—unless you give me something first."

Then I recollected where I was and struck the man between the eyes, partially stunning him. He stepped down from the platform at once and, cringing and fawning and weeping and attempting to embrace my feet, led me round to the burrow which he had indicated.

"I know nothing whatever about the gentleman. Your God be my witness that I do not. He was as anxious to escape as you were, and he was shot from the boat, though we all did all things to prevent him from attempting. He was shot here." Gunga Dass laid his hand on his lean stomach and bowed to the earth.

"Well, and what then? Go on!"

"And then—and then, your honor, we carried him into his house and gave him water and put wet cloths on the wound, and he lay down in his house and gave up the ghost."

"In how long? In how long?"

"About half an hour after he received his wound. I call Vishnu to witness," yelled the wretched man, "that I did everything for him. Everything which was possible, that I did!"

He threw himself down on the ground and clasped my ankles. But I had my doubts about Gunga Dass' benevolence and kicked him off as he lay protesting.

"I believe you robbed him of everything he had. But I can find out in a minute or two. How long was the sahib here?"

"Nearly a year and a half. I think he must have gone mad. But hear me swear, protector of the poor! Won't your honor hear me swear that I never touched an article that belonged to him? What is your worship going to do?"

I had taken Gunga Dass by the waist and had hauled him on to the platform opposite the deserted burrow. As I did so I thought of my wretched fellow prisoner's unspeakable misery among all these horrors for 18 months and the final agony of dying like a rat in a hole with a bullet wound in the stomach. Gunga Dass fancied I was going to kill him and howled piteously. The rest of the population in the plethora that follows a full flesh meal watched us without stirring.

"Go inside, Gunga Dass," said I, "and fetch it out."

I was feeling sick and faint with horror now. Gunga Dass nearly rolled off the platform and howled aloud.

"But I am Brahman, sahib—a high caste Brahman. By your soul, by your father's soul, do not make me do this thing!"

"Brahman or no Brahman, by my soul and by my father's soul, in you go!" I said, and, seizing him by the shoulders, I crammed his head into the mouth of the burrow, kicked the rest of him in and, sitting down, covered my face with my hands.

At the end of a few minutes I heard a rustle and a creak, then Gunga Dass in a sobbing, choking whisper speaking to himself, then a soft thud—and I uncovered my eyes.

The dry sand had turned the corpse intrusted to its keeping into a yellow brown mummy. I told Gunga Dass to stand off while I examined it. The body—clad in an olive green hunting suit much stained and worn, with leather pads on the shoulders—was that of a man between 30 and 40, above middle height, with light, sandy hair, long mustache and a rough, unkempt beard. The left canine of the upper jaw was missing, and a portion of the lobe of the right ear was gone. On the second finger of the left hand was a ring—a shield shaped bloodstone set in gold, with a monogram that might have been either "B. K." or "B. L." On the third finger of the right hand was a silver ring in the shape of a coiled cobra, much worn and tarnished. Gunga Dass deposited a handful of trifles he had picked out of the burrow at my feet, and covering the face of the body with my handkerchief, I turned to examine these. I give the full list in the hope that it may lead to the identification of the unfortunate man.

1. Bowl of a brier wood pipe, serrated at the edge, much worn and blackened, bound with string at the screw.

2. Two patent lever keys, wards of both broken.

3. Tortoise shell handled penknife, silver or nickel name plate, marked with monogram "B. K."

4. Envelope, postmark undecipherable, bearing a Victorian stamp, addressed to "Miss Mon"—(rest illegible)—"ham"—"nt."

5. Imitation crocodile skin notebook with pencil. First 45 pages blank, 4½ illegible, 15 other filled with private memoranda relating chiefly to three persons—a Mrs. L. Singleton, abbreviated several times to "Lot Single," "Mrs. S. May" and "Garmison," referred to in places as "Jerry" or "Jack."

6. Handle of small sized hunting knife. Blade snapped short. Buck's horn, diamond cut, with swivel and ring on the butt; fragment of cotton cord attached.

It must not be supposed that I inventoried all these things on the spot as fully as I have here written them down. The notebook first attracted my attention, and I put it in my pocket with a view to studying it later on. The rest of the articles I conveyed to my burrow for safety's sake, and there, being a methodical man, I inventoried them. I then returned to the corpse and ordered Gunga Dass to help me to carry it out to the river front. While we were engaged in this the exploded shell of an old brown cartridge dropped out of one of the pockets and rolled at my feet. Gunga Dass had not seen it, and I fell to thinking that a man does not carry exploded cartridge cases, especially "browns," which will not bear loading twice, about with him when shooting. In other words, that cartridge case had been fired inside the crater. Consequently there must be a gun somewhere. I was on the verge of asking Gunga Dass, but checked myself, knowing that he would lie. We laid the body down on the edge of the quicksand by the tussocks. It was my intention to push it out and let it be swallowed up, the only possible mode of burial that I could think of. I ordered Gunga Dass to go away.

Then I gingerly put the corpse out on the quicksand. In doing so—it was lying face downward—I tore the frail and rotten khaki shooting coat open, disclosing a hideous cavity in the back. I have already told you that the dry sand had, as it were, mummified the body. A moment's glance showed that the gaping hole had been caused by a gunshot wound. The gun must have been fired with the muzzle almost touching the back. The shooting coat being intact, had been drawn over the body after death, which must have been instantaneous. The secret of the poor wretch's death was plain to me in a flash. Some one of the crater, presumably Gunga Dass, must have shot him with his own gun—the shot that fitted the brown cartridges. He had never attempted to escape in the face of the rifle fire from the boat.

I pushed the corpse out hastily and saw it sink from sight literally in a few seconds. I shuddered as I watched. In a dazed, half conscious way I turned to peruse the notebook. A stained and discolored slip of paper had been inserted between the binding and the back and dropped out as I opened the pages. This is what it contained: "Four out from crow clump; 3 left; 9 out; 2 right; 3 back; 2 left; 14 out; 2 left; 7 out; 1 left; 9 back; 2 right; 6 back; 4 right; 7 back." The paper had been burned and charred at the edges. What it meant I could not understand. I sat down on the dried bents, turning it over and over between my fingers until I was aware of Gunga Dass standing immediately behind me with glowing eyes and outstretched hands.

"Have you got it?" he panted. "Will you not let me look at it also? I swear that I will return it."

"Got what? Return what?" I asked.

"That which you have in your hands. It will help us both." He stretched out his long, birdlike talons, trembling with eagerness.

"I could never find it," he continued. "He had secreted it about his person. Therefore I shot him, but nevertheless I was unable to obtain it."

Gunga Dass had quite forgotten his little fiction about the rifle bullet. I received the information perfectly calmly. Morality is blunted by consorting with the dead who are alive.

"What on earth are you raving about? What is it you want me to give you?"

"The piece of paper in the notebook. It will help us both. Oh, you fool! You fool! Can you not see what it will do for us? We shall escape."

His voice rose almost to a scream, and he danced with excitement before me. I own I was moved at the chance of getting away.

"Don't skip! Explain yourself. Do you mean to say that this slip of paper will help us? What does it mean?"

"Read it aloud! Read it aloud! I beg and I pray to you to read it aloud."

I did so. Gunga Dass listened delightedly and drew an irregular line in the sand with his fingers.

"See now! It was the length of his gun barrels without the stock. I have those barrels. Four gun barrels out from the place where I caught crows—straight out; do you follow me? Then three left. Ah, how well I remember when that man worked it out night after night! Then nine out, and so on. Out is always straight before you across the quicksand. He told me so before I killed him."

"But if you knew all this why didn't you get out before?"

"I did not know it. He told me that he was working it out a year and a half ago, and how he was working it out night after night when the boat had gone away and he could get out near the quicksand safely. Then he said that we would get away together. But I was afraid that he would leave me behind one night when he had worked it all out, and so I shot him. Besides, it is not advisable that the men who once get in here should escape. Only I, and I am a Brahman."

The prospect of escape had brought Gunga Dass' caste back to him. He stood up, walked about and gesticulated violently. Eventually I managed to make him talk soberly, and he told me how this Englishman had spent six months night after night in exploring, inch by inch, the passage across the quicksand; how he had declared it to be simplicity itself up to within about 20 yards of the river bank after turning the flank of the left horn of the horseshoe. This much he had evidently not completed when Gunga Dass shot him with his own gun.

In my frenzy of delight at the possibilities of escape I recollect shaking hands effusively with Gunga Dass after we had decided that we were to make an attempt to get away that very night. It was weary work waiting throughout the afternoon.

About 10 o'clock, as far as I could judge, when the moon had just risen above the lip of the crater, Gunga Dass made a move for his burrow to bring out the gun barrels whereby to measure our path. All the other wretched inhabitants had retired to their lairs long ago. The guardian boat drifted down stream some hours before, and we were utterly alone by the crow clump. Gunga Dass, while carrying the gun barrels, let slip the piece of paper which was to be our guide. I stooped down hastily to recover it, and as I did so I was aware that the diabolical Brahman was aiming a violent blow at the back of my head with the gun barrel. It was too late to turn round. I must have received the blow somewhere on the nape of my neck. A hundred thousand fiery stars danced before my eyes, and I fell forward senseless at the edge of the quicksand.

When I recovered consciousness, the moon was going down, and I was sensible of intolerable pain in the back of my head. Gunga Dass had disappeared, and my mouth was full of blood. I lay down again and prayed that I might die without more ado. Then the unreasoning fury which I have before mentioned laid hold upon me, and I staggered inland toward the walls of the crater. It seemed that some one was calling to me in a whisper, "Sahib! Sahib! Sahib!" exactly as my bearer used to call me in the mornings.

I fancied that I was delirious until a handful of sand fell at my feet. Then I looked up and saw a head peering down into the amphitheater—the head of Dunnoo, my dog boy, who attended to my collies. As soon as he had attracted my attention he held up his hand and showed a rope. I motioned, staggering to and fro the while, that he should throw it down. It was a couple of leather punkah ropes knotted together, with a loop at one end. I slipped the loop over my head and under my arms; heard Dunnoo urge something forward; was conscious that I was being dragged, face downward, up the steep sand slope, and the next instant found myself, choked and half fainting, on the sand hills overlooking the crater. Dunnoo, with his face ashy gray in the moonlight, implored me not to stay but to get back to my tent at once.

It seems that he had tracked Pornic's footprints 14 miles across the sands to the crater; had returned and told my servants, who flatly refused to meddle with any one, white or black, once fallen into the hideous village of the dead, whereupon Dunnoo had taken one of my ponies and a couple of punkah ropes, returned to the crater and hauled me out, as I have described.

To cut a long story short, Dunnoo is now my personal servant on a gold mohar a month, a sum which I still think far too little for the services he has rendered. Nothing on earth will induce me to go near that devilish spot again or to reveal its whereabouts more clearly than I have done. Of Gunga Dass I have never found a trace, nor do I wish to do so. My sole motive in giving this to be published is the hope that some one may possibly identify, from the details and the inventory which I have given above, the corpse of the man in the olive green hunting suit.

To Stop Nosebleed.

To stop nosebleed cut some blotting paper about an inch square, roll it about the size of a lead pencil and put it up the nostril that is bleeding. The hollow in it will fill the space between the tube and the nose and will very soon coagulate and thereby stop the flow of blood.—New York Times.

Order For Hearing Application for Appointment of Administrator.

State of Minnesota, County of Polk.—ss.

In Probate Court, Special Term, Sept. 29, 1899.

In the matter of the estate of Iver Johnson, deceased:

On receiving and filing the petition of Ragnhild Anderson, formerly Ragnhild Johnson of the County of Polk representing, among other things, that Iver Johnson, late of the County of Polk in the State of Minnesota, on the 6th day of April A. D. 1898, at the County of Polk died intestate, and being an inhabitant of this county at the time of his death, leaving goods, chattels, and estate within this county, and that the said petitioner is the widow of said deceased and praying that administration of said estate be to Ragnhild Anderson granted:

It is ordered, That said petition be heard before said court, on Saturday the 28th day of October A. D. 1899, at two o'clock p. m., at the probate office, in Crookston in said county.

Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of fifteen hundred twenty-eight and 32-100 dollars, which is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Isabella I. Chilback and John Chilback her husband, mortgagors, to George Q. Erskine mortgagee, bearing date the 7th day June 1893, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota on the 16th day of June 1893, at 11 o'clock a. m., in book 64 of mortgages, on page 410-13 and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz:

Lots numbered one (1) two (2) three (3) and four (4) of block number eleven (11) in Jerome's addition to the townsite of Crookston according to the recorded plat thereof on file in office of the Register of Deeds in and for Polk County and State of Minnesota in Polk County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the court house, in the City of Crookston in said County and State, on the 21st day of October 1899, at ten o'clock a. m., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of fifteen hundred twenty-eight and 32-100 dollars, and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and fifty dollars, attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated Sept. 7th A. D. 1899.

A. A. MILLER, Attorney, Crookston Minnesota.

GEORGE Q. ERSKINE, Mortgagee.

DINNER TO DEWEY

PRESIDENT ENTERTAINS IN THE ADMIRAL'S HONOR.

Guests Included Eighty Men Prominent in Public Life—Affair Was Entirely Informal and No speechmaking Announced — Sword Presentation at the Capitol Witnessed by Thousands.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4.—President McKinley, in honor of Admiral Dewey, gave the largest dinner party in the history of the White House social functions. Covers were laid for over 80 persons. The guests included the cabinet, the governors of nine states, justices of the supreme court, some of the members of both houses of congress, army and navy officials and others. It was a brilliant affair. An hour before the hour announced a large crowd of spectators had gathered in front of the White House to watch the arrivals. Admiral Dewey came at 8 o'clock and as he passed inside he was enthusiastically cheered. Rear Admiral Schley was given a similar ovation. The guests passed into the East room, whence they proceeded to the White House corridor, which served as the state dining room, the usual room being too small for the purpose.

The dinner occupied two and a half hours and was altogether informal. There was no speechmaking or toastmaking whatever and no reference to the Manila victory. At its close Admiral Dewey took leave of the party and amid cheers from a small crowd of spectators was driven directly to his home, where he soon retired.

SWORD PRESENTATION.

Admiral Dewey Deeply Affected During the Exercises.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4.—The culmination of Admiral Dewey's triumphal homecoming was reached during the day in the shadow of the dome of the national Capitol. Here he received from the hands of the president the magnificent jewelled sword voted him by congress in commemoration of the victory of Manila bay. The presentation was made before a vast audience composed not only of all the highest officials in the land but of spectators drawn from every quarter of the United States.

THE DEWEY SWORD.

The strain upon Admiral Dewey during the ceremonies reached almost to the breaking point. None but those nearest to him could see how he labored to repress his feelings during the address of Secretary Long, but when he arose to receive the sword

From the Hands of the President

no one could mistake the flash of the white-gloved hand as it rose to dash away the tears before the admiral came to the rigid attitude of attention before his chief. When it became Dewey's turn to reply his voice failed and he made the effort twice before his lips would respond. When he did succeed his tones were clear and strong, but so low that only those nearest him could hear.

One of the most remarkable features of the eventful day was the ovation to Rear Admiral Schley on the return of the party from the Capitol to the White House. His carriage was several numbers behind that of the president and Dewey and received an ovation that could be scarcely ranked below that accorded to the admiral himself.

VENEZUELAN BOUNDARY.

Decision of the Court of Arbitration Considered a Compromise.

PARIS, Oct. 4.—By the decision of the Anglo-Venezuelan boundary arbitration commission, some of Great Britain's claims as to the interior and on the coast are disallowed. Her frontier will start at the Wanai river.

The award was unanimous. It is considered in the nature of a compromise rather than as favoring Venezuela.

The award of the tribunal, briefly summarized, means that of the 60,000 square miles claimed by Venezuela that country obtains 10,000, formed partly of the marsh land near the river Barima and a portion in the interior, while Great Britain retains all the forest country.

The award gives Point Barima, with a strip of land 50 miles long, to Venezuela, who thereby obtains entire control of the Orinoco river. Three thousand square miles in the interior are also awarded to Venezuela. Thus, by a decision in which the British arbitrators concurred, the position taken by Great Britain in 1895 is shown to be unfounded.

Polk County Journal,
BY N. S. GORDON.

Subscription $1.50 per year in advance

Entered at the postoffice at Crookston, Minnesota, as second-class matter.

Thief River Falls Press: Now the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL comes out on a new Optimus press. It has been on the uphill grade some time, in appearance at least, and is now as bright and attractive as a young school marm after the summer vacation.

THE "Con-fusion" party is the way in which a writer in the Red Wing Republican refers to our demo-populists friends. This is about right. In a political campaign they do nothing but create confusion, and when elected to office—which happily seldom occurs—it is confusion, worse confounded. But it is in their own ranks that the most confusion exists and is likely to exist.

IT is said that a Norman county farmer recently got $200 from the Fosston Woolen Mills as the price of one load of wool clipped from his flock of 150 sheep. This, in addition to the increase and what mutton he sold and used on his own table, represents the income from a slight outlay of time and money. —Alb. Index. Farmers cannot too soon stock their farms with sheep. It is a paying industry. Try a few of them and see.

THE midway feature of the Street Carnival was a disgrace to any community and deserves the most severe censure. The performances were not merely unrefined but were positively gross and the mayor should have closed the doors of this haunt as soon as its character became known, but instead of that the manager was encouraged to continue, for the building was refitted up for him after the storm.

THE storm of last week was an unusually severe one and the consequence was that grain still in the shock was considerably damaged. That in the stack, however, was safe. Now while it is cheaper to thresh from the shock there is always danger of the grade of the grain being lowered as a result of the grain getting wet. This has been the state of affairs on many farms around here many times. It is, therefore, evident that in the long run it is the safer plan to stack unless a man has his own machine and can thresh his own grain whenever he wishes.

PLEASURE and profit may be planned for the people by a Street Carnival and Live Stock Show. Recreation and education may be happily combined on such an occasion. The aesthetic nature in man was appealed to by the tasty decorations, the elegant floats, the beautifully bedlowered carriages, the brilliant fireworks and the musical strains of the bands, and though the storm rather spoiled the Live Stock Show, still Col. Wilkinson, J. S. Nichols and others had on exhibition several animals, bred in the purple, some of which cannot be outranked in the state.

REPORTS from Norway tell of the pleasant time that Senator Nelson is having in visiting old friends and of the honors that are being heaped upon him every where he goes in his native land. This is welcome news to the senator's many friends and admirers in Minnesota. The rest he is having and the respect that is being shown him are richly deserved. Fifty years ago he was a stranger in a strange land, today he represents in the highest assembly of men in the world one of the most prosperous and progressive states in the union. This is a record to be proud of and one that could only be made by a man of intellect and strength of character.

No man in the history of the United States was ever given such a triumph as Dewey received at New York. The nation welcomed him and it was a welcome from the heart, the highest honor that can be paid any man. Dewey has become the national hero not because he did his duty, not because he destroyed the Spanish fleet in the harbor of Manila, but because he revolutionized the foreign policy of the United States. We are a world power, we have taken our stand among the nations of the earth, we are more universal in our thinking and broader in our sympathy than we were, and for this advance Dewey more than any other man is responsible.

THE Shamrock and the Columbia Yachts, representing Great Britain and the United States respectively, sail this week and next for the America's Cup. The yachts themselves have cost at least $500,000 while the present value of the America's Cup is not more than $100. Doubtless as a nation we are much given to money making but we are not entirely engrossed in the struggle for gold as the above facts—and there are numerous others—go to show. There is no money in this race and yet the people of the two mightiest nations on earth are eagerly watching the outcome. It is manly sport, a contest of skill, and honor alone—and that is enough—is the prize.

THE democratic nominee for governor in Ohio, John R. McLean, in his speech at the opening of the democratic campaign in Ohio said, among other things: "We are in favor of legitimate expansion, but opposed to an imperialistic policy." Another proof that the democrats are trying to right about face on the expansion question, as they have found out that anti-expansion won't win them votes. The people, however, will remember, when they come to exercise the franchise, that the democrats have shown that they advocate certain policies not from principle but because they hoped thereby to gain popularity. Democrats will not be placed in power. We want men who advocate and act from conviction regardless of vote catching.

WE were compelled, lastweek, much against our will, to sue a delinquent subscriber, and after we had seeured judgment against him he sent us a cheque covering the bill and the costs. The bill was for subscription to the JOURNAL for several years during the editorship of the late H. E. Cooke, whose accounts we have bought. There are several others who are in exactly the same situation, as far as accounts with this paper are concerned, as the subscriber spoken of above. To these we are sending our statements and we expect them to settle. We propose to act courteously in this matter and feel sure we shall receive like treatment. Where immediate payment cannot be made we shall be glad to extend the time, but we must have some agreement with those who have accounts of long standing with us.

WAR between the Boers of the Transvaal and Great Britain is hourly looked for. While our sympathy is naturally with the weaker power, the Boer, and we cannot but admire the shrewdness, the determination and the independence of President Kruger, still looking at the matter impartially, we think he is fighting a lost cause. The Boers are really stemming the tide of progress and civilization. They desire their primitiveness and wish to exclude from the Transvaal everything modern. Such a spirit, sooner or later, is bound to be broken. Africa must be civilized. Considered broadly this is really the question. Though England has always gained much from the territory which she has acquired, or as it is usually stated, got by her land grabbing policy, still it can also be said that she has always uplifted the people into whose midst she has come. The law of the survival of the fittest comes into play and the Boer as an opponent of civilization cannot long live. He must give way to a more advanced power. Progress cannot be stopped.

GENERAL POPE, the present state examiner has pleased himself in a rather peculiar position. Four years ago he was acting city treasurer of Mankato and member of the library board. At that time he drew $500 which he held in trust, so he says, for the board, though the board knew nothing about the matter till a short time ago, when an expert accountant, in going over the books, discovered it. As Mr. Pope made no adequate explanation of his action in this matter, the American Bond and Trust Company has canceled its surety furnished the state for Mr. Pope as public bank examiner. This certainly reflects no honor upon the state, to say the least. We wonder what our populist friends think of this. What a campaign they could against Mr. Kenyon last fall and this is what they accomplished. This is reform with a vengeance.

How the democratic papers noised abroad the reputed statements of Dewey that he believed the Filipinos were now capable of self-government and that the war should cease! And yet these same papers, notwithstanding the fact that the admiral since reaching New York has denied these published interviews, are now booming Dewey as the democratic presidential nominee next year. Supposing he were a democrat and accepted the nomination, the record of the party anent expansion would have to be repudiated by that party. Repudiation, however, is a word not entirely foreign to them. They simply give evidence, in their talk about Dewey for the presidency, that in their utterances on public questions they are insincere. Office-they are seeking and they propose to get it at all hazards. But fortunately there is no danger of their success.

Literary Notes.

NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW.

In the October number of the North American Review there are published, under the general title of "The Anglo-Saxon Rivals," four articles relating to the wonderful strides which the United States have made in recent years toward the commercial supremacy of the world, which they seem destined soon to wrest from Great Britain. The articles are by M. G. Mulhall, A. Maurice Low, Sir Charles Dilke and Ian Maclaren.

In the October number of the North American Review, the Rt. Rev. H. C. Potter, Bishop, of New York, reviews certain "Social Tendencies in America" which, in his judgment, unless corrected, portend social disaster to our people. He finds a startling parallel between the mischievous and alarming elements which are at work among the French and those which are at present observable among the people of the United States. He lays particular stress upon the views and practices which, through disregarding the sanctity and indissolubility of marriage, threaten the sacred institution of the family.

NEWS IN MINNESOTA

St. Paul plumbers are on a strike.

The total cash in the state treasury Sept. 30 was $1,716,404.18.

The jury in the Burroughs bigamy case, on trial at Winona, brought in a verdict of guilty.

A banquet is being arranged for Minneapolis on Andrew Jackson Day, Jan. 8, at which W. J. Bryan is to be the guest of honor.

Rev. Maurice D. Edwards will complete this month the 25th year as pastor of the Dayton Avenue Presbyterian church at St. Paul.

Minneapolis is to have a new and extensive industry in the shape of an indelible ink manufactory which will employ about 100 persons.

The result of the work of the state board of equalization adds nearly $1,600,000 to the personal property assessment of Ramsey county.

Two men have been arrested in Chicago by the Pinkertons, accused of the robbery of the Sandinavian-American bank in St. Paul on Aug. 11. They give the names of Billie Burke and "Kid" Burrett.

Dr. J. M. Tucker of Hastings, who accompanied Governor Lind's party to San Francisco to receive the Thirteenth regiment, had the pleasure of greeting his three sons, who were corporals in the regiment.

The warehouses of the Minneapolis Sash and Door company and the Woodward-Holmes company were Sunday destroyed by fire, entailing a heavy loss. The former company will lose $80,000, while the damage to the latter plant will aggregate $12,000. The Minneapolis Sash and Door company had insurance of $36,000 and the Woodward-Holmes company's loss is partly covered.

There is $890,000 to distribute in the October apportionment among the common schools of the state, and about 825,000 children entitled to share in it—one county still estimated. The per capita is $2.78. The October apportionment last year yielded $2.15 per capita, and the year before $2.56. In '96 it was higher, $2.80, and there are 40,000 more children to share it now than three years ago.

The presidents of the normal schools, F. A. Weld of Moorhead, J. F. Millspaugh of Winona, C. H. Cooper of Mankato and George Ellsberger of St. Cloud, met at the statehouse Monday for the purpose of adopting some uniform system for the classification of high school pupils who enter the normal schools. The board also compiled the catalogue from which books are selected for the district school libraries.

The calendar for the October term of the state supreme court contains over 250 cases. The state is chiefly interested in the case of Jane Drew against the probate judge of McLeod county, involving the constitutionality of the inheritance tax law, and in the appeals testing the Grindeland law for increasing commission men. The second of the cases is that of Anderson have taxing railroad lands is to come up at this term from Jackson county. The former case is now pending in the United States courts.

The state board of equalization has adjourned sine die. The session has been a long one and much hard work has been done. A rough estimate puts the addition this board has made to the taxables of the state at $10,000,000, or 10 per cent of the personal property list. The precedent established of raising the capital stock of corporations is expected to result in much more significant additions to the grand list, especially of corporations holding public franchises, which have hitherto escaped taxation under that head.

The profits of the state fair of 1899 were $80,000. This is the largest earning ever made by the fair and very gratifying to the board of managers. The state fair of 1898 made $61,879.20 were for admissions to the grounds and the grand stands, as against a total of $96,051.75 for 1898. The total receipts for 1898, including a balance of $5,912.11 and the state appropriation of $4,000 were only $82,252.26, less than $1,000 more than was taken in at the gates the first year. The surplus will be used in improvements at the fair grounds.

The annual convention of the German Roman Catholic Benevolent association of the State of Minnesota is being held at Winona this week. One of the delegates gives out an important change which will be made in the constitution and by-laws relating to the insurance of women. The constitution now provides for such insurance, but it is not at all effective. At present only the wives of members of some Germnn Catholic society may be insured. The constitution will be so changed that any woman in good health, belonging to any German Catholic church may be insured.

The Lake Superior Consolidated, sometimes known as the Rockefeller company, paid the state a fee of $12,290 as a foreign corporation and announced its intention to contest the constitutionality of the Somerville act. Up to Saturday, which was the last day of grace, there have been 345 corporations to pay the fee of $35. Beginning Oct. 1, it is the duty of the secretary of state to notice any companies that are doing business in the state without license, and to bring them to book through the county authorities. The penalty is $1,000 fine. A case will undoubtedly be inaugurated speedily.

Blaze at Minneapolis.

MINNEAPOLIS, Oct. 2.—Fire on the East side did $100,000 of damage before it was extinguished. The large frame and sheetiron warehouses of the Minneapolis Sash and Door company, and containing $70,000 worth of stock, were completely destroyed with all the contents.

POISONED WEAPONS.

HOW SAVAGE NATIONS MAKE SURE OF DEALING DEATH.

Some of the Venomous Mixtures Used by the Barbarians Retain Their Life Destroying Properties For an Indefinite Time.

From the age of stone up to the time when the art of killing one's neighbor led to the discovery of powder and fire-arms primitive peoples, owing to the insufficiency of their weapons to cause prompt death, have invented means of giving them poisonous qualities. Poisoned weapons, whether they are arrows, knives, lances or what not, may get their fatal properties from either vegetable or animal poisons.

The South American Indians use curare; the natives of India, Southern China, Borneo and the Moluccas employ, or rather did employ, the upas to poison their weapons; the negroes of the Sudan and the Kongo still make use of a poison extracted from different varieties of strophanthus called n'hoom or ine, according to the regions where it is employed; the people of South Africa, the Bettentots, the Bushmen, the Kaffirs and the Akikas, poison their arrows with the venom of divers serpents, the cobra de capello among others; certain tribes of equatorial Africa, the N'Dris and the Bangiris, use their arrows after long burial it decomposing corpses, to communicate blood poisoning, which results in speedy death; in Oceanica the natives of New Caledonia, the Hebrides and the Solomon group give their enemies a lockjaw by soaking their arrows in a bamboo containing large quantities of the bacillus of tetanus.

The first three kinds of poison are procured of vegetable origin, though the local medicine men mix with their preparations red ants, snakes' venom, people' eyes, etc. They are the characteristic alkaloids of plants, which serve as the basis of a deadly poisonous mixture. Curare, upas and n'hoom have as their principal elements plants whose properties vary with the tribe, and which all belong to the strychnine family. The three last named poisons, except that of the South African negroes, are of microbial origin.

What are the value, duration and activity of these poisons? Curare keeps indefinitely. In 1737 in the course of experiments in physiology made in France with envenomed arrows brought in 1723 from equatorial America by La Condamine, a fowl scratched with one of these arrows died in seven minutes. Among the Ouitetio Indians, lumps of curare handed down from father to son have preserved all their poisonous activity, although covered with mold. The same may be said of the poison which, kept in little sections of bamboo for seven or eight years, retains the same active qualities as when first prepared. Malay weapons, even those of steel, always keep their poisonous properties.

The black races that use ine claim that it will keep only a short time before it spoils. Now, ine, which is an aqueous maceration of strophanthus seeds, which is called the juice of a fig or of a euphorbi, and generally of vipers' venom, becomes covered with mold at the end of a few months, notwithstanding it has preserved all its deadly properties. Guinea pigs have been killed in a few minutes by being scratched with arrows whose points had molded. In fact, the vegetable poisons used by primitive peoples for their arrows keep indefinitely and always make effective weapons.

This is not the case with poisons of animal or microbian origin. As we have seen above, the Bushmen, the Kaffirs and the Akikas poison the points of their arrows with serpent venom, especially that of the cobra. At the end of two or three weeks their arms have lost all harmful quality. This is due to a single cause. The venom of serpents, which is preserved indefinitely in alcohol, becomes covered in air with a pellicular mold, which has not been studied hitherto and which removes all poisonous effect from the venom.

The poison used on the arrows of the N'Dris of the Upper Ubangbi is nothing else than the septic vibrio (microbe of blood poisoning), which dies in the air if it is not in the presence of decomposition. Thus those arrows are harmful only during a very short time. As for the arrows of the New Caledonians, which infect their victims with tetanus, authorities do not agree about the duration of their harmful action, although it is proved that the bacillus of Nicolaier cannot live except in a very moist medium and together with other bacilli, harmless or otherwise, such as the septic bacillus, which, as we have seen, dies in a short time.

Thus in all cases the poisoned arrows of the races that make use of vegetable alkaloids are much more to be feared than those of the tribes that employ poisons of animal or microbian origin.

A "Sure Thing" Bet.

Those who are unsportsmanlike enough to bet on a sure thing might try this: A bets that B cannot endure a piece of ice on his arm for two minutes. A. to select a place between the fingers and the elbow. B bares his arm and A puts a lump of ice on the pulse in the wrist. In 41 seconds usually the pain becomes so great that B gives it up. This catch originated on the London Stock Exchange. It is said that Guy Kicklalls, the caterer, is the only one who ever endured the pain two minutes.

A Denial.

"So," exclaimed Senator Sorghum indignantly, "that man told you my vote was for sale?"

"He said so in so many words."

"Well, you can go to him and refute the calumny. It's for rent once in awhile, but never for sale."—Washington Star.

May a Woman Tell Her Love?

It is true it is unconventional for a woman to tell a man that she loves him unless the man has persuaded her to make such confession. But is there any good reason why a woman should not take the initiative? Is she any less a woman for doing so? A shy and timid man may not know how to tell a woman that he loves her. Should the woman, who is of firmer faith and stronger mind, stand halting and waiting for a confession that may never come? Why should she suffer in silence? By so doing may she not lose the man who loves her and also the happiness of a lifetime as well?—New York World.

Genius in Distress.

Homer was a beggar; Plautus turned a mill; Terence was a slave; Boetius died in jail; Paul Borghese had 14 trades and yet starved with them all; Tasso was often distressed for five shillings; Bentivoglio was refused admittance into a hospital as he had himself erected; Cervantes died of hunger, and Vegetius left his body to the surgeons to pay his debts as far as the money would go; Bacon lived a life of meanness and misery; Sir Walter Raleigh died on the scaffold; Spenser, the charming, died in want; the death of Collins was through neglect, first causing mental derangement; Milton sold his copyright of "Paradise Lost" for £15 at three payments and finished his life in obscurity; Dryden lived in poverty and distress; Otway died prematurely and through hunger; Lee died in the street; Steele lived a life of perfect warfare with bailiffs; Goldsmith's "Vicar of Wakefield" was sold for a trifle to save him from the grip of the law; Fielding lies in the burying ground of the English factory at Lisbon, without a stone to mark the spot; Savage died in prison at Bristol, where he was confined for a debt of eight pounds; Cotter lived a life of penury and died poor; Chatterton, the child of genius and misfortune, destroyed himself.—Homiletic Review.

A FORWARD MOVE

BRITISH TROOPS SAID TO HAVE CROSSED THE BORDER.

Story Discredited in London as at Least a Little Premature—Dispatch of Troops to the Front Continues Uninterrupted by Both Parties to the Controversy. Transvaal Ultimatum Expected.

BLOEMFONTEIN, Oct. 4.—The landrost of Boshof telegraphs that the British troops have crossed the border from Kimberly.

LONDON, Oct. 4.—The dispatch received by Bloemfontein from the landrost of Boshof is not credited here as it is considered extremely improbable.

It cannot be asserted with certainty, but it is believed that the British proposals have not yet reached the Transvaal and it is doubtful if they have yet been dispatched. Therefore, it is considered impossible that a British advance has been ordered. Practically no news from South Africa has been received during the day.

ACTIVITY CONTINUES.

Hurried Dispatch of Troops by both English and Boers.

LONDON, Oct. 4.—There are no new developments in the Transvaal situation. Arrangements for the dispatch of war stores and men continue. A quantity of balloon material has been sent to South Africa, the war office considering that military ballooning will prove of the greatest value in Africa kind of warfare expected in South Africa. The chartering of transports is still going on. Five vessels of the Cunard line are now engaged.

The dispatches from South Africa are largely a repetition of those of last week. Advices from Newcastle, Natal, report that telegraphic communication is interrupted beyond Charlestown, where the stores have been looted by the natives since the departure of the whites.

Orange Free State Troops Active.

Stories of the movements of Boers and British and of the hurried muster of Dutch troops on both sides have come from other points. A telegram from Ladysmith, Natal, says that the Orange Free State troops have occupied and closed Bothas pass, on the Free State border, and that Commandant Alleiche, chief of the Free State artillery, is proceeding in the direction of Biddulphs ridge with a considerable force of artillery. Another force of artillery under Commandant Bonnet has gone to Van Reenen's pass, while Commandant Smith commands a force of artillery en route to Majuba.

The latest news received from Johannesburg indicates that the last rush of Boers continues to leave the town uncarred. Nothing is known of the fate that remains behind, so communication seems to be cut off.

Allen Expulsion Law Gazetted.

A Bloemfontein dispatch says that the Orange Free State government has gazetted an alien expulsion law and also a law forbidding the export of horses and cattle and commissariat stores without a permit. Commandeering is proceeding there at a lively rate.

The British steamship Lagoora, now in the transport service, has arrived at Durban, Natal, with field artillery, a hospital corps and commissariat stores from India. The troops were promptly disembarked and sent by train up the country.

Lloyds publishes a report that gold bullion valued at $1,000,000 in transit has been seized by the Transvaal authorities.

A dispatch from Newcastle, Natal, reports that Commandant General Joubert has gone to Vreyheid.

TO SEND AN ULTIMATUM.

Boers Will Declare the Dispatch of Troops a Casus Belli.

LONDON, Oct. 4. — Mr. Montague White, consul general for the South African Republic in London, told the Associated Press that he had telegraphed President Kruger, urging him to make a personal appeal to Lord Salisbury, dwelling upon the iniquity of the war and offering a scheme as a basis of further negotiations. He said he was momentarily expecting to hear that the Transvaal government had sent an ultimatum to Great Britain, declaring the dispatch of troops a casus belli, in which event he would be compelled to close his offices.

FIFTY THOUSAND PRESENT.

Second Day of the Democratic Carnival a Great Success.

DALLAS, Tex., Oct. 4.—The second and last day of the Democratic carnival in conjunction with the Texas state fair was the most successful from point of numbers of any political gathering that has been held in the state. All incoming trains were loaded with visitors and when speaking began it was estimated that 50,000 people were present.

There was a surging mass of people at the grounds when the notables began to arrive. Mr. Bryan and a party of friends arrived at 10:35 a. m. and it was accorded a magnificent ovation. The meeting was called to order at 11:40 a. m. and Judge James P. Alexander, of Kentucky was the first speaker. When he had concluded there were loud cries for Bryan. The Nebraskan disclaimed being present as a presidential candidate and spoke for an hour on the issues of the day. The meeting then adjourned until evening when the dollar dinner closed the proceedings. The first speaker was Hon. Oliver H. P. Belmont of New York.

Belmont of New York. The other speakers were W. J. Bryan, W. J. Stone of Missouri, Champ Clark of Missouri, G. S. Johnson of Kansas, Richard Bowes of Missouri, Congressman Sulzer of New York and Senator Berry of Arkansas.

MADE A GOOD SHOWING.

Shamrock the Best Yacht Sent After the America Cup.

NEW YORK, Oct. 4.—The first race for the America cup between the Columbia and Shamrock proved a disappointment owing to a lack of wind. The contest early degenerated into a drifting match and had to be declared off because neither could reach the finish line in the time allotted by the rules—five and one-half hours. At that time the yachts were still four miles from home, with the Shamrock leading by something more than a quarter of a mile. Under the rules the first race is now postponed for two days.

Though indecisive in every respect as to the abilities of the great rival single stickers, the first race indicates that the Irish boat, with her English skipper and her Scotch crew, is the ablest sloop ever sent across the Atlantic after the America cup.

During the five and a half hours' sail many Shamrock was thrice ahead and twice the Yankee Boat Showed the Way.

For the first 10 minutes the Shamrock led and then for 5 the Columbia's graceful lines showed ahead of the Shamrock. For 45 minutes following the Shamrock, then for three hours the Columbia, and for the last hour and a half it was the Shamrock led the way. Each in turn beat the other running before the wind and was in turn beaten, so that many of the experts who saw the boats sail are disinclined to believe that there is a pin to choose between them, but when the race is closely analyzed it is absolutely proven that the Columbia showed her superiority whenever the wind freshened and that it was only in the lightest air that the Shamrock could make headway against her. The feature of the race which pleased everybody most was the perfectly clear field which view was maintained.

Great Interest in London.

LONDON, Oct. 4.—Interest among sportsmen is intense and great excitement has been displayed over the result of the race between the Columbia and Shamrock. During the evening the streets in the vicinity of the newspaper offices were crowded with an enthusiastic multitude awaiting the result. The fact that the Shamrock was leading at the expiration of the time limit created unbounded enthusiasm.

German Interest Raised.

BERLIN, Oct. 4.—The rate of discount of the Imperial bank of Germany has been raised from 5 to 6 per cent.

HOW TO STOP WORRYING.

There Is a Sure Way if You Will Only Make Yourself Unite to It.
